A. I have not, and I should not like even to suggest such a change, because to frame a law or to criticise a law presumes a knowledge of the principles of government greater than I aspire to. I merely say that such a law as would result in bringing harmony into all parts of the Army would be most desirable. Under our democratic form of government it does seem a little hard when troops, having been away in a difficult service, exposed to hardships and discomforts, and coming to an arsenal, find that they cannot enter it without permission of a junior officer in charge. It tends to create discontent when they find a captain or lieutenant living in a fine mansion, with all the comforts and elegance of a gentleman, while the colonel or major in command of the troops in the same Army must sleep out under the fence, it may be. If a regiment of troops is quartered in the vicinity of an arsenal the colonel will take a shanty or quarters in rough barracks, while the captain or lieutenant of ordnance lives in an elegant mansion, with gardens and hot-houses all around him. I say that it naturally produces discontent in a democratic country like ours.

Q. Do you think anything substantial is to be gained by confining these staff officers to special duty in their corps for a great length of time?

A. No, sir; they should go back and serve with the troops of the line a fair proportion of their period of service.

Q. How would you regard a provision of law requiring every officer in the Engineer or Ordnance Corps below the grade of major or lieutenant-colonel to serve at least two out of every four years with the troops?

A. I think every officer should serve with troops four years before he is eligible to detail in any of the staff corps, and that having remained on staff duty for four years, he should then return to the line and serve four years more before becoming re-eligible for staff duty of a higher grade.

Q. Do you think the system of competitive examination for these staff positions would be an advantage?

A. I do, but if you subject them to competitive examination and then commission them, it would be very difficult to change them afterward. I want to repeat that I believe the officers of the Engineer and Ordnance Corps are well qualified for their respective positions. They are taken from the head of their classes at West Point. They are good scholars, but the difficulty is that they are put into these favored corps and begin directly to look down upon the rest of the Army. They themselves fail to acquire that practical experience with soldiers which every officer ought to have. They pass directly from the Academy into the Engineer or Ordnance Corps, and they never see troops except as a curiosity.

The opinions of these men, and such as they, must ultimately bring about a reorganization of the staff upon the principles indicated. We need an army capable of expansiveness, with officers trained to all the varied duties. It must needs be small, but it should be a perfect nucleus. We cannot give our officers the daily training and experience only to be acquired in handling a large standing army, as the Prussians do, but we can, even in our small force, vary the duties, studies, and responsibilities so as to fit the élite of our Army to any purpose required in a great war.

The number of officers in the Adjutant-General's Department is reduced one. At present there are sixteen officers there and we propose that there shall be fifteen, eight of them to be by detail. This matter of detail does not meet with the universal approval of officers, especially of the staff, because they desire that the staff shall be permanent, that officers shall go in there and stay all the days of their lives. It is, however, I believe the opinion of the majority of the best officers of the Army that a system of detail into the staff would be most advantageous both to the staff and to the line. The committee therefore have provided for detail in several branches of the staff. In the Adjutant-General's office, the Inspector's, the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Ordnance Departments there are provisions in the bill for detailing officers.

The Quartermaster's Department is the next one I shall notice. The present number of officers in that department is fifty-seven. The bill provides for forty permanent and ten detailed officers in it, making fifty in all. That is a reduction of only seven officers in that department. In the Subsistence Department there are at present twenty-five officers. The bill provides for twenty-three, six of whom shall be detailed. That is a reduction in number of only two. Certainly these reductions furnish no ground of complaint.

The Medical Department of course cannot be filled by detail, for that is a scientific specialty. Neither can the Bureau of Military Justice be filled by detail. Lawyers and doctors are not men who obtain their knowledge or experience by training in the Army. So with the Engineer Department; that is a high scientific specialty, and no provision is made for detail there.

I will pass on to the Ordnance Department. It is the opinion of the committee that lieutenants could be detailed to advantage for that department, and provision is made that there shall be details to the number of sixteen, so that officers in the line of the Army may have an opportunity to obtain a knowledge of the structure and management of ordnance. The number of officers now in the Ordnance Department is fifty-seven, and the number proposed by the bill is fifty-nine, sixteen of whom are to be detailed. It is believed that the knowledge thus obtained will be of great value to the officers put on duty in this corps of the staff.

Now, as the House may not understand the operation of the system of details, let me remark that the entire expense and cost of these officers who may be detailed is saved by this system. There would be the regular number of officers in the line, in addition to those on the staff, if there were none detailed. The detailed officers get their pay in the line and get no more by being detailed on the staff. The House will therefore see that this is a measure of economy, saving exactly the pay and allowances of the number of officers detailed. Take for instance the Adjutant-General's Department; say that it is reduced one-half of the permanent officers, and that half of the number of officers are detailed. The House will see at once that if the officers were of equal rank the saving would be just one-half of the pay and expenses of the Adjutant-General's Department.

I now want to call the attention of the House for a short time to what will be saved by the proposed reduction. I have in my hand a statement of General Townsend as to the yearly cost of a regiment of each arm of the service, showing what would be saved by reducing the same. What I read now has no reference to the officers, but to the men alone. The cost of a regiment of cavalry is $842,000 per annum besides the pay of the officers. "The cost of a regiment of artillery is $490,252; the cost of a regiment of infantry is $397,141; both without the officers." So that the cost of three regiments, a regiment of cavalry, a regiment of artillery, and a regiment of infantry, would be $1,729,000, besides the cost as to the officers.

To show what is the comparative cost of officers and men, so that the House can make an estimate on this subject, I will read a statement of the Paymaster-General:

In reply to your inquiry of the 15th instant, I will state that the aggregate pay of officers for the last fiscal year is $4,086,000; the aggregate pay of enlisted men $4,080,000.

So that the House will see that the pay of officers is about equal to the pay of the men. No calculation can be made to show exactly the pay and all the allowances of the officers who would be discharged, for the reason that an annual increase is put upon the pay of every officer in the Army; and, until you can designate the particular men who are to go out of service, you cannot make a precise estimate as to what the reduction in the pay will be. The prices of forage and fuel also vary. But it may be said, taking it altogether, that the reduction in the pay and expenses of officers to the Government would about equal the reduction in the expense of the men.

I have made some calculations in connection with this subject; but these calculations do not include the amount of forage and fuel allowed to officers. This is a matter that is somewhat at sea. The prices of fuel and forage vary in different places. The Paymaster-General states that the average cost of fuel, quarters, and forage is $110 a year for each officer. I call the attention of the House to this calculation of the reduction made by the bill, not including forage and fuel and not including the increased percentage of pay, because no man can tell what that would be unless he could designate the particular officers who would be mustered out.

Summary of saving by the proposed reduction of the Army.

	Expense under existing law.	Expense by provision of bill.	Reductions.
Majors, adjutants, quartermasters, and company wagoners	$415,560	$109,864	$305,696
Adjutant-General's Department	87,348	27,900	59,448
Inspector-General's Department	42,492	15,380	27,112
Bureau of Military Justice	34,192	14,456	19,736
Quartermaster-General's Department	279,924	148,024	131,900
Subsistence Department	116,548	67,986	48,562
Medical Department	726,600	148,684	177,916
Pay Department	258,308	134,092	124,216
Ordnance Department	159,036	69,240	89,796
Annual cost of one regiment of cavalry	842,200	None.	842,200
Annual cost of one regiment of artillery	490,250	None.	490,250
Annual cost of five regiments of infantry	1,985,700	None.	1,985,700
Total	5,438,158	1,135,626	4,302,532

To this is to be added the pay of the officers of the regiments abolished.

One regiment cavalry	$75,800
One regiment artillery	97,400
Five regiments infantry	298,000
Total	471,200

This sum covers only the pay at the lowest rate of these officers and none of their increase or allowances, whichwould make it at least one-fourth more, or about $600,000 in all. To this is to be added the cost of recruiting five thousand men every year, which would be $100,000 more. In addition to this there is the forage and fuel to which these officers would be entitled. Thus the House will see that the saving which will accrue to the Government from this reduction will be in the neighborhood of $5,000,000.

This, I believe, covers the amount of saving in the reduction of officers. In addition to that, let me call the attention of the House to the provision in the bill that the number of contract surgeons shall be limited to seventy-five. At present there are one hundred and seventy-three. The number of surgeons in the Army is one hundred and fifty-five, the bill proposes to increase the number of these to two hundred and nine; and to limit the number of contract surgeons to seventy-five, so that the whole force in the Medical Department, if this bill is carried out, will be two hundred and eighty-four, while at present it is three hundred and twenty-eight. In view of the large reduction in the number of posts that will follow the reduction and consolidation of the Army, the West drawing upon the East and South as a necessary result of the legislation of Congress, the number of surgeons will not need to be so great as it has been heretofore. In that respect there will be a considerable saving.

In connection with the Pay Department a new provision has been inserted, and one that meets the decided hostility, I may say, of all the officers of the Pay Department. In the first place they are opposed to a reduction of the Pay Department, but desire an increase. There are now in that department three colonels and forty-four majors. The bill proposes to cut the number of paymasters down to one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, and thirty-two majors, making a force of thirty-four instead of forty-seven. In addition to that there is a provision that where it is possible the troops shall be paid by drafts upon the Treasury, as pensioners are now paid. Under the new practice of the Government which has prevailed within the last few years in the payment of pensioners, a very large number of them have been paid by draft with the greatest facility. The amount paid for pensions during the last year was $29,185,289; the number of pensioners is 238,411, who are paid by a not very much greater number of pension agents than the paymasters of the Army. The total cost to the Government of paying these pensioners is $462,000; yet it is found that in order to pay 30,000 soldiers it costs over $320,000, almost as much as it does to pay all the 238,000 pensioners. Now it has been thought that wherever our Army is in places where drafts can be used, drafts can be made out in accordance with the pay-rolls, can be sent to the soldiers and cashed very readily. This subject of paying the troops has had the careful consideration of our committee. The very same objection, it seems to me, might be raised to the payment of individuals by drafts that would be raised to the payment of soldiers in that way. At present a large number of our soldiers are within reach of moneyed institutions. There are but one hundred and seventy-five posts where soldiers are found, while there are 238,000 pensioners scattered in different places all over the country; and every one of these must have a separate certificate of pay mailed to him. So far as this part of the business is concerned the advantage is in favor of paying the Army by drafts.

Now, why cannot it be carried out practically in the Army as in private life, so that soldiers shall be paid as pensioners? Each man gets his certificate, and everywhere through the country it is found these drafts are considered to be just as good as "greenbacks," as good as bank-notes, as good as the ordinary currency of the country. They pass in stores and everywhere else at par. This is the universal testimony. Some of the officers of the Army have expressed the decided opinion that in many instances the pay of the soldiers could be made in this manner.

Soldiers, it is true, are under command. It is true they do not have the liberty to go and come to and fro as others do, but these men have officers whose duty it is to care for them and who can look to their interests. If they need to have their drafts cashed it can be done by the help of the officers easily. I see no difficulty in the way worthy of note. It seems to me these objections in nine cases out of ten are imaginary. In many cases it will be found the Army is stationed in the neighborhood of cities, railroads, or rivers, and certainly in the neighborhood of business men. So much for that. It may be considered to be a defect in the bill, but it is submitted to the judgment of the House with the belief that it will work well in a large number of cases. The bill provides that this method of pay is to be adopted at the discretion of the Secretary of War.

In looking at all the aspects of the Pay Department I cannot but ask myself, Why does it cost less than two dollars a head to pay scattered pensioners and more than twelve dollars a head to pay grouped soldiers? The soldiers are to be found in less than two hundred posts, the pensioners are everywhere. At first glance it would seem that it would be much easier to pay soldiers by draft by mail than citizens. I have here a table prepared by the Commissioner of Pensions at my request, which shows the facts as to the payment of pensions. I submit it for the consideration of the House:

Statement of the amount disbursed at each agency for paying pensions, number of pensioners on the rolls June 30, 1873, number of vouchers paid at each agency during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, with the compensation accruing to each agent under acts of Congress.

Town and State.	Amount disbursed.	Number of pensioners on roll June 30, 1873.	Number vouchers paid.	Compensation.
				Acts July 17, 1862, June 30, 1864.	Fees, act July 8, 1870.	Total compensation.
Little Rock, Arkansas	$129,970 51	747	2,351	$2,750 00	$705 40	$3,455 40
Hartford, Connecticut	441,801 22	3,740	14,542	4,000 00	4,362 70	8,362 70
San Francisco, California	69,095 88	532	1,355	1,872 20	406 48	2,278 68
Washington, District of Columbia	791,504 21	4,143	18,588	4,000 00	5,576 30	9,576 30
Wilmington, Delaware	72,545 61	574	2,283	1,908 24	684 86	2,593 10
Indianapolis, Indiana	1,216,103 50	10,257	43,261	4,000 00	12,978 25	16,978 25
Madison, Indiana	416,880 26	3,316	12,750	4,000 00	3,825 00	7,825 00
Fort Wayne, Indiana	452,453 71	3,671	12,889	4,000 00	3,866 80	7,866 80
Springfield, Illinois	573,228 45	4,526	17,024	4,000 00	5,107 23	9,107 23
Chicago, Illinois	779,565 32	6,435	23,981	4,000 00	7,194 30	11,194 30
Salem, Illinois	794,964 27	6,195	17,289	4,000 00	5,186 80	9,186 80
Quincy, Illinois	437,070 06	3,332	11,933	4,000 00	3,580 00	7,580 00
Des Moines, Iowa	309,270 96	2,358	8,111	3,750 00	2,433 30	6,183 30
Fairfield, Iowa	351,297 46	2,822	10,008	3,750 00	3,002 40	6,752 40
Marion, Iowa	370,347 68	2,936	10,880	4,000 00	3,263 90	7,263 90
Louisville, Kentucky	562,448 32	4,119	15,183	4,000 00	4,554 70	8,554 70
Lexington, Kentucky	379,379 65	2,583	9,874	4,000 00	2,962 00	6,962 00
Topeka, Kansas	268,061 30	1,974	7,293	3,500 00	2,187 90	5,687 90
New Orleans, Louisiana	122,878 83	792	2,150	2,750 00	645 00	3,395 00
Augusta, Maine	417,212 01	3,552	12,724	4,000 00	3,817 20	7,817 20
Portland, Maine	469,740 77	3,983	15,542	4,000 00	4,662 60	8,662 60
Bangor, Maine	359,050 84	3,325	12,536	4,000 00	3,760 90	7,760 90
Boston, Massachusetts	1,466,214 66	13,310	47,083	4,000 00	14,124 80	18,124 80
Baltimore, Maryland	396,689 88	3,111	11,733	4,000 00	3,519 90	7,519 90
Vicksburgh, Mississippi	85,039 49	523	3,150	2,139 11	944 95	3,584 06
Saint Louis, Missouri	599,623 37	4,735	15,281	4,000 00	4,584 20	8,584 20
Macon, Missouri	408,455 07	2,846	9,958	4,000 00	2,987 50	6,987 50
Detroit, Michigan	799,591 37	8,686	32,749	4,000 00	9,824 70	13,824 70
Grand Rapids, Michigan	234,289 88	1,881	7,427	3,250 00	2,228 30	5,478 30
Saint Paul, Minnesota	278,482 88	2,228	7,620	3,500 00	2,286 10	5,786 10
Concord, New Hampshire	431,182 32	3,865	14,492	4,000 00	4,347 60	8,347 60
Portsmouth, New Hampshire	129,429 53	1,150	4,195	2,750 00	1,258 50	4,008 50
Albany, New York	1,498,809 24	12,572	47,098	4,000 00	14,129 45	18,129 45
Canandaigua, New York	1,377,174 64	11,908	44,417	4,000 00	13,325 10	17,325 10
New York, New York	1,075,739 32	8,686	32,281	4,000 00	9,684 27	13,684 27
Brooklyn, New York	393,279 64	3,113	11,382	4,000 00	3,414 60	7,414 60
Trenton, New Jersey	605,965 99	4,986	18,309	4,000 00	5,492 90	9,492 90
Raleigh, North Carolina	133,924 87	867	2,569	2,750 00	770 70	3,520 70
Omaha, Nebraska	53,108 21	368	1,339	1,031 34	401 70	1,433 04
Santa Fé, New Mexico	6,999 13	48	146	139 94	43 73	183 67
Columbus, Ohio	831,135 47	6,765	26,450	4,000 00	7,935 00	11,935 00
Cincinnati, Ohio	1,253,134 11	10,104	36,148	4,000 00	10,844 40	14,844 40
Cleveland, Ohio	759,475 54	6,246	22,722	4,000 00	6,816 60	10,816 60
Oregon City, Oregon	13,395 95	102	329	264 34	98 79	363 13
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, (invalids)	1,149,020 94	10,710	40,905	4,000 00	12,271 70	16,271 70
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, (widows)	1,336,447 81	10,252	38,814	4,000 00	11,644 00	15,644 00
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania	908,076 01	7,406	25,885	4,000 00	7,765 40	11,765 40
Providence, Rhode Island	160,419 87	1,350	4,856	3,000 00	1,456 80	4,456 80
Nashville, Tennessee	288,653 48	2,134	6,672	3,500 00	2,001 58	5,501 58
Knoxville, Tennessee	454,319 30	4,181	11,302	4,000 00	3,390 60	7,390 60
Montpelier, Vermont	283,601 00	2,529	9,657	3,500 00	2,897 00	6,397 00
Burlington, Vermont	235,471 57	2,068	8,032	3,250 00	2,409 60	5,659 60
Richmond, Virginia	276,893 20	2,076	7,457	3,500 00	2,237 10	5,737 10
Wheeling, West Virginia	510,412 49	4,067	15,671	4,000 00	4,701 30	8,701 30
Madison, Wisconsin	334,749 71	2,581	10,815	3,750 00	3,244 60	6,994 60
Milwaukee, Wisconsin	458,416 47	3,661	13,287	4,000 00	3,986 10	7,986 10
La Crosse, Wisconsin	167,002 29	1,324	4,626	3,000 00	1,387 80	4,387 80
Vancouver, Washington Territory	5,854 02	60	97	114 21	29 10	143 31
Total	29,185,289 62	238,411	877,501	199,719 38	263,250 49	462,969 87

MAY 14, 1874.

JOSEPH LOCKEY,
Acting Commissioner of Pensions.

But, again, why shall we increase the Pay Department if we diminish the Army? At present, with thirty thousand men we have forty-two paymasters. Cannot one paymaster, with the help of a clerk, pay a thousand men six times a year? The question itself is almost ridiculous. But under the reduction he will not have six hundred men to pay. It seems preposterous to increase the number of paymasters and diminish the Army. To say nothing of the expense, it is beyond belief that a paymaster with such duties to perform can be employed his full time.

I believe I have gone over the material provisions of the bill. If I have omitted anything material it has not been my intention to do so.

I have here a statement of the entire number of officers in each staff corps of the Army, and I will read for the information of the House the totals of the various staff corps, so the House may see the condition of our staff corps at a glance.

The Adjutant-General's Department in 1860 had fourteen officers, in 1866 thirty officers, in 1874 sixteen officers. We propose only to cut that down one, a part being detailed. In the Inspector-General's Department in 1860 there were two officers, in 1866 nine, and now there are eight. We propose to make the number five. In the Judge Advocate General's Department there was one officer in 1830, in 1836 twelve, and now we propose to cut it down to five. The signal service remains as it is. In the Quartermaster's Department there were forty-four in 1860, ninety-two in 1865, and there are now sixty-six officers. The bill proposes to cut it down to fifty, ten to be detailed. The Subsistence Department in 1860 had twelve officers, twenty-nine in 1866, and at present has twenty-five. The committee propose to cut that down to twenty-three, six of whom shall be detailed. The Medical Department in 1860 had one hundred and ten, in 1866 two hundred and twenty-two, and now has one hundred and fifty-five, with one hundred and seventy-three contract surgeons in addition. It is proposed to increase that department by making the number two hundred and nine, and reducing the contract surgeons to seventy-five. The Corps of Engineers had in 1860 forty-eight officers, in 1866 one hundred and five, and has now one hundred and four. That is left intact. The Ordnance Department had in 1860 fifty-nine, in 1866 seventy-seven, and has now fifty-seven. It is proposed to cut that down to forty-three permanent officers and sixteen detailed, making the whole number in that corps fifty-nine, which does not reduce it at all in the number of officers in the service.

That will give the House a bird's-eye view of the condition in 1860, 1866, and 1874. The whole number of officers in the staff corps in 1860 was three hundred and sixty-nine, in 1866, six hundred and thirty-seven, and is at present four hundred and eighty-nine. It is proposed to make it four hundred and sixty-five permanent officers. So no complaint can be made on that score. Indeed I believe a larger number of officers could be detailed to some of the departments than is proposed by the provisions of the bill. If there were, it would be a saving of just that much money. The House must bear all the time in mind about this matter of detail that we have over two hundred and fifty supernumerary officers who will have no duty to perform if the provisions of the bill are carried out unless put by detail into the staff, where they can work efficiently and regularly and with great advantage to themselves and the service.

I submit with my remarks a table prepared by the Adjutant-General as to the numbers of staff officers at different dates:

DECEMBER 31, 1860.

Corps.	Brigadier-general.	Colonel.	Lieutenant-colonel.	Major.	Captain.	Store-keeper	First lieutenant.	Second lieutenant.	Total.
Adjutant-General's Department	....	1	1	4	8	....	....	....	14
Inspector-General's Department	....	2	....	.....	.....	....	....	....	2
Judge Advocate	....	....	....	1	.....	....	....	....	1
Signal Officer	....	....	....	1	.....	....	....	....	1
Quartermaster's Department	1	2	2	4	28	7	....	....	44
Subsistence Department	....	1	1	2	8	....	....	....	12
Medical Department	....	1	....	30	49	....	35	....	115
Pay Department	....	1	2	25	.....	....	....	....	28
Corps of Engineers	....	1	2	4	16	....	12	13	48
Topographical Engineers	....	1	1	4	19	....	10	10	45
Ordnance Department	....	1	1	4	17	15	12	9	59
Aggregate	1	11	10	79	145	22	69	32	369

JULY 28, 1866.

Adjutant-General's Department*	1	2	4	a 13	.....	....	....	....	20
Inspector-General's Department*	....	b 4	3	2	.....	....	....	....	9
Bureau of Military Justice	1	1	....	c 10	.....	....	....	....	12
Chief of staff to General	a 1	....	....	.....	.....	....	....	....	1
Signal Officer	....	1	....	.....	.....	....	....	....	1
Quartermaster's Department*	1	e 6	e 10	e 15	e 44	16	....	....	92
Subsistence Department*	1	2	2	8	16	....	....	....	29
Medical Department*	1	1	f 5	60	f 70	5	f 80	....	222
Pay Department*	g 1	2	2	60	.....	....	....	....	65
Corps of Engineers*	h 1	6	12	24	30	....	26	10	109
Ordnance Department*	1	3	4	10	20	13	16	10	77
Aggregate	9	28	42	202	180	34	122	20	637

APRIL 20, 1874.

Adjutant-General's Department	1	1	3	a 11	.....	....	....	....	16
Inspector-General's Department	....	b 5	1	2	.....	....	....	....	8
Bureau of Military Justice	1	1	....	c 8	.....	....	....	....	10
Signal Officer	....	1	....	.....	.....	....	....	....	1
Quartermaster's Department	1	e 5	e 8	e 14	29	9	....	....	66
Subsistence Department	....	2	2	8	13	....	....	....	25
Medical Department	1	1	f 3	52	94	4	....	....	155
Pay Department	....	g 3	....	44	.....	....	....	....	47
Corps of Engineers	1	6	12	24	30	....	26	5	104
Ordnance Department	1	2	2	8	15	11	11	7	*57
Aggregate	6	27	31	171	181	24	37	12	489

NOTES.—Amendments to the act of July 28, 1866.

* Section 6, act March 3, 1869, placed a bar on all new appointments and all promotions in the Adjutant-General's, Inspector-General's, Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Medical, and Pay Departments, Corps of Engineers, and Ordnance Department, but by subsequent legislation these restrictions have been modified, as will appear below.

a The act of March 3, 1873, authorized the appointment of an assistant adjutant-general with the rank of major.

b The act of June 8, 1872, authorized the appointment of an Inspector-General, with the rank of colonel, provided that no promotion be made until the number of colonels is reduced below four.

c The act of April 10, 1869, fixed the number of judge-advocates at eight.

d The act of April 3, 1869, abolished the office of chief of staff to the General.

e Section 13, act July 28, 1866, provided that as vacancies occur in the grades of major and captain in the Quartermaster's Department no appointment to fill the same shall be made until the number of majors shall be reduced to twelve and the number of captains to thirty.

By the act of March 3, 1871, Major James Belger, quartermaster, was restored to service, and by the act of June 3, 1872, two colonels, five lieutenant-colonels, and three majors were added to the number of officers of said grades in the Quartermaster's Department, these being the grades the officers so appointed would have held had the vacancies created by the act of July 28, 1866, been filled by promotion according to seniority.

f The act of March 12, 1872, authorized the appointment of a Chief Medical Purveyor with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Assistant surgeons have the rank, pay, &c., of lieutenant for the first three years' service, and of captain after three years' service. [Section 17, act July 28, 1866; section 5, act March 2, 1867.] All the assistant surgeons now in service have attained the rank of captain.

g The act of June 4, 1872, authorized the appointment of a Paymaster-General with the rank of colonel, (grade of brigadier-general abolished.)

h By the act of June 10, 1872, so much of section 6, act March 3, 1869, as prohibits new appointments and promotions in the Corps of Engineers was repealed.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE. April 22, 1874.

It seems to me that out of so many officers a sufficient number of excellent ones can be obtained to fill up not only the permanent positions of the staff, but all details as they may be required.

We have now an excellent opportunity for the beginning of a reorganization of the staff. The large number of officers off duty will amply supply the needs. Those opportunities so long denied may now be enjoyed by officers of the line to change the old routine of their service for the more agreeable and less exposed duties of the staff.

This bill then provides for a reduction of seven regiments, five thousand men, beside officers of the line and staff, about three hundred in number. It looks to two new features of reorganization: that of dividing the staff into permanent and detailed officers, and that of paying the troops in part by drafts. It is submitted that these are not mere innovations, but are the result of experience, and are steps of progress worthy to be taken.

I have only a word further to say about what I propose to do in the conduct and management of the bill. I desire to call the previous question, and will do so unless some gentleman indicates that he desires to make a speech.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I desire to submit a few remarks.

Mr. COBURN. I understood that some members of the committee desired to be heard.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if his bill provides that when an officer of the Army is detailed to duty in civil life he ceases to hold position in the Army or not?

Mr. COBURN. There is nothing in the bill on that subject except in this: If the gentleman will look at the twentieth section of the bill as reported he will see that where officers are assigned to colleges, they are not detailed but given leave of absence, which gives them only the pay of officers on leave of absence.

Mr. SPEER. Does not the gentleman think that the detailing of officers to civil life and allowing them to retain their positions and pay in the Army a great abuse?

Mr. COBURN. The testimony of the Adjutant-General was to the effect that it was not an advisable system; but whether it is an abuse or not, it is a matter of law; and the committee propose to change the law in that respect, so that when officers are thus detailed they can get the pay only of officers on leave of absence. I will say before I yield the floor that unless there be objection I will be glad to move the previous question this evening.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman whether this bill restores promotion in the staff of the Army or not?

Mr. COBURN. It does, in all branches; it opens them all to promotion.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the gentleman propose to take up the bill by sections?

Mr. COBURN. My disposition would be to consider it by sections, but at present I cannot say what I shall do in that regard.

Mr. RANDALL. My attention has been directed to the reduction in the Adjutant-General's Department, and I should like to have an opportunity of amending the section in regard to that department.

Mr. COBURN. Well, I will leave it an open question for the present.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Does this bill make any provision for promotion for subordinate officers in the Commissary Department?

Mr. COBURN. It does.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think that is right.

Mr. COBURN. I now yield the floor.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman who has just addressed the House with regard to the main features of this bill. If it were an original proposition before the House to-day to reduce the Army by organizations, I should feel myself compelled to oppose it for the reasons for which I opposed it when the Army appropriation bill limited the enlistments to twenty-five thousand men. But as you have provided for the payment of only twenty-five thousand men, and as the company organizations are already reduced to so small a limit that to reduce them to a less number would make the companies in all probability unserviceable to a great extent, I do not see that there is any alternative left to the House but to agree to the reduction of the Army by organizations.

The number of men since the last reduction of the Army to which a cavalry regiment is limited amounts to one thousand and thirteen, an artillery regiment to seven hundred and forty nine, and an infantry regiment to six hundred and five. Reducing the Army five thousand will necessarily reduce those companies one-sixth, so that if you did not reduce by organizations a cavalry company would number but seventy men, an artillery company but forty-three men, and an infantry company but fifty men. There are no company organizations belonging to any army among civilized nations as small as our companies here. Take the German army, for instance, and an infantry company there now numbers, in time of peace, one hundred and thirty-two men and three officers, and in time of war two hundred men and upward. Here you have with the same number of officers an infantry company reduced to forty men. The reduction of the Army has been and is one of the evils of legislation in this country. We have never had a fixed standard as to how many men a company shall consist of. It has always depended upon the caprice of Congress to determine whether a company should consist of one hundred or of fifty men or of even less than that number, and that has no doubt very much affected the morale and tone of our Army.

It is not contended, I imagine, that the same number of regiments ought to be maintained and that these company organizations should be still more reduced, because the maintaining of regiments does not give more men. According to the figures which I have prepared upon this subject, if you reduce the Army as proposed by this bill you will save $2,318,000 and you will dispense with two hundred and seventy-four officers. Now it is true that this will work hardship upon some classes of officers. But as you have already determined in the Army appropriation bill that you will not give them men to command, why should you retain them? I do not like the premises, but the conclusion seems inevitable if the saving of money at this time is the only thing to be considered.

What occasion to retain them, if you reduce the force they are to command? Many of these officers may be saved by consolidating the regiments. No doubt a great many of the young men now in the Army will take advantage of this opportunity to retire by resignation and take a year's pay, and enter other professions in life and follow other avocations. To show that it is not desirable to reduce the number of men in a company, I will read a short extract from a letter which I hold in my hand from a very distinguished officer of the Army who has carefully considered this matter. He says:

When I came in the service in 1854, there were fifteen regiments of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, with companies much fuller than now; I mean more men to the company. The Army was increased two regiments of cavalry and two regiments of infantry.

He therefore does not approve of reducing the number of men in a company; but if it must be, he would rather reduce the number of officers, hard as it will be upon very many meritorious officers. If the thing is inevitable, he would rather that the officers who remain in the service shall have more men to command than that these few men should be scattered among so many regiments. Besides, it is the opinion of the Secretary of War that if there is to be a reduction to the extent of five thousand men, the most advantageous way is to reduce the number of organizations.

I do not quite agree with the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN] who has just taken his seat, with regard to what he calls the specialties of the Army. He seems to indicate that men who are trained to a special profession become cramped and limited in their intellects.

Mr. COBURN. I beg leave to correct the gentleman; I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I am very glad if I misunderstood the gentleman on that subject. The specialties of the Army are places where in many instances officers, the most scientific and most intellectual, find places suited to their capacities and the country got the best service.

Mr. COBURN. The gentleman need not defend the Army from any aspersions I have cast upon it; I have said nothing of the kind. I said that the value of officers of the Army as well as other persons is largely promoted by variation of intellectual employment.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I accepted the gentleman's correction and was going on to show the necessity for these specialties in the Army, such as the Engineer and Ordnance Corps, which are branches of the service where preparations are made for war. Those corps embrace to a very great extent the scientific men of the Army. They are the men who prepare the munitions of war, who prepare our artillery and our cannon and perfect improvements in that branch of the service. It has never been found very judicious even in time of peace to reduce the number of men who are in those branches of our military service. And the Engineer Corps, which is not embraced in this bill, has already had the justice done to it which it is barely proposed to do in this bill.

It has been argued by some that the Artillery and Ordnance Corps could be combined. That experiment was tried from 1821 to 1832, I believe. The idea was then abandoned on the ground that it did not work to the best advantage of the service. We have at this time twenty arsenals scattered all over the country. To take charge of all those arsenals we have to-day but forty-three officers; one of them, who was chief of the Bureau of Ordnance has recently died. Those arsenals comprehend all branches of manufacture connected with the Ordnance Department of the Army, such as arms, ammunition, harness, gun-carriages, and things of that kind. They have in charge nearly $53,000,000 worth of property. Although the service actually requires that there should be two or more officers at each of these arsenals, at many of them there is but a single officer with many skilled mechanics under his charge and control. If you reduce this corps of the Army to the extent proposed by some, you will deprive some of the arsenals of some of these scientific and educated men. The experience and skill which were acquired before the war by ordnance officers contributed very largely to our success in the late rebellion. I have said that these twenty arsenals were scattered all over the country. I call attention to the following schedule, which will give a great deal of valuable information to members of this House and the country upon this subject:

Name and locality.	Officers on duty.	No. of enlisted men.	Character of the establishment.	Value of lands and buildings.	Value of ordnance stores.	Total value.	No. of hired workmen.
Alleghany arsenal, Pittsburgh, Pa.	Col. R. H. K. Whiteley and Lieut. O. E. Michaelis	30	Manufacture of leather-work, artillery ammunition and pyrotechny. Arsenal of deposit and repair.	$1,007,895 00	$2,064,589 36	$3,072,484 36	14
Augusta arsenal, Augusta, Ga.	Capt. R. M. Hill and Lieut. John E. Greer.	20	Manufacture of artillery carriages and implements: preparation of stores for issue. Arsenal of deposit.	242,450 00	187,916 99	430,366 99	4
Benicia arsenal, Benicia, Cal...	Maj. J. McAllister, Capt. J. Arnold, and Lieut. J. C. Clifford.	35	Designed as a large arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair for the Pacific coast.	514,673 00	2,064,858 53	2,579,531 53	45
Columbus arsenal, Columbus, O.	Maj. John McNutt.....	13	Arsenal of deposit.....	442,943 58	1,411,317 31	1,854,260 89	8
Detroit arsenal, Dearbornville, Mich.	Maj. J. W. Todd.....	8	Arsenal of deposit.....	142,950 00	132,891 19	275,841 19	2
Fortress Monroe arsenal, Old Point Comfort, Va.	Maj. T. G. Baylor, and Capt. F. H. Parker.	13	Experimental artillery firing: manufacture of iron sea-coast carriages. Arsenal of deposit and repair.	102,357 92	890,445 51	992,803 43	152
Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.	Maj. T. J. Treadwell, Lieut. F. H. Phipps, Lieut. Wm. Prince, and Lieut. M. L. Poland.	30	Manufacture of small-arm ammunition, artillery ammunition and pyrotechny, and fabrication of Woodbridge gun; experimental small-arm firing. Arsenal of deposit,	713,948 00	2,505,538 95	3,219,486 95	206
Indianapolis arsenal, Indianapolis, Ind.	Capt. A. R. Buffington.....	13	Arsenal of deposit.....	440,969 50	450,388 24	891,357 74	3
Kennebec arsenal, Augusta, Me.	Capt. J. M. Whittemore.....	8	Arsenal of deposit	155,961 00	733,896 91	889,857 91	0
Leavenworth arsenal, Leavenworth, Kan.	Capt. A. Mordecai, and Lieut. A. L. Varney.	20	Manufacture of leather-work. Arsenal of deposit and repair.	125,250 00	862,377 90	987,627 90	8
National armory, Springfield, Mass.	Maj. J. G. Benton, Capt. J. R. Edie, Lieut. Geo. W. McKee, Lieut. Geo. D. Ramsay, jr., and Lieut. H. Metcalfe.	.....	Manufacture of small arms and ammunition; experimental firing. Fabrication of Hitchcock gun. Storage.	1,360,410 00	6,558,730 56	7,919,140 56	443
Rock Island arsenal, Rock Island, Ill.	Capt. D. W. Flagler, Capt. J. P. Farley, Lieut. E. M. Wright, Lieut. Charles Shaler, jr.	70	Designed as a large arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair for the Mississippi Valley.	4,639,850 00	900,468 09	5,540,318 09	294
Saint Louis arsenal, Jefferson Barracks, Mo.	Capt. L. S. Babbitt.....	30	Powder depot and limited storage.....	702,400 00	2,139,065 78	2,841,465 78	20
San Antonio arsenal, San Antonio, Tex.	Capt. Clifton Comly.....	.....	Arsenal of deposit and repair for service on Texan frontier.	85,098 00	173,385 78	258,483 78	25
Vancouver arsenal, Vancouver, Wash. Ter.	Lieut. John A. Kress.....	14	Arsenal of deposit for territory of the Northwest.	31,400 00	227,326 65	258 726 65	1
Washington arsenal, Washington, D. C.	Lieut.-Col. F. D. Callender, Lieut. C. E. Dutton.	43	Manufacture of artillery carriages and implements, and artillery ammunition. Arsenal of deposit and repair.	618,900 00	2,428,678 93	3,047,578 93	20
Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y.	Col. P. V. Hagner, Capt. James H. Rollins, Lieut. John Pitman.	35	Manufacture of artillery carriages and implements, and artillery ammunition. also leather-work. Arsenal of deposit and repair.	991,097 00	7,020,854 41	8,011,951 41	202
Watertown arsenal, Watertown, Mass.	Lieut.-Col. T T. S. Laidley, Capt. W. A. Marye, Lieut. C. Bryant.	30	Manufacture of iron sea-coast carriages. Arsenal of deposit and repair.	528,986 63	2,695,939 97	3,224,926 60	137
New York agency and arsenal, New York, N. Y.	Maj. Silas Crispin, Lieut. John G. Butler.	.....	Purchasing agency of the department; selling condemned and unsuitable ordnance stores; fabrication of Moffatt, Satcliffe and Thompson breech-loading guns. Arsenal of deposit.	86,416 41	5,535,158 57	5,621,574 98	72
Ordnance office, Washington, D. C.	Gen. A. B. Dyer, Chief of Ordnance, Maj. S. V. Benét, and Capt. S. C. Lyford.	12	Headquarters Ordnance Department U. S. Army.	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total.....	.....	424	.....	12,933,956 04	38,983,829 63	51,917,785 67	1,656

The Ordnance Department, besides the duties assigned to it by law, under the Secretary of War, in the manufacture and procurement otherwise of all ordnance and ordnance stores for the United States, to be held as reserves for the wants of existing and probable wants of future armies, the providing of armaments and material for sea-coast defenses, and material for arming and equipping the militia, the control of the Government arsenals, armories, and ordnance depots, and all experimental duties connected with war material, is also charged with the administration service in supplying warlike stores for all the land forces of the United States, either in time of war or peace. It is also charged with the mounting of the heavy armaments of our sea-coast defenses, in which duty several of the officers of the department are now engaged

I wish now, and I desire to do it with all kindness, but I must do it very emphatically, to say that I antagonize the provisions of this bill, so far as it relates to the Pay Department. It proposes to reduce the Pay Department to thirty officers, there now being but forty-four, some of these sick, and the corps at this time closed to promotion. There were sixty officers in that department when the prohibition was introduced in reference to promotions in the staff corps of the Army. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] bases his argument for this reduction mainly upon the idea that the pensioners are paid by checks, which is cheaply done, and therefore the soldiers may be paid in the same way. In my judgment no more demoralizing feature could be introduced into the Army than to attempt to pay the men by checks. And why? Because if you pay them by checks, when they are stationed in the neighborhood of cities and places where there are banks, you may injure the soldier in two ways; first, the commanding officer may deprive him of the opportunity of going to the bank and drawing the money on the check, for he has the check and is the one to draw the money on it. He must present the check to the bank. When he goes there with the check he may be compelled to be identified. He indorses his name on the check; but the bank officer says, "Who are you?" He has to be identified. Then when he has obtained his money another difficulty arises. In this view the system proposed may be offering a reward either for desertion or for drunkenness and insubordination. If a man is tired of the service and wants to desert, he thinks when he gets his money "now is the chance." With that money he perhaps goes to some place where he spends it partly in drink and the remainder is probably stolen from him. Then he is arrested and court-martialed for drunkenness, and an additional expense is entailed upon the Army for detailing officers to try this man and punish him, besides the probability of being deprived of his service.

If a soldier is entitled to his pay at all, he is entitled to receive it in the currency of the country. He is entitled to have that sort of money which you pay to everybody else. He ought not to be compelled to receive a check which may be unserviceable to him. Besides what is paid to a pensioner is a gratuity, while what is paid to a soldier is a debt.

But, Mr. Speaker, the argument fails in force when you apply it to another branch of the service—the Navy. I find that in the Navy there are seventy-four paymasters holding higher rank than these officers in the Army. There are fifteen paymasters in the Navy holding rank equal to that of colonel, and there is one Paymaster-General who holds a rank equal to that of a brigadier-general. By this bill you reduce the pay force to thirty, and you say that the chief of the Pay Department shall be but a colonel; while in the co-ordinate branch of the service you provide for fifteen paymasters having rank equal to that of colonels, and one chief with the rank of commodore. Besides, you have in the Navy Department fifteen paymasters who hold rank equal to that of lieutenant-colonel; fifty who hold rank equal to that of major; twenty-three holding rank equal to that of captain, and twenty-one holding rank equal to that of first lieutenant.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it would be just as appropriate to pay the men engaged in the naval service with checks as to pay those in the Army in that way; and those in the naval service could perhaps use the checks to better advantage. This undertaking to save a few dollars by paying the soldiers with checks is not an act of justice. If it is an act of justice to the soldier it ought to be so to the sailor. There is no sort of analogy between a pensioner who never can go into the service again and a soldier who may be upon the remote border of our country.

The bill, so far as it relates to the Pay Department, proposes to degrade that department as compared with the Pay Department of the Navy. When people are discussing the legislation of Congress we are often the subject of very just criticism because of the discrimination made between these two branches of our service.

But there is another objection, Mr. Speaker, to a reduction of the pay force. If you reduce the Army five thousand men you do not reduce the posts. The question is not so much the time that it takes to pay the men as the time that it takes to reach the places where the men are to be paid.

This matter of reducing posts in the Army has been fully discussed by officers of the Army. The General of the Army says that you cannot at this time reduce the posts of the Army. These posts are scattered along the frontier and along the coast, extending away up into Alaska. A paymaster has to go to Alaska once every two months to make payment to two companies of troops—probably one hundred men. Thus it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that the thing to be considered is not the number of men to be paid, but the distance to be traveled, and the amount of work to be done. If you reduce the number of paymasters to thirty, you virtually provide that some of the troops shall not be paid every two months; and, as a gentleman near me suggests, regularity is very desirable to keep troops contented and satisfied.

I have here and will publish a statement showing the number of paymasters, where they are, and the number of miles they have to travel in making each payment. In some instances these men are occupied over a month in making the journey:

Statement showing posts visited, miles traveled, and time consumed by each officer of the Pay Department, United States Army, in making the regular bi-monthly payments to troops.

Rank.	Name and grade.	Station.	Division or department.	Ports visited.	Miles traveled.	Time consumed.
						Days.
Colonel..	*N. W. Brown, assistant paymaster-general.	New York City.....	Division of the Atlantic.	West Point, N. Y.; David's Island, N. Y. H.; Forts Monroe, (Va.;) McHenry, and Foote, (Md.;) Carlisle barracks, Alleghany, and Frankford arsenals, Penn.	1,559	8
Major....	Henry Prince, paymaster.	New York City.....		Forts Trumbull, (Conn.;) Adams, (R. I.;) Warren, Independence, (Mass.;) Preble, (Me.;) Watertown, (Mass.,) Kennebec, (Me.,) Watervliet, (N. Y.) arsenals; Plattsburgh barracks, N. Y.	1,172	18
Do...	Henry C. Pratt, paym'ter.	Detroit, Mich.....		Forts Wayne, Gratiot, (Mich.;) Porter, Niagara, and Ontario, (N. Y.;) Madison Barracks, (N. Y.,) Columbus, (O.,) and Indianapolis, (Ind.,) arsenals.	1,338	11
Do...	P. P. G. Hall, paymaster.	New York City.....		Forts Columbus, Wood, Hamilton, and Wadsworth, and Willet's Point, New York Harbor.	82	4
Colonel..	*D. McClure, ass. pay. gen.	Louisville, Ky.....	Department of the South.	Local payments.
Major....	W. B. Rochester, paym'r.	Louisville, Ky.....		Newport barracks, Frankfort, Ky	348	3
Do...	H. B. Reese, paymaster...	Louisville, Ky.....		Lebanon, Lancaster, Ky.; Nashville, Humboldt, Chattanooga, Tenn., Huntsville, Ala.; Atlanta, Savannah, Ga.; Saint Augustine, Fla.	2,172	31
Do...	J. R. Mears, paymaster...	Charleston, S. C.....		Raleigh, Charlotte, Forts Macon and Johnston, N. C.; Columbia, Yorkville, Newberry, S. C.; Augusta arsenal, Ga.	970	13
Do...	*Geo. L. Febiger, paym'ter.	New Orleans, La....	Department of the Gulf.	Jackson, Miss.; Little Rock, Ark.; Mount Vernon arsenal, Ala.; Barrancas barracks, Fla.; Saint Martinsville, La.	2,160	18
Do...	W. H. Johnston, paym'ter	New Orleans, La....		Baton Rouge, Colfax, La.; Key West, Fla	2,544	20
Do...	* W. R. Gibson, paymaster.	San Antonio, Texas.	Department of Texas.	Local payments.
Do...	E. D. Judd, paymaster....	San Antonio, Texas.		‡ Austin, Forts Richardson, Griffin, (Texas,) Sill, and Gibson, (Ind. T.)..	2,250	34
Do...	G. E. Glenn, paymaster...	San Antonio, Texas.		‡ Forts Clark, Duncan, Concho, and McKavett, camp near Kerrville, Camp on the Sabinal, Texas.	760	32
Do...	J. W. Nicholls, paymaster.	Fort Brown, Texas..		Edinburgh, Roma, Ringgold barracks, King's Ranche, F't McIntosh, (Tex.)	480	22
Do...	W. P. Gould, paymaster..	Fort Stockton, Texas		Forts Davis, Quitman, and Bliss, Texas	600	11
Do...	* F. E. Hunt, paymaster...	Leavenworth, Kan..	Department of the Missouri.	Local payments.
Do...	J. B. M. Potter, paymaster.	Santa Fé, N. Mex..		Forts Union and Bascom, New Mexico	603	5
Do...	V. C. Hanna, paymaster...	Chicago Illinois....		Rock Island arsenal, Illinois, Saint Louis, Jefferson barracks, Mo.....	406	7
Do...	C. M. Terrell, paymaster...	Leavenworth, Kan..		Forts Larned and Dodge, Kansas, Camp Supply, Ind. T., stations along line of Atchison, Topeka, and Sante Fé Railroad to Grenada.	1,024	14
Do...	E. H. Brooks, paymaster..	Leavenworth, Kan..		Forts Riley, Hays, Wallace, Kansas, Lyon, and Garland, Colo., Pueblo, Colo., stations along line of Kansas Pacific Railroad to Denver, Colo.	1,628	17
Do...	A. B. Carey, paymaster....	Santa Fé, N. M.....		§ Forts Craig, McRae, Bayard, Cummings, Tulerosa, Selden, and Stanton, New Mexico.	1,776	20
Do...	F. Bridgman, paymaster..	Santa Fé, N. M.....		§ Fort Wingate, New Mexico	366	8
Do...	* A. H. Seward, paymaster.	Saint Paul, Minn....	Department of Dakota.	Local payments.
Do...	Rodney Smith, paymaster..	Saint Paul, Minn....		Forts Snelling, Ripley, (Minnesota,) Wadsworth, Abercrombie, Seward, Totten, and Pembina, Dakota Territory.	1,612	20
Do...	R. C. Walker, paymaster..	Helena, Mont. Ter...		Forts Ellis, Shaw, and Benton, Camp Baker, Montana Territory.....	586	23
Do...	W. Smith, paymaster.....	Saint Paul, Minn ...		Forts Rice, A. Lincoln, Stevenson, and Buford, Camp Hancock, Bismarck, Dakota Territory.	3,366	27
Do...	Geo. W. Candee, paym'r..	Sioux City, Iowa....		Forts Randall and Sully, Lower Brulé, Cheyenne, and Grand River agencies, Dakota Territory.	866	13

Statement showing posts visited, miles traveled, and time consumed by each officer of the Pay Department, &c.—Continued.

Rank.	Name and grade.	Station.	Division or department.	Posts visited.	Miles traveled.	Time consumed.
						Days.
Do ..	*Simeon Smith, paymaster.	Omaha, Neb	Department of the Platte.	Fort McPherson, Nor'h Platte, Sidney barracks, Nebr	828	4
Do...	T. H. Stanton, paymaster.	Cheyenne, Wy'o Ter.		Forts D. A. Russell, Laramie, Fetterman, and Sanders; Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, Wyoming Ter.	450	17
Do...	Israel O. Dewey, paymast'r	Salt Lake City, Utah		Forts Bridger and Fred. Steele; Camps Stambaugh and Brown, Wyoming Territory, Camp Douglas, Beaver City, Utah Territory,	742	22
Do ..	†Samuel Woods, paymast'r.	San Francisco, Cal...	Department of California.	Local payments.
Do...	Brantz Mayer, paymaster	San Francisco, Cal...		Benicia barracks and arsenal, and posts in harbor of San Francisco.....	56	2
Do...	C. W. Wingard, paymaster	San Francisco, Cal...		Camps Independence, Wright, and Gaston, California	1,936	30
Do...	*W. A. Rucker, paymaster.	Portland, Oregon....	Department of the Columbia.	Sitka, Alaska Territory	2,800	25
Do...	J. P. Canby, paymaster...	Portland, Oregon....		‖Vancouver arsenal, Forts Vancouver, Cape Disappointment, Walla-Walla, Colville, W. T., Forts Stevens, Oregon, Lapwai, Idaho, Camp San Juan Island	1,822	41
Do...	V. S. Eggleston, paymast'r.	Portland, Oregon....		‖ Forts Klamath, Oregon, and Boise, Idaho Territory; Camps Warner, Harney, Oregon, and Bidwell, California	1,450	32
Do...	*C. J. Sprague, paymaster.	San Francisco, Cal...	Department of Arizona.	Forts Yuma, Cal., and Hall, Idaho Ter.; Camps Halleck & McDermit, Nev.	2,406	30
Do...	J. H. Nelson, paymaster ..	Prescott, Arizona Tr.		Fort Whipple, Ehrenberg; Camps Beale's Springs, Mojave, and Verde, Arizona Territory	600	14
Do...	David Taylor, paymaster..	Tucson, Arizona Tr..		Camps McDowell, Bowie, Grant, and Apache, Arizona Territory	700	25
Do...	Chas. T. Larned, paymast'r	Washington, D. C. ..	Paymaster-General's office.
Do...	J. H. Eaton, paymaster ..	Washington, D. C. ..
Do...	R. D. Clarke, paymaster ..	Washington, D. C. ..	Post paymaster.
Do...	J. P. Brua, paymaster.....	Sick and off duty...
Do...	N. Vedder, paymaster
Do...	T. H. Halsey, paymaster..
Do...	J. E. Burbank, paymaster

* Chief paymaster of department. † Majors Judd and Glenn alternate in making the payments indicated in their respective tours of duty. ‡ Chief paymaster Division of the Pacific and of the Department of California. § Majors Carey and Bridgeman alternate in making payments indicated in their respective cases. ‖ Paymasters in Department of Columbia alternate in making payments indicated above.

Now, while upon the subject of the expense of the Navy, I find there are but eight thousand enlisted men, yet it costs almost $300,000 to pay them. Thus it will be seen that the comparison fails as between that force and the pensioners. Besides, the paymasters in the Navy receive a ration a day after they have been in the service five years, which is commuted at thirty cents a day.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Do not the paymasters in the Navy correspond not only to the paymasters in the Army, but to the quartermasters in the Army? Do they not furnish all the supplies to the sailors, such as clothing and everything of that sort? Are they not general disbursing officers, the sole disbursing officers of the Navy?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I think not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, yes.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The purser is a disbursing officer in the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. A paymaster in the Navy is a purser, ex officio, and a purser is a paymaster. This officer is the sole disbursing officer of the ship or fleet.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Does a paymaster in the Navy, supposing that he acts as quartermaster, have to transport his stores so far as a quartermaster in the Army?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no; he does not transport the stores, but he has charge of them while in the ship, and he has to keep the accounts. All the accounts are kept by the paymaster in the Navy, while in the Army the accounts are kept by the Army officers.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The Army paymaster has to keep an account with each man, and these accounts are to be forwarded to the Paymaster-General here, and must be verified. He keeps an account with each officer of the Army. Perhaps he keeps more individual accounts than the paymaster does in the Navy. I think he does in proportion to the number of paymasters of the Navy. We have now thirty thoutand troops, and in the Navy eight thousand enlisted men and swo thousand marines, so that there are more men to be paid in the Army than in the Navy, although there is a greater number of paymasters in the Navy. There are fewer paymasters and more men to be paid in the Army.

I will pass now, Mr. Speaker, to another branch of the bill, relating to the Medical Department. On this subject you will find by reference to a table which I will submit that there is no equality in the Army as compared with the Navy or in the Army as compared with European armies. In the Medical Department of the Navy there is one surgeon with the rank of commodore on the active list, fourteen with the rank of colonel, and fifteen with that of lieutenant-colonel, fifteen ranking as major, fifty as captain, and fifty as lieutenant, making a total of one hundred and eighty. On the retired list there are twenty-nine, sixteen of whom are equal in rank to a brigadier-general, and draw pay according to that rank. Now in the Army there is but a single surgeon who has the rank of brigadier-general and who draws that pay, and only one of that kind on the retired list.

There are in the Army according to the Adjutant-General's report two hundred and thirty-seven posts where there are troops and medical officers and where medical men must be. If there are not enough surgeons or assistant surgeons to do the duty pertaining to the Medical Department, the Surgeon-General is compelled to hire contract surgeons to go to posts unsupplied by Army surgeons. There are one hundred and thirty-five contract surgeons.

Now, the Medical Department of the Army wants what is done in the Navy and is proposed to be done in all other corps of the Army, and that is that the service shall be open to promotion, so that young men may come into the Medical Corps and become surgeons of the Army with chance of promotion. Because after all, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the great motives which impels men to do and dare, the fact that there is a higher position which may be reached feeds laudable ambition to exertion. Every man desires to obtain a higher place. If you say a surgeon of the Army shall never have any higher rank than that of captain, then the Army will be deprived of many excellent and scientific men.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, right here that the Medical Department of the Army has shed more light on medical science than almost any medical college in the country. The scientific books of research made by the Medical Department of the Army are full of light and are sought after by every medical man in the country. Now the objection which exists to this provision of the bill is this, and I wish to call attention to it. I believe members of Congress would not cut down a useful branch of the service or cripple it so far as any provision may be made for surgeons and assistant surgeons. This proposition limits the number of contract surgeons to one hundred. According to the statement I have in my possession here, showing where every surgeon and assistant surgeon is, if you provide only one hundred contract surgeons you will leave some posts and some places unsupplied with medical assistance. Do you mean to do that? Do you mean to send men on the very verge of civilization to maintain the integrity of the nation, to stand up for our flag, to protect the settlers upon the frontier, and not give them medical attendance when sick? Yet you will do that very thing if you pass this bill as it is. If you say there shall be one hundred contract surgeons and no more, then many posts will be left without any medical assistance. Surgeons for the Army are to be admitted upon competitive examinations, and the filling up of this corps will necessarily be slow, and hence the necessity for a greater number of contract surgeons. It is safe to leave this matter with the Surgeon-General.

If you insist that there shall not be so many contract surgeons, I ask you what shall the Surgeon-General do when he has not surgeons whom he can detail, and has not the power to employ contract surgeons to send to places where they are needed?

Mr. HURLBUT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. HURLBUT. Why is it that this committee have not ordered the surgeons to be attached to their regiments, as they should be?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Well, sir, I am not prepared to answer for the committee in all respects. I know that so far as the bill relates to the surgeons that are provided for I agree with the committee, but so far as it relates to contract surgeons I deny that it is just and right, and therefore when we come to that section I shall ask that it may be amended.

I append a table from the Medical Record:

In order to show the relation the medical officers of our Army bear to the same officers of the English army as to rank, (and consequently pay,) and also to the other staff corps of the Army and Navy, we have taken pains to present the following table, which speaks for itself:

Statement showing the relation the medical officers of our Army bear to the same officers of the English army as to rank, (and consequently pay,) and also to the other staff corps of the Army and Navy.

Medical Department.	Major-general.	Brigadier-general.	Colonel.	Lieutenant-colonel.	Major.	Captain.	Lieutenant.	Total.	Ratio to whole number of active and retired.		Ratio of whole number of active officers.
									Colonels.	Lt.-cols.	Colonels.	Lt.-cols.
English army—active	5	6	16	121	408	451	702	1,709	.....	.....	1 to 107	1 to 14
English army—retired	.....	14	31	117	61	.....	.....	223	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total	5	20	47	238	469	451	702	1,932	1 to 41	1 to 8	.....	.....
United States Navy—active	.....	1	14	15	50	50	50	180	.....	.....	1 to 13	1 to 13
United States Navy—retired	.....	16	4	.....	6	3	.....	29	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total	.....	17	18	15	56	53	50	209	1 to 11	1 to 14	.....	.....
United States Army Medical Department—active, (act July, 1866)	.....	1	1	5	60	50	100	217	.....	.....	1 to 217	1 to 44
United States Army Medical Department—retired	.....	.....	1	2	3	5	.....	11	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total	.....	1	2	7	63	55	100	228	1 to 114	1 to 32	.....	.....
United States Quartermaster's Department—active	.....	1	5	10	14	30	.....	60	.....	.....	1 to 12	1 to 7
United States Quartermaster's Department—retired	.....	.....	6	.....	.....	.....	.....	6	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total	.....	1	11	10	14	30	.....	66	1 to 5½	1 to 6	.....	.....
United States Commissary Department—active	.....	1	2	2	8	13	.....	26	.....	.....	1 to 13	1 to 13
United States Commissary Department—retired	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total	.....	1	2	2	8	13	.....	26	1 to 13	1 to 13	.....	.....
United States Engineer Department—active	.....	1	6	12	24	30	26	99	.....	.....	1 to 16	1 to 8
United States Engineer Department—retired	.....	.....	1	1	1	.....	.....	3	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total	.....	1	7	13	25	30	26	102	1 to 14	1 to 8	.....	.....

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call your attention to another matter. In the sixteenth section of the bill, where provision is made for examination of officers for promotion into the staff corps, you will notice that it is provided that upon that board there are to be three line officers and two staff officers. Now, that is unjust to the staff. The staff will then be at the mercy of and in the hands of the line officers. It would be as unjust to the officers of the line if you were to provide that a majority of the examining board for that branch of the service should be of the staff. You ought, as a simple matter of justice, give the staff three members of this board and the line two.

There are other features of the bill that will come up no doubt in its discussion, when it will be read by sections, which will justly call for amendment. But at this time I content myself with having called the attention of the House to what I conceive to be the objectionable features of the bill, and with having urged the reasons why that portion of the bill in relation to the staff corps should be adopted and that the restrictive features which are put upon the staff officers should be removed. If the bill is passed I do not know that I shall have any objection to the changes proposed to be made in the Adjutant-General's Department. But I believe that if the bill is passed so as to do justice to the staff corps of the Army, the Army will be satisfied with it. I know that there is jealousy between the staff and the line, and I suppose there always will be; because all men cannot be staff officers, and therefore some men will be dissatisfied with those who can. It is the war over again between the different members of the body; the hands complain of the feet, and so on. But as near as may be you overcome that difficulty if you open the departments to detail and then to absolute promotion. Before I take my seat I will ask to have read an amendment, which I propose to offer at the proper time, as a substitute for the thirteenth section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Pay Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Paymaster-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry; one assistant paymaster-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry; two deputy paymasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of major of cavalry; and fifty paymasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of major of cavalry.

Mr. NESMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Before the gentleman from Oregon proceeds I desire to indicate an amendment, to which I think there will be no objection. It is to add to section 13 these words:

The headquarters of the Army of the United States shall never be moved from the capital of the nation, except in time of war.

Mr. NESMITH. I am opposed to the main principles of the bill, and to most of its details; and I shall detain the House but a few minutes to state the reasons by which I am actuated in that opposition. I would like to live in a country, if there was any such Utopia, where no army existed, and where there was no necessity for one. But in the present condition of this country, notwithstanding our isolated position and the impossibility of our being invaded by any foreign nation, notwithstanding that great difference between our condition and that of European governments, there is still a necessity that we should have at least a skeleton organization of a regular army. I think it is a necessary evil; but I also think that if it were possible to get along without it, it would be better for all classes of our community. I believe that the institution itself is an unmixed evil, and, as I stated before, I should like to see that condition of affairs exist where it would be unnecessary in the Government to invoke force for any purpose.

But, sir, we have a large frontier, and I may say a constantly extending frontier. When I say constantly extending, I do not mean that the soil is being extended, or the limits of our territory enlarged. But I mean that the peculiarity of settlements do increase the area of our frontier for defense.

Why, sir, when we had an army of fourteen or fifteen thousand men, when I first crossed the frontier, that frontier extended from Texas up along just west of the Mississippi River, and along the western boundary of Missouri and Iowa. Beyond there it was a wilderness occupied entirely by savages; and all the protection then required was required for the frontier of Arkansas, Missouri, and Iowa. Since then our settlements have extended all over that vast region west of the Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean. Our frontier now extends from the Rio Grande River in Texas along the southern boundary line to California, up along our northwestern frontier, and then it doubles back nearly that entire distance. The frontier of to-day exceeds the frontier of that day three or four fold. It extends from Texas across the southern portion of New Mexico and Arizona, then up along the eastern frontier of California through Nevada, Oregon, Washington Territory, and along the British possessions, making a frontier exceeding five or six times that which we had at the period when we had a small and diminutive army.

It is in the interest of the people upon that frontier that I now speak; and I protest against the reduction of the Army in behalf of those people who are settlers upon the public lands, and to whom protection is an absolute necessity. I am therefore opposed to any reduction of the Army. I am opposed to it upon the principle that we have not now a sufficient Army to properly protect the frontiers. It would not be in the interest of economy to reduce the Army if the present condition of things continues in reference to these Indians, who, as General Sherman said in his testimony, were in a constant state of turmoil and war with the frontier settlements, for if the Army is reduced we will be compelled to give protection by the next best means, the temporary employment of volunteer troops for the purpose.

A reduction of our Army, now diminutive, by seven regiments, would bring it almost to a point of uselessness. General Sherman said before the Committee on Military Affairs that he would rather see the first twenty pages torn out of the Army Register and dispense with the entire staff department of the Army than to be deprived of a single regiment of cavalry. You propose to reduce the Army without making corresponding reduction of posts. Those posts must be occupied. General Sherman, when before your committee, showed where every company of every regiment was stationed. When called upon to say which of those posts he could dispense with, he was unable to indicate a single post of the hundreds scattered all over the great western frontier of the country that could be dispensed with.

Having said this much on the subject of the old and new frontiers of the country, of the necessity of at least keeping our Army up to its present standard, without stopping to enter upon a discussion of the details of this bill, I desire to say a few words in reference to the Army generally. Every Congress seems to be imbued with the idea of a necessity to do something to reorganize the Army. And if this continual reorganizing, this continual tinkering of the Army is to be kept up, then you had better abolish the Army at once, and let the Indians take possession of our frontiers. So far as the Army is concerned, by this constant and incessant tinkering you destroy its esprit du corps, you keep its officers in a constant struggle for existence, for no one of them can tell in the interval between one session of Congress and another whether he will be legislated out of the service or be permitted to remain in it. No man of spirit, no man of culture, no man who is fit to be an officer, desires to remain in your Army if that condition of affairs is to be maintained. The best men you now have are seeking employment in other pursuits, seeking other opportunities to make their living by the exercise of their intellect and culture, instead of being longer kept in this constant struggle for existence. As a friend near me suggests, they are now made foot-balls of, knocked and cuffed about and played with as battledoor and shuttlecock. None of them can tell whether their official positions are permanent or not; and I say that if this condition of things is to be continued, if Congress is to be constantly intermeddling with the rank and position of these men, then you had better retire them all to private life at once.

I am no defender of the wrongs connected with the Army, if there are any. I do not say it is not an aristocratic institution, that it does not embrace many officers who are leading lives of idleness, being pillars of State in time of war and perhaps its caterpillars in times of peace. But I do know that so far as we on the frontier have been brought in contact with them we regard them as an absolute necessity. I would have preferred, if the Army was not to be increased, at least to have kept it at its present force. If, as has been said, we have an army of officers, too many to command the small army of men that we have, there are other employments in which they can be legitimately and usefully engaged. They could be made the disbursing agents of your Indian Department; they could be given the entire charge of your Indian Department; for I believe they are the legitimate and proper persons to control it.

But I am trenching upon dangerous ground. After listening to the eloquent remarks of my friend from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] and my friend from Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE,] who passed such glowing eulogies upon the character of the Indians that I thought we were going to have three or four days of eulogies in succession, it seems that gentlemen who live most remote from the Indians and know the least about them assume to be the best judges of their character. Those gentlemen in their speeches delineate characteristics of the "noble red man" which I have failed to discover. My friend from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] is also, I believe, included in the category of Indian eulogists. But I do not desire to stir up any controversy with those gentlemen. I am not aggressive in my character. I wish to say, however, that if the entire Indian Department were placed under the control of your Army officers you would have a more honest disbursement of your public funds than you have to-day. I have never heard the honesty or integrity of the officers of our Army questioned upon this floor; but upon almost all occasions when that subject has been brought up it has been universally conceded that they are generally men of strict integrity. The history made by them as disbursing officers during the late war is one of which not only the Army but the country should be proud.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I believe the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. NESMITH] was one of a committee who went out in 1865 from the Senate for the purpose of examining the Indian question very thoroughly; that that committee took a great deal of evidence, and united in a report which stated that they were unanimously of the opinion that it was not for the interests of the Indians that they should be turned over to the War Department. Am I not correct?

Mr. NESMITH. The gentleman comes within two years of the correct date, and that is pretty near for a gentleman who is as fond of the Indians as he is It was in 1865, not in 1867, that I went out as a member of a committee on an inspecting tour. I was directed to inspect Indian affairs in Utah, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington Territories. I went alone, and I made up a report in which I unanimously concurred. But I did not entirely concur in the report that was made by the chairman of the committee—a large portion of which report I never saw.

Mr. COBURN. Does the gentleman say that that was not the report of the committee, but merely the report of the chairman?

Mr. NESMITH. I have said nothing of the sort. I say there were many things in the report in which I did not concur. But even if I did express then an opinion different from my present view, eight years is a long time for a man to remain of one opinion in this country, particularly if he has any claims to being a politician, which I am happy to say I have not.

But I have never concurred in the sentiment uttered here by gentlemen on the other side in discussing this question, to the effect that the Indians should not be controlled by the Army. I believe they are a cowardly, depredating, breech-clouted set of thieves and scoundrels; and you can only control them by their fears.

Gentlemen in their eulogies of the Indians the other day said, "Give them the Bible; give them the Bible." Why, sir, the Indians have no conception of the Bible. If you desire to control them, you can never do so with the inspiration of the Bible. They can only be controlled by superior physical force. Talk about your missionaries and your peace-men controlling the Indians! Why, sir, do they not every day call upon the Army for military force to protect them and the people at their agencies? Those peace-loving, God-fearing, Christian men may be very good men in their places; I do not deny that; but I say that their qualifications are not such as enable them to control the Indians. A man must have some practical adaptation to the purposes to which you are going to apply him. Why, sir, we read in this same Book which our friends are going to give to the Indians that Nebuchadnezzar fed upon grass; but we never heard that he was fit for beef or made a good milch-cow.

I do not desire to go into the details of this bill, but merely to say a few words in the interest of a great and scattered community which I in part represent. In fact, all that country north of the Pacific Railroad to the British possessions and down to the frontier States on the Pacific Ocean—a country embracing almost one-fourth of the Union—is represented by the single vote which I cast upon this floor; and I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that that vote is not more potent. Those poor, isolated people, in their sparse and scattered settlements, with their wives and children and their household gods, are beyond the reach of your strong Army. They are are murdered ruthlessly, as we hear every day, and without an opportunity to appeal to you. Those are the people in whose interest I speak.

I know that it is common for men who know nothing about the condition of those people to say in frothy, noisy declamation here that the people upon the frontier themselves inaugurate those Indian wars; that they bring them on for the purpose of public plunder. In God's name, what has an Indian got that a white man wants to plunder him of? The poor settler, living perhaps five or ten miles away from any other man with his wife and his children, with nothing to sell more than he himself produces, why does he want to inaugurate an Indian war and bring down upon himself and his unprotected family the hostility of the Indians? The history of the Indian wars in my section of the country—I do not undertake to speak for other portions of the Union—has been that the Indians have been the aggressors. I see that this interests my friend from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS.]

Mr. SHANKS. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in 1857 he made a report in which he states that the aggressions of the Indians were because the United States made treaties with them and did not carry them out. That is his own report.

Mr. NESMITH. I admit that slightly. I admit I did make that report.

Mr. SHANKS. Very well.

Mr. NESMITH. I admit that the United States failed to carry them out in many respects; but can we allege it to be the trouble of the frontiersmen? It rests upon you, sir, and other gentlemen who cast votes upon this floor. If you make a treaty for the purchase of the Indian's land and then fail to pay him an equivalent as you have agreed to do, it is your fault, and not that of those who live upon the frontier.

Mr. SHANKS. But the gentleman just now said the Indian was the aggressor. He then said, when he was in the employ of the Government, when the Government paid him for his services, that the Government was the aggressor. Now, when he is looking to his constituency for re-election, he said the Indian was the aggressor.

Mr. NESMITH. The gentleman is drawing very fine distinctions.

Mr. SHANKS. I intend to draw them while I am here.

Mr. NESMITH. Very well; the gentlemen is drawing very fine distinctions. I said in that report that the Government in many instances had failed to comply with conditions of the treaties made with the Indians. That was what I was talking about when I wrote the report in 1865. Now I am speaking with reference to who is to blame for these Indian wars—not as to the Government or whether it is the white frontier settler or the Indian enemy. I have not attempted to trace them back to real causes.

Mr. SHANKS. General Canby said the Indians had great provocation for what they had done prior to the time they killed him.

Mr. NESMITH. I think General Canby was under great misapprehension. All of the inception and inauguration of this Modoc war, over which my friend from Indiana and myself had a scuffle on the floor some time ago, I think the report shows so far as settlers are concerned the Indians were in absolute wrong.

Mr. SHANKS. The settlers were organized and came in marching companies and made an attack upon the Indians the evening before, and murdered——

Mr. NESMITH. I deny every word of it.

Mr. SHANKS. I assert it.

Mr. NESMITH. I was there or near there and the gentleman from Indiana was not.

Mr. SHANKS. The report says the civilians were armed and were on hand at the time. An attack was made on these Indians, and there was then no murder committed by them; and there was no murder committed until after that, when these Indians had been shot down in camp.

Mr. NESMITH. You are mistaken about the facts.

Mr. SHANKS. The reports and the President's message give me that information.

Mr. NESMITH. Major Jackson went under orders of the Government to arrest the Modocs on Lost River and take them to their reservation, where they were bound to remain under a treaty which they themselves made. Then the Indians fired upon Jackson, and they had a fight. They dispersed over the State of Oregon; and in place of finding citizens organized and ready to receive them, they shot men down at the plow and in the fields who expected no hostile demonstration any more than my friend from Indiana does if I were now to seek him out with a double-barreled shot-gun.

Mr. SHANKS. They were armed and organized for that purpose. I wish to say to the House that the gentleman has called attention to the fact that he is the only Representative on this floor of all that territory north of the Pacific Railroad and west of the Rocky Mountains. In reply, I wish to say that the people of whom he has spoken as thieves and scoundrels have no representative here at all. They have no one to speak for them or to vote for them except myself of course, as some one has said. He has called attention to the fact that these people have but one Representative. I wish this House to know the Indians have none.

Now, he wants to know what these people wanted to attack the Indians for. He asked what they could get from them. I will tell you what they get from them. Those people out there have obtained every foot of soil from the Indians upon which they lived. They have not a foot of land which was not taken from the Indians.

Mr. NESMITH. I believe I have the floor. When I said I was the solitary Representative I did not exactly state what is the entire fact. There are several worthy, able gentlemen on this floor who represent Territories embraced within that region. What I meant to be understood as saying, if I did not say it, was that I cast the solitary vote here for that entire country.

Mr. SHANKS. That is just what you said.

Mr. NESMITH. I decline to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHANKS. I do not want you to yield.

Mr. NESMITH. But as far as representation is concerned, I know of no people so worthily and so ably represented as the breech-clouted, blanketed thieves I have spoken of are represented by my friend from Indiana. He seems to avail himself of every opportunity to denounce his own race and to denounce the people living on the frontier, and to arrogate to himself the representation of these people, and I say that I know of no people more worthily represented than they are by my friend from Indiana.

I have occupied more time on this subject than I desired. I am as good a friend to the Indian as my friend from Indiana is when the Indian behaves himself; but when the Indian without provocation and in cold blood murders the isolated and defenseless people scattered over that vast region, then I am opposed to him, and if my friend from Indiana, following out the instincts of the people whom he represents, should join them in perpetrating these outrages, I should oppose him too.

But, sir, I have been diverted from the subject on which I started. I proposed when I took the floor to occupy a few minutes in relation to the Army bill. I had given the reasons why I desired that there should be at present no legislation on this subject, or at least no reduction of the Army, and, as I said at the time, I was, perhaps, stepping upon dangerous ground when I spoke of the desire of the western people to have the Indians controlled by the Army rather than by those people who claim to represent the peace policy. I now surrender the floor.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. There are two amendments already pending. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York offering an amendment?

Mr. COBURN. I understand that the amendments are merely read for information.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. MACDOUGALL, as follows:

Strike out section 7 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Adjutant-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; two assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonel; four assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonel; and ten assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of major.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1770) for the relief of Jonathan L. Mann, late a chaplain in the volunteer service of the Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 1794) for the relief of Pat O'Hawes;

A bill (H. R. No. 2090) for the relief of Jacob Harding; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2692) to change the name of the schooner-yacht Quarantine to Welcome.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1582) for the relief of C. C. Spaids; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2808) authorizing the President to reinstate George M. Book on the active list of the Navy.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 28) to set apart a certain portion of the Island of Mackinac, in the Straits of Mackinac, within the State of Michigan, as a national park;

A bill (S. No. 142) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay, assignee of the builders of the steamers La Portena, Edward Everett, F. W. Lincoln, Azalia, and N. P. Banks;

A bill (S. No. 313) to confirm the purchase of a portion of the site of Fort Houston, at Nashville, Tennessee, and to provide for the donation of the same to the Fisk University for educational purposes; also to confirm the purchase of certain land at Fort Hamilton, New York;

A bill (S. No. 332) granting to the American Fork Railway Company a right of way through the public lands for the construction of a railroad and telegraph;

A bill (S. No. 514) granting to the Sierra Iron Company a right of way through the public lands for a railroad and telegraph; and

A bill (S. No. 624) to authorize the issuance of patents for lands granted to the State of Oregon in certain cases.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his letter to Congress giving estimates of appropriations required for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, asks for the military establishment the sum of $34,881,618.10. Our Committee on Appropriations reported a bill, which has passed this House with some amendments, appropriating $28,449,916.60, being more than six millions less than the amount asked for by the Secretary; a commendable saving, because the financial condition of the country calls for retrenchment and reduction of expenses.

An examination of our military establishment and the testimony of military officers before the Committee on Military Affairs prove conclusively that a large reduction of our Army and its expenses may be made. That the safety of this Government depends upon our standing Army is now and always has been doubted by our ablest and best men. On April 2, 1802, Thomas Jefferson, in writing to General Kosciusko relative to the Congress then in session, said:

They will pretty completely fill all the desires of the people. They have reduced the Army and Navy to what is barely necessary; they are disarming executive patronage and preponderance by putting down one-half of the officers of the United States which are no longer necessary. These economies have enabled them to suppress all internal taxes.

In his inaugural address, Mr. Jefferson said of the regular Army:

For defense against invasion their number is as nothing—nor is it needful or safe that a standing Army should be kept up in times of peace for this purpose.

General Hazen, one of the most distinguished officers of the regular Army, in his interesting work on the Franco-Prussian war, says:

The busy commercial life and experience of the nation is its strongest arm, and is what it must inevitably depend upon in time of war to supply the wants of its armies.

In peace, while the line of the Army is resting out for want of occupation, it is an open question whether the regimental organization, with well-chosen depots in the hands of business men and an able corps of inspectors, is not ample for all purposes.

Sir, neither the Canadians nor the Mexicans will ever invade us. Situated as we are far away from any powerful nation, with an ocean rolling between, we would have ample time to rally our people to arms for the national defense before a foreign army could reach our shores.

In our late war we learned that educating Army officers at Government expense to put down a civil war was a dangerous experiment. In that war our Army furnished her full quota of officers to both sides; and through Lee, Jackson, Johnson, Longstreet, Hood, and others, West Point contributed quite as much toward supporting as she did toward suppressing the rebellion. All the army we need is an army of sufficient numbers to guard public property and protect the frontier. How large an army is required to protect the frontier is a question not readily answered. Judging from our late campaign against Captain Jack a very large army would be required; but Captain Jack is dead, his sixty warriors dispersed, and the lava-beds in our possession.

The peace commissioners and Quaker policy of our Administration, most expensive of money and wasteful of human life, has proven a failure, and the frontiersman finds now, as he has found from the earliest history of this country, that his own strong arm and trusty rifle must protect his cabin and his family.

It has been claimed that we need an army to protect the civil authority and enforce the law; this has lately been proven, and well proven, not to be true. The condition of affairs in the State of Louisiana is the best evidence that the interference of the Army or the use of Federal bayonets in civil affairs is pernicious and dangerous to the proper administration of a republican government; while the refusal of the Administration to interfere with affairs in Texas has enabled the people of that State to show to the country and the world that they are fully capable of self-government.

The governments of Texas and Georgia and others of the Southern States may not be, and are not, administered by those belonging to the party in power, but they are governments of the people, administered by the people's representatives, quiet, peaceable, dignified. Then we need no army to preserve peace and order in the Southern States. The people of the South are not only ready to assist in preserving the union of the States, but will keep peace, order, and good government in the South if permitted to do so.

Our Army is now more than twice as large as it was in 1860. Then we had about thirteen thousand soldiers; now we have more than thirty thousand. Then we had need of quite as large if not a larger army than now. We had the same territory to protect, as many if not more Indians to watch and guard against. The constant danger of a slave insurrection was upon us. The troubles which eventually culminated in our civil war called for a heavy force of armed police to sustain the law. Then our people were ignorant of military drill and discipline. A call to arms brought to the field an army of men who knew little of the use of arms and nothing of the art of war. Now we are a nation of soldiers, drilled, disciplined veterans, whose five years' experience in the field would be worth more in actual war than twenty years' West Point training—soldiers who fought with Grant, Sherman, Thomas, Sheridan, and McClellan; soldiers who fought with Lee, Jackson, Longstreet, and Hood.

If war should occur, a call to arms would bring immediately to the field five hundred thousand trained soldiers from the North and South, soldiers who fought against each other, but who would now go to battle like brothers, and fight for each other and with each other for a common country, each endeavoring to show the greater devotion by superior deeds of valor and heroism. Surely, sir, we never had so little need of an army as now. We have no internal dissensions, are at peace with the world, and since we have demonstrated in our late civil conflict our power as a war Government, it is not likely we will be provoked to arms by any interference from abroad.

There is another fact which goes to show a reduction of the Army practicable, and retrenchment in the useless extravagance of the present system called for. In the report of the Secretary of the Treasury during our war with Mexico for the year ending June 30, 1846, the total expenditures of the Army for that year were $4,487,286.83, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1847, the total expenditures were $19,080,865.58. This with an army numbering 44,917 men, of whom 43,536 were in active operations in the field; while now this House has appropriated over $28,000,000 to maintain an army of less than 32,000 men on a peace footing. Sir, our Army is too large, too numerously officered, and too expensive. The officers of our Army, numbering 2,496, which is a commissioned officer to about every ten enlisted men, draw more pay than all the private soldiers and non-commissioned officers put together, as an examination of the Army Register will show, and the following letter of the Paymaster-General will verify:

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 15th, I would state that the aggregate pay of the officers of the Army for the last fiscal year was $4,086,551.91, and the aggregate pay of the enlisted men for the same period was $4,080,124.57.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJ. ALVORD,
Paymaster-General.

Hon. JOHN COBURN.

General LOGAN, in his speech of 1871, estimated the pay of twenty-three general officers of the Army at $178,681, while the subjoined letter and table, furnished by General Bingham, Acting Quartermaster-General United States Army, show a fearfully extravagant expenditure of money for the use of buildings occupied as quarters by officers of the Army for the purposes of storage, offices, stabling, &c., at the headquarters of the several military divisions and departments of the Army:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1874.

SIR: In compliance with your request, I have the honor to submit the following statement of the annual expenditures of the Quartermaster's Department, for rent of buildings occupied as quarters by officers of the Army, and rent of buildings hired for purposes of storage, offices, stabling, &c., at the headquarters of the several military divisions and departments of the Army. Also, a similar statement of the rents paid in this city:

Location of headquarters.	Divisions.	Departments.	Officers' quarters.	Offices, &c.	Total.
New York City	Atlantic	1st district.	$32,948 00	$35,700 00	$68,648 00
Boston, Massachusetts	....do	2d district.	7,128 00	1,200 00	8,328 00
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania	....do	3d district.	14,256 00	4,999 92	19,255 92
Detroit, Michigan	....do	4th district.	8,424 00	1,769 88	10,193 88
Buffalo, New York	....do	5th district.	3,888 00	648 00	4,536 00
Total Division of the Atlantic.	.....	.....	66,644 00	44,317 80	110,961 80
San Francisco, California	Pacific ..	California .	39,280 00	39,876 00	69,156 00
Portland, Oregon	....do	Columbia..	10,800 00	10,176 00	20,976 00
Prescott, Arizona	....do	Arizona*..	.....	.....	.....
Total Division of the Pacific.	.....	.....	40,080 00	50,052 00	90,132 00
Chicago, Illinois	Missouri.	.....	14,040 00	13,800 00	27,840 00
Saint Louis, Missouri	....do....	.....	4,104 00	10,800 00	14,904 00
Leavenworth, Kansas	....do....	Missouri ..	3,456 00	1,680 00	5,136 00
Omaha, Nebraska	....do....	Platte	11,232 00	4,455 96	15,687 96
Saint Paul, Minnesota	....do....	Dakota....	14,256 00	5,947 92	20,203 92
San Antonio, Texas	....do....	Texas	10,584 00	14,070 00	24,654 00
Santa Fé, New Mexico	....do....	Dist. New Mexico.*	.....	.....	.....
Total Division of the Missouri.	.....	.....	57,672 00	50,753 88	108,425 88
Louisville, Kentucky	South ...	South	12,744 00	8,079 96	20,823 96
New Orleans, Louisiana	....do....	Gulf	13,176 00	9,720 00	22,896 00
Total Division of the South	.....	.....	25,920 00	17,799 96	43,719 96

*Public buildings occupied; nothing paid for rents.

The annual amount paid for rents at Washington for officers' quarters is $62,616, and for other buildings $48,160.08, making a total of $110,776.08.

RECAPITULATION.

Total amount Division of the Atlantic	$110,961 80
Total amount Division of the Pacific	90,132 00
Total amount Division of the Missouri	108,425 88
Total amount Division of the South	43,719 96
Total amount depot at Washington	110,776 08
Grand total	464,015 72

In reference to the expenditure by the Quartermaster's Department on account of the Signal Corps of the Army, it is estimated at $123,325 per annum.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. BINGHAM,
Acting Quartermaster-General, Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S. A.

Hon. JOHN COBURN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that if the General of the Army were to start out an inspector in the interest of economy, with an ambition to reduce expenditures so that our expenses might be brought within our income, he might cut down this expense of offices and officers' quarters at least one-quarter of a million. For my own part I can see no necessity whatever for keeping up any of these officers' quarters or offices named in the foregoing list of General Bingham, unless it be the Washington depot, the headquarters of the General of the Army.

If we were to make full inquiry we would find that $110,776.08, the amount paid in this city alone, would, if spent with economy, rent a very large number of offices and officers' quarters in this city, where there are so many empty houses adorned with notices "To let." I have understood that Willard's entire hotel is leased for less than $30,000 a year; a building large enough to furnish offices and quarters for all the officers of the Army. This being the fact, wherein is the necessity for paying for officers' quarters alone the sum of $62,676 and for other buildings the sum of $48,160.08, making a total expenditure in this city alone of $110,776.08. I do not know where all these officers' quarters and offices spoken of in this report are, but I suppose they are located in the fashionable portions of the city, as the rents would indicate. I hope the occupants are comfortable; they should be, because the amount paid for the rent of their quarters is the interest on $1,846,266, which sum would purchase a large amount of real estate in Washington these hard times.

I am not complaining of the officers who enjoy these expensive quarters; it is their privilege to occupy them, and I do not find fault with them for so doing. It is our duty, however, to inquire into all these affairs, and prevent all waste and unnecessary expenditure of the public money. The condition of our Treasury makes it necessary for us to economize and reduce expenses, and this seems to me a reduction we may well make.

Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied we can make a large reduction in the number of Army officers and in Army officers' pay without endangering the safety of the country, to the advantage of the tax-payer, and in so doing add to the efficiency and usefulness of the Army itself. The reduction need only be of the supernumerary officers and men whose names adorn the pay-roll, whose extra duty seems to be to dress well, and whose real duty seems to be to draw their pay regularly. An experienced writer upon the expenses of our War Department says:

What need, for example, can the War Department have for five hundred and seventy seven clerks? Our regular Army consists of only thirty-two thousand men, and is thoroughly officered at the different points in which it is distributed not only with staff and regimental officers, but with clerks of the Quartermasters' and Commissary Departments. Yet, if we compare the number of clerks employed in the War Department and supposed to attend to the correspondence and other business connected with military affairs with the actual number comprising our standing Army, we shall find that the Secretary of War employs one clerk at Washington to every fifty-six men in the field.

In England, which has the name of being the paradise of office-holders and sinecures, the war office employs only five hundred and ninety clerks of all grades, and that, too, with a standing army one hundred and twenty-nine thousand strong, besides reserve force, militia and volunteer corps, to the aggregate number of three hundred thousand more. The government of Great Britain, with all its extravagance and with ever so many supernumeraries of the barnacle family in office, gets along in its war department with only one clerk to every two hundred and twenty soldiers, while in our republican and economical Government we must have one clerk to every fifty-six soldiers.

Notwithstanding this large number of clerks, applicants for back pay, bounties, and pensions find that they must not only furnish full proof for the establishment and collection of their claims, but must exercise a patience and endure a delay which wearies and discourages them, and weakens their confidence in the honesty of the administration of our Government. Why then, sir, do we keep up so large an army, or, in the language of a late Assistant Secretary of War—

What justification is there, then, for the existence of our Army of thirty thousand men? There are wandering, thieving, murdering bands of Indians within our territory which require watching and punishing. Eight thousand men will amply suffice for this work. Twenty-two thousand men, therefore, are maintained by our tax-payers in lives of the most unprofitable idleness. They should be sent back to useful labor forthwith. A large standing army in the United States in time of peace is a solecism unworthy of a rational people. It is an absurd, costly sham, which should be attacked by every man in the country who honestly desires to stop the waste of the public money.

The argument has been and is made that a standing army is necessary for the purpose of having a foundation upon which to build a military force in time of war. The fallacy of this statement was proven in our late civil conflict. When war came upon us, instead of building up from our regular Army a force sufficient to defend the Union, we found, to say the least, that that Army and its entire system was of no use whatever. The Government was forced to call upon the militia. Raw volunteers brought into the field had to be drilled and disciplined precisely as they would have been without a regular Army in existence. The patriotic citizens of the United States, both officers and men, were taught their duty in the field and under fire.

The fact is, sir, we have been taught by hard experience, as well as by the example of the war powers in Europe, that to make an efficient army we must create and educate the private soldier. France, that conquered Europe, and Germany, that has since conquered France, have been for a thousand years making and educating the private soldier. In the discipline and drill of the men will be found the power of the Army. Disregarding this lesson or fact, we seek to do this work by educating an officer. When the officer is made the Secretary of War comes down to Congress and asks appropriations for an army, and in this lies the whole secret of our trouble. Having made the officer we are called upon to furnish him with men, instead of drilling the men and furnishing from among them an officer.

As I have said before, we have entirely too many officers for our Army, and this disproportion grows upon us until after a while we will have more officers than men. The process is as follows: Each congressional district is entitled to a cadet at West Point; in addition to this the President appoints at large; after four years' study at West Point these young gentlemen graduate as officers, and have not only to be paid by the General Government but furnished employment. What time then would be necessary to bring about this result of more officers than men becomes a mere mathematical calculation which each person can make for himself.

The wants, then, of a large army are not in the needs of the country, but those of the officer; he must have men or he has no employment. Perhaps, sir, we could disband the entire force of privates and do all that is necessary to be done by the officers. An army made up of the intelligence and gallantry found under the epaulet would more than compensate for the loss of numbers of mercenary soldiers. What a magnificent army it would be of five thousand officers and clerks brigaded under our gallant general marching out to the defense of our flag! How the hearts of the country would go with them!

Jesting aside, sir, if we seek a thorough reform that will give us an efficient force in accordance with the simplicity and economy of a republic, it will be necessary to remodel the entire War Department. This the people of the United States demand, the good of the Army service demands, and the depleted condition of our Treasury makes necessary. How, then, shall this reduction be made? It is said it cannot be done without dealing unfairly by the officer; that his life has been devoted to his profession, and now he cannot adapt himself to any other profession or calling. The history of the most distinguished officers in our late war stand as strong evidences that American Army officers are not so shiftless and incapable of taking care of themselves as some of their would-be defenders would make them out. Among the most brilliant and distinguished officers of the Union Army were Grant, Sherman, Rosecrans, Mitchell, and McClellan, all of whom had resigned from the Army and turned their attention to civil pursuits, while the confederate army found its great captain, Stonewall Jackson, a resigned officer of the United States Army, making himself useful and earning a living as a professor in the University of Virginia.

Mr. Speaker, there are wounded and disabled Army officers to whom the nation is indebted, whose infirmities she never can make good, and to whom liberal payments will always be made. The statement, however, that the Army officer only understands the art of war, and outside of the Army cannot earn a living, may be a compliment to the laggard, but it is an insult to the intelligent capable officer. If it were true, it would be a sufficient reason in itself for our withholding any further appropriations to our Military Academy upon the Hudson. Why should the officer who has been educated by the Government have, in addition to his free education, the advantage through life over other citizens? Does it follow as a logical and necessary conclusion that because the Government has educated, she is therefore bound to support him? Must the Government pay the officer when it does not need his services, to have his support when required? The farmer, the mechanic, the merchant, the doctor, the lawyer, all self-educated and self-supporting, owe allegiance and service if the country calls—why not the Army officer?

And now as to the manner of reducing expenses of the Army. Believing that it will be perfectly safe to reduce the Army, and that no person will suffer by reason of the reduction except Army officers for whose faithful service the country is grateful, against whom I would not raise my voice, and with whom the country expects us to deal justly, but who must not in this hour of the country's financial trial expect more than the country can perform, or stand in the way of reduction, retrenchment, and reform, this reduction may be accomplished by stopping all recruiting. This will cut off from the appropriations recommended by the Secretary $175,000, and will reduce the Army in one year, according to a statement made by Adjutant-General Townsend in his examination before the Military Committee, if the same casualties should occur next year that occurred last year, to about a proper peace footing. On page 37 of his examination he furnishes a statement showing the number of casualties per year in the United States Army:

Statement showing the average number of casualties per year in the United States Army.

Arm of service.	Died.	Discharged.			Deserted.
		Expiration of service.	For disability.	Other causes.
Cavalry	130	1,077	277	478	1,910
Artillery	47	582	200	231	1,011
Infantry	239	2,120	503	1,100	3,515
Miscellaneous	65	408	133	472	1,377
Total	481	4,187	1,113	2,281	7,813

According to this statement the average yearly casualties are 15,875. Of these casualties, most remarkable and as proof of the low standard of the men recruited, 7,813 are deserters. Think of it, sir, more than one-fourth of our Army deserting annually! Should not the American heart swell with pride, and should not every American citizen be inspired with feelings of safety as he looks with admiration upon these gallant defenders of his country, when he turns to page 37 of this book and reads that 7,813 of our Army, more than one-fourth, desert annually!

Sir, when we take into consideration the character of our military as shown by this table of the Adjutant-General, it is easy to understand why we were so long in whipping Captain Jack! Indeed, sir, it is hard to understand how we ever whipped him. In fact, if the character of our Army is correctly portrayed in this report, the wonder is that Captain Jack was not re-enforced in place of being captured.

And is this the foundation upon which gentlemen would have us build for the national defense in the event of war; a foundation which, like that of 1861, would divide upon the firing of the first gun? Why is this, sir? Why all these desertions? Why is the rank and file made up of such bad material?

I have said before that we exhaust ourselves in making the officer. We have not followed the example of the war powers in Europe, or devoted our energies and intellect in making the soldier. In Europe the private soldier's ambition is appealed to, his self-respect is cultivated. In Germany the nobleman is subjected to the same military discipline as the peasant; while in France the great Napoleon said that the common soldier carried in his knapsack the baton of a marshal. With us, sir, there is no promotion from the ranks. Our promotions are from West Point. Our officer is made an aristocrat by law, and our common soldier a slave by necessity. I know gentlemen can take the Army Register and point out a large number of officers commissioned from civil life, but these are exceptions, and I am speaking of the system and not the exception. The late war demonstrated the want of efficiency in this very system.

Now, sir, the rank and file being reduced by its own casualties, let the list of officers be reduced in proper proportion. The problem to be solved is, how shall this be done? An old soldier said to me while conversing upon this subject, "A reduction of the Army you think is highly proper and necessary. Suppose you go on and try it. You will find it does very well to talk about; but when it comes to mustering out, every Congressman will be standing in for and protecting his favorite officer, until at length they will find it necessary to repeal the law to protect their friends."

Mr. Speaker, the power of the "lobby" is very great, but not so strong I think but that the virtue of this Congress can resist and defeat it.

Sir, according to this same report of the Adjutant-General the yearly casualties among the officers, if no new appointments are made, would make a rapid reduction. The casualties yearly among Army officers according to this book, page 37, are eighty-three. And for the more rapid reduction let the General of the Army take it in charge. He will strike off the dead branches. He will drive the drones from the hive and retain the intelligent working material, as this answer of his before the committee well shows:

General SHERMAN. If reduction is forced upon the Army by the financial condition of the country, (of which Congress must be the sole judge,) I unhesitatingly say that you had better cut off at the head than at the foot; that the most valuable part of our military establishment is in the inverse order of its general arrangement. I look upon two cavalry regiments or even infantry regiments as worth more than the whole general staff, myself included. I would rather see Congress abolish me and my office, and turn me loose to get my own living, and tear out the first thirty-eight pages of the Army Register, than to see it disband two such regiments. But that, of course, is not the answer you want. I think you ought to take each of these staff departments by itself and ascertain the number of officers of every rank required in each of them, and fix them at that and then repeal the other law prohibiting promotion, and let the President conform the reorganization of the staff of the Army to suit the new law. To repeal that law, (prohibiting promotion,) as to one department, (as you did for the engineers,) and not for the others, is a discrimination in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, in my judgment. The Ordnance Department now seeks to obtain the same repeal as to itself. In my judgment there is not a bit of necessity for such favoritism. They have got plenty of ordnance officers for every probable contingency that can arise in the next year.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The President in his message speaks of it.

General SHERMAN. Yes; because he is very much pressed by mothers and aunts who want to get their sons and nephews into some soft place. The Ordnance Department is the softest place in the Army, and they all want to get into it, especially young men with influential congressional friends. I may as well use plain language. There are sixty-one ordnance officers now, and how they find employment for them all I don't know.

And now, sir, as the noble volunteer who survived laid down his musket and resumed his citizenship, so the people expect this Government to return to the military establishment of the fathers, who framing our Government warned us against the exigencies and dangers of military glory.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, before closing that we have it in our power by rearrangement of business properly belonging to the War Department to not only save large sums of money to the Government, but secure a better administration of two very important departments of the Government. I refer to the Indian and Pension Bureaus. As these now are, the country is startled by their heavy expenditures and loose administration. It is admitted, indeed it cannot be denied, that they are to a large extent mere political machines of value to parties through their patronage. This, sir, we all acknowledge to be wrong.

The shortest, plainest, simplest remedy is a transfer to that arm of the Government where they properly belong—the War Department. I need not occupy the attention of the House in stating what the late war and years of experience has taught us, that the boys educated at West Point for the public service as a general thing are honest. We have seen millions of money passing through their hands without leaving a stain upon their fingers. I hold, sir, that the most honorable national record—the one least tinged with dishonesty, the one to which we may point with the most pride—is that which gives the history of the Quartermaster, Commissary, and Pay Departments of our regular Army during the late war. The strongest argument in favor of a civil service where the official agent is removed from the political arena is to be found in this experience. Unfortunately too many men who leave business for offices expect to speculate and make money; the habits of money-getting too often accompanying such official to the loss of the Treasury and the disgrace of the service. I need not elaborate this argument; the mere statement of the fact is sufficient.

Now, sir, all that has been done to the injury of the Indian service comes from speculators and political adventurers. All that has been accomplished of real service we owe to the Army and the Army officer. And if to-day the entire business was transferred to where it properly belongs, this Indian business, in my opinion, would cease to be a complication.

As for the pensions, the country is justly alarmed at their immense expenditure. It is charged, and by high authority, that a very large percentage of them are fraudulent. Now the business belongs naturally to the War Department. Under the Surgeon-General, aided by his medical staff and the Army officers out of employ, this business could be done thoroughly and honestly, and so far as economy is concerned, of immense saving to the Government. We would not only put a stop to dishonest practices through which so much money is wasted, but we would disperse an army of paid officials, and transfer the business to officers already in the service, already compensated.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, obtained the floor.

Mr. BLAND. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLAND. I give notice that at the proper time I will offer the following amendment:

In section 20, lines 11, 12, and 13, strike out the following words:
And the officers so having such leave of absence shall receive when on such duty the same pay and allowances as other officers on leave of absence.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I hardly anticipated that any one would be called upon to make a speech in defense of an army, or to argue the necessity of preparing for war in time of peace. I hardly know how to understand the speech of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] I heard him argue that we needed no standing army whatever, and I heard him refer to the example of Germany and France and other continental nations, who certainly maintain great armies and instruct all their people as far as possible in the art of war. I heard him say that there is no harm in turning out Army officers at any time, and yet I heard him justify the educating of Army officers at the expense of the Government, and I heard him commending the great services that they had rendered the nation.

Now, sir, having educated these men and fitted them for this specialty, having continued them in the service ten, fifteen, or twenty years, and having by that course really unfitted them for the pursuits of civil life, I hold that there is something in the nature, if not of a legal, at least of an equitable contract, by which the Government is bound to retain their services. The country will never be well served if officers who have served it long and faithfully are turned out in this manner; and every threat of this kind of legislation, even the partial tending in that direction, demoralizes the Army.

Every day or two in the debates in this House I hear compliments from both sides and from all men of all parties bearing witness freely to the fidelity, integrity, and capacity of the officers of the Army. The wonder, sir, is that we are so well served, that we have a body of men who really deserve all this praise after our incessant tinkering in Congress with this subject. Let us, I pray, if this bill be not right—and I do not say it is—let us, if it be possible for human ingenuity to do it, devise some permanent policy that shall give to the men in our Army permanent honorable positions, and give them a fair chance of promotion. The gentleman says that we need not keep up the Army in time of peace. The whole history of the world answers that. He says that our experience in the late rebellion shows the danger of educating officers at the Government expense. Well, sir, all that matter has been argued time and time again. Of course, that was an exceptional case. We are not ordinarily educating men with a view to their service for or against a rebellion. That is not one of the things we should take into consideration in framing our policy. Consider the history of West Point. More men were faithful to their pledge, a larger proportion of the graduates of West Point were faithful to the flag in that day of trial than in any other branch of the service; a larger proportion of them than of members of Congres, a larger proportion of Army officers than of men who had been in the diplomatic service.

Mr. SHANKS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. SHANKS. I have understood that according to the history of the rebellion not a single private soldier betrayed his trust, while there were quite a number of military officers educated at West Point who did desert the flag. If I am mistaken in that I want to be corrected.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I have heard that, but I do not know the particulars. I have heard of no body of private soldiers of the United States Army who went over to the enemy. It is a fact, established by statistics, that a larger proportion of our West Pointers were true to the flag than of any other class of citizens. Now, let us lay aside all controversy on that point and have no more about it.

The gentleman referred to our being able to dispense with the Army in time of peace, saying that it is not necessary to have an Army to preserve peace among ourselves. I will not stop to argue the Louisiana question, or to say whether the President did wisely or not in that matter. I do not see how he could have avoided what he did, especially after the decision of what was called the United States court. Suppose there had been no United States troops in Louisiana. Will any man tell how much or how little of civil war and bloodshed there would have been there? Look at the last illustration in Arkansas. Will any man tell me how much or how little bloodshed they would have had at Little Rock if it had not been for the presence of one single captain or colonel of the Federal Army, Colonel Rose? I believe by all accounts that he conducted himself with singular discretion, courage, and wisdom. I am inclined to believe, though it is all mere conjecture, that you had better have paid for the Army one whole year than not to have had Rose's small detachment of troops at Little Rock. I am inclined to believe that but for him we would have had there a chapter of crime and disgrace that would have been held up for our reproof years hence.

I need not try to explain how much we need the Army for the defense of the frontier. The gentleman was mistaken in saying that we did not want more of an army to take care of the Indians now than we had in 1860. If the gentleman will sit down and take the map and look at our straggling posts and lines of settlers and the places occupied by Indians now, they will see that we have not less than four times as much frontier to take care of now as we had fifteen years ago. Then a line running from somewhere we will say in the vicinity of Saint Paul, perhaps Pembina, down to the Texas frontier, with a few squads out on the Pacific coast, would have answered the purpose. Now you must preserve a line from Pembina along down to Texas and across through New Mexico and Arizona to the Pacific Coast; then a line running up to Oregon and a line along the northern frontier back to the place of beginning, with various cross and diagonal lines over the continent—all of which are to be occupied and guarded. The General of the Army will take a map and show you long lines of say five hundred or a thousand miles held by each regiment, broken up into fifteen or twenty detachments—a line that has its significance as preventing the encroachments of Indians in certain directions or of protecting certain fertile valleys, to say nothing of Alaska, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] suggests. I do not think many soldiers are required there.

My purpose in rising was only to suggest an amendment or two which I propose to offer in due time if possible. One of them refers to the Medical Department. There is on page 7 of the bill a provision that the number of contract surgeons shall be limited to seventy-five. There is, I believe, a general reduction of the Medical Department besides; but it winds up by providing that there shall be only seventy-five contract surgeons. Now, whatever you may make your regular medical staff, you ought to leave this department with some sort of elasticity. It is very idle to say that there shall be only seventy-five contract surgeons. We are to maintain very nearly the same number of posts hereafter as we have had with an army of thirty thousand men; this reduction of five thousand will make very little difference in the extent of country you have to protect. You might just as well say that the chief medical officer shall use only so many ounces of quinine in the course of a year and so many bottles of castor oil as to limit in this way the number of contract surgeons. Why should you undertake to adopt such a restriction? Can you not trust the chief medical officer? There are other fields in which he spends a great deal more money perhaps than in the employment of contract surgeons; but the latter you can see, the other you cannot. Leave him some discretion. If you pass the bill with this provision the inevitable result will be that a number of posts will be entirely without physicians and surgeons. The provision is altogether impracticable and mischievous—nothing else than mischievous. You must leave such a matter to the discretion of the commanding general or the chief medical officer of the Army.

Then there is on the third page a provision which some of you, I have no doubt, will consider a small matter. I refer to section 6, which provides—

That the number of aids of the General of the Army shall not hereafter exceed three; the number of aids of the Lieutenant-General and of the several major-generals shall not exceed two for each; and each brigadier-general shall have one aid. The rank, pay, and emoluments of the aids herein provided for shall be the same as officers of cavalry of the same grade, and no more.

I would amend that section by changing the number somewhat; and I have an amendment which I shall endeavor to offer providing that these officers shall have at least the pay, rank, and emoluments of majors of cavalry. If a general or major-general of the Army desires to detail for service on his staff some excellent captain or lieutenant, I think it but fair that in going to this new position where the duties are increased and the expenses inevitably enlarged the young officer detailed should have a little more pay. Suppose this case—and I may as well say it is an actual case—there is an officer now on staff duty, a man very highly prized by his general, who served during the war of the rebellion and rose to the rank of colonel, a very brave and capable officer I am told; I do not know him and never saw him. For the sake of continuing in the Army (for he had fallen in love with the military service, and had deranged his plans in civil life by entering the war) he consented, because he could do no better, to take the place of a lieutenant in the regular Army. As we know, promotion is very slow; of course it is slower and slower as we continue these reductions of the Army. It may be years before this man will become even a captain. But his general, commanding his services during the late war, wanted him to continue in the regular service, and he put him upon his staff. He is now enjoying the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel, as he did during the war. By this bill you reduce him to the rank, pay, and emoluments of a first lieutenant. I say that you can never have officers of the Army such as you ought to have if you treat them in this way. You must pay some sort of consideration to rank. Rank may be nothing in your estimation if you have never been in the service; and even if you have, you may care nothing about it. But when a man expects to serve in the Army during his life-time, he likes to see before him the prospect of becoming perhaps a captain at thirty, a major at forty, a lieutenant-colonel at fifty, a colonel at sixty. It is very slow work at best. You would not be satisfied with such advancement in civil life. But do not shut the door to even this slow advancement. If you want a good Army system you must have one with these possibilities of promotion.

There are one or two more very vicious sections in this bill; for instance, sections 13 and 14, more particularly section 14, which provides for a mode of paying the Army by checks or drafts. The provision is—

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, all muster and pay rolls, when made out, shall be forwarded to the paymaster of the department for which such muster and pay rolls are made out; and the said paymaster shall make out drafts, drawn on the Treasury of the United States, for the amount due to each person respectively whose name shall appear on said muster and pay rolls; and each of said drafts shall be made payable to the person who shall be entitled to receive such amount.

In other words, this is an attempt to have a paymaster sit down here in Washington, make out his pay-roll, draw a large bundle of checks or drafts and send them out to Louisville or to San Antonio or to Pembina or to Cheyenne, to be delivered there to the soldiers. It is expected that we are to save something in this way. And then the number of paymasters is cut down to thirty. I cannot see that it is necessary to argue to any man who has ever been in the service the unwisdom of that provision. The soldier wants his money for three purposes: he wants some of it to expend during the next month or two or three or four months; he wants part of it to send home; and under the wise provisions of law now existing he wants another part to leave in the hands of the paymaster as a deposit on interest.

We have a very admirable statute which has been doing good service in the Army providing that a soldier may leave part of his pay, not less than five dollars at a time, in the hands of the paymaster to be put on interest and paid to him at the end of his term of service. Here is one of the little blank-books which the paymaster keeps for that purpose. The blank is as follows:

——, ——, 187–.

Received this day —— dollars from —— ——, Company —, ——, U. S. —, for deposit under act of May 15, 1872.

—— ——,
Paymaster, U. S. A.

Attest:
—— ——.
—— ——,
Commanding Company.

This account is kept with the soldier. At the end of the time the man is paid in full, with 4 per cent. interest. The soldiers in the regular Army are leaving money in the hands of the paymasters at the rate of $25,000 a month under that provision. The deposits are constantly increasing as the soldiers become familiar with the law. It is a useful one. It is a great check on desertion.

This is one only of half a dozen of the many wise provisions introduced from time to time in the Army for the sake of giving some sort of pride and character to the common soldier. If you are going to maintain an Army you must do more in that direction. Now you will break up the proposed provision of this bill. The paymaster cannot tell at the distance of Washington from Cheyenne or Pembina how much the soldier wants to leave on deposit in this sort of savings-bank, how much cash he wants to spend, and how much to send home. You will break up this savings fund, one of the wisest provisions made for the Army.

How is it going to work under the most favorable circumstances? Suppose you pay a company of soldiers at Pembina. The sutler in two days will have every one of these checks at from 10 to 40 per cent. discount. You cannot devise a more perfect scheme to rob the soldier of his wages. That will be the case upon the frontier. But take the best case you can imagine. Take the case of Governor's Island, in New York Harbor. You send down checks to pay off two hundred soldiers there; what is the result? In two days the checks will be sold at from 5 to 50 per cent. discount, or you will have to give the soldiers leave to go to the city. They will all want to go. They will want some money to spend and to send home. You will have two hundred soldiers on leave to go to the city to get their money. You know some of the boys will get drunk and some will run away. You will lose a heavy percentage within the next three days. That will be the inevitable result.

Who is going to identify the soldier at the bank? The upshot of it will be that the commanding officer on Governor's Island will have to march the whole squad up to the city to the bank, calling up one by one and identifying them to the cashier that they may receive their pay. Is that cheaper than to have one paymaster go down to Governor's Island and have the men march past his quarters and be paid off? It is idle, wasteful, and tends to the robbery of the soldier. Yes; it is ridiculous; there is no sense whatever in it. We should have that stricken out. The pending amendment, moved by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ALBRIGHT,] I will support for that purpose.

There is a trifling amendment I should like to offer at the end of section 11, intended to correct a little irregularity in the existing law. It so happens an ordnance officer detailed as acting commissary of subsistence cannot receive the extra allowance given to other acting commissaries. It is owing to some defect in the law. In many cases ordnance officers at various arsenals have to perform various functions, and one of them is detailed as acting commissary of subsistence. He ought to have the allowance made to an infantry officer or engineer officer detailed as acting commissary under existing law. It is a matter of interest to some thirty or forty officers in the Army. I propose to amend by providing that the existing provisions of law providing for the compensation of officers detailed as acting assistant commissaries of subsistence shall apply to officers of all branches of the service who shall have been or may be so detailed. With this and a few other amendments I may vote for the bill, but I will not promise to do it even then.

Mr. DONNAN. Mr. Speaker, at this late hour of the day, when we are at the last month of the session, I deem it unnecessary to occupy any length of time in the discussion of the question before the House as to whether we shall have an army somewhat reduced from its present establishment, or, as was suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] a reduction equivalent to no army at all. I shall content myself with simply calling the attention of the House to two or three points in the bill. I think the major portion of its provisions will meet with the approval of the House, and that perhaps with explanation, we shall be able to arrive at a wise and favorable conclusion in regard to them.

I desire to call attention first, and only for a moment, to the provision which has just been attacked by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] who has just taken his seat, that in regard to the pay of the Army. I voted in the committee for this provision; but it is only an experiment. The committee are striving to get at some more economical mode of paying the Army. The disbursements of the Army last year were only a little over $13,000,000, and yet it required more than $328,000 to pay them. The disbursements for pensions amounted to over $30,000,000, and the percentage for the payment of that amount was a little over half what it cost to pay the Army. It takes now about one and a half paymasters to a regiment to pay the Army. The committee thought that there ought to be some remedy for this expensive mode of payment, and they believe that it was wise to make this experiment so that the Army might be paid as the pensioners of the country are paid; but I beg the House to remark the care with which the committee has prescribed that the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, in cases where troops are located at remote points, or where payments as hereinbefore provided would work hardship to the men, direct payment in currency, as heretofore. I hope, therefore, that the House will sustain this provision of the bill in order to test this question as an experiment whether we cannot devise some more economical way of paying the Army than the present mode. If we can do so we shall be able largely to reduce the Paymaster's Corps in the Army.

I desire now to call the attention of the House to that portion of the bill to which I am most seriously opposed. I should be quite well satisfied that this bill might become a law with the exception of those sections in relation to the staff corps of the Army. Will any member of this House tell me that the duties of the staff corps to-day in the different departments of the Army are largely increased above what they were in 1860? I think every member will agree with me that they are not materially changed; and yet, sir, to-day you have a largely increased staff corps compared with what it was in 1860. Then you had but one brigadier-general, eleven colonels, ten lieutenant-colonels, seventy-four majors, one hundred and forty-six captains, and seventy first lieutenants, constituting the entire staff corps, and amounting in all to three hundred and fourteen.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I would ask the gentleman if the duties of the staff corps were not largely increased during the war?

Mr. DONNAN. The duties of the staff corps would necessarily be increased with the increase of the Army, and they were necessarily increased when our volunteer army was swelled to over a million men; but now that the Army has been reduced from a million and a half men to twenty-five thousand men, why should you maintain any such staff corps as you had during the war or immediately upon its close, when you had more than twice as large an army as now proposed?

I was calling the attention of the House to what will be the organization and size of the staff under the pending bill, if it becomes a law. Under the provisions of this bill you will have six brigadier-generals at the head of the different staff corps, seventeen colonels, thirty-two lieutenant-colonels, one hundred and forty-one majors, one hundred and fifty-four captains, and one hundred and forty-seven first lieutenants, making a total of four hundred and ninety-seven. That will be an increase of brigadier-generals of five, an increase of colonels of six, an increase of lieutenant-colonels of twenty-two, an increase of majors of sixty-seven, an increase of captains of eight, and an increase of first lieutenants of seventy-five, making an increase of officers since 1860 in the staff corps department of one hundred and eighty-three.

Now, those members of the House who were members of the last Congress will recollect that this question was quite distinctly brought before us on a proposition to authorize the President to appoint a paymaster-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general. The position was then taken that the heads of the staff corps ought to be reduced in rank, and that the staff corps department ought to be reduced to somewhere nearly, if not quite, where they were prior to the breaking out of the rebellion; and although the Senate disagreed with the House upon that question, yet when it went to a committee of conference and was considered there it was readily conceded that the staff corps ought to be fixed nearly where it was in 1860, and that the chiefs of these corps should only have the pay and emoluments of a colonel.

Let me say that when we reach these several sections I propose to submit amendments reducing the heads of the staff corps to the grade of colonel. Let me say further that the bill does not propose to disgrade any of the present occupants of these positions who are brigadier-generals, who were distinguished officers in the late war, and who were promoted in view of their merits. It is proposed that they shall fill these positions during life or until resignation. But I hope the House will take the ground that whenever vacancies occur in the different corps the appointees as chiefs of those corps shall only have the rank of colonel and their subordinates corresponding rank. Further, I hope the House will agree with me that promotion ought to be most rapid in the line of the Army, but by the proposed establishment you render promotion most rapid in the staff corps.

We will have men seeking these positions, which are far easier, more acceptable, and more sought after than others; positions in the city at the seat of Government rather than in the field, where men have to endure the hardships of the frontier.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. COBURN] reminds me that he desires to call the previous question on this bill. I will therefore yield the floor to him, with the understanding that as we reach the different sections I have his consent to offer the amendments I have suggested, so as to bring these staff corps to the grades I have indicated.

Mr. STRAWBRIDGE. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. COBURN. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in section 12 after the word "surgeons" and before the words "with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors:" "those having served thirty years and upward from the date of their original entry into service shall have the rank, pay, and legal allowances of colonels; those having served twenty years and upward from the date of their original entry into service shall have the rank, pay, and legal allowance of lieutenant-colonels; and all other surgeons."

Mr. COBURN. I do not yield to allow that to be offered; only to be read. I now call the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

NICHOLAS FOUQUE AND MARC ANTOINE FOUQUE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 2860, for the relief of the heirs of Nicholas Fouque and Marc Antoine Fouque; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report accompanying the same ordered to be printed.

NICHOLAS JOSÉ MEVRIMET.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3527) for the restoration of the property of Nicholas José Mevrimet; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill for the reduction of the Army, the question being upon the motion for the previous question.

Mr. MCKEE. Are there any other amendments to be offered?

The SPEAKER. There are two amendments pending now, one by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] and one by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ALBRIGHT;] those are all that the rules permit to be offered.

Mr. MCKEE. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order if the previous question is not seconded.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I move the bill be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was not agreed to upon a division, ayes 32, noes not counted.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered.

AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER announced the following as members of the committee authorized by the resolution adopted on yesterday in regard to affairs in Arkansas:

Mr. POLAND of Vermont, Mr. WARD of Illinois, Mr. WOODFORD of New York, Mr. SAYLER of Ohio, and Mr. SLOSS of Alabama.

PATENTS, TRADE-MARKS, AND COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3528) amending the law relating to patents, trade-marks, and copyrights; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1560) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,'" approved March 3, 1873;

An act (H. R. No. 1590) to provide for the better protection of the frontier settlements of Texas against Indian and Mexican depredations;

An act (H. R. No. 2782) to extend the time to pre-emptors on the public lands in the State of Minnesota to make final payment;

An act (H. R. No. 2999) for the relief of Henry A. Webster, V. B. McCollum, and A. Colby, of Washington Territory, pre-emptors on the Makah Indian reservation; and

An act (H. R. No. 3267) changing the name and location of Irasburgh National Bank of Orleans, county of Orleans, State of Vermont.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House a recess is to be taken to-day at half past four o'clock until half past seven o'clock this evening, when the House will hold a session for the consideration of the tariff bill, no other business whatever to be in order. The hour of half past four o'clock has now arrived, and the House will accordingly take a recess.

The House took a recess until half past seven p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS taking the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

TARIFF AND INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume consideration of the bill amending the customs and internal-revenue laws.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. TYNER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. When the committee rose last evening they were in the act of dividing on an amendment relative to the duty on Moisic iron. The committee is now very thin; and it would not be proper to try to get a division. I therefore suggest that we turn over to that part of the bill relating to internal revenue, on which I think there will not be much debate. We might go on with that upon the understanding that we shall return to the pending amendment as soon as the committee is full.

Mr. DURHAM. I object; I insist on the regular order.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I suggest that we take up such parts of the internal-revenue provisions as may be passed without objection.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The difficulty is that gentlemen who may be interested in that part of the bill did not expect it to be reached for an hour, and for that reason probably are not here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] to object to anything but proceeding regularly with the consideration of the bill. The Chair will therefore announce that when the committee rose last evening an amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] was pending upon which a rising vote had been taken and a further count demanded. The Chair directs that the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the thirtieth paragraph of said section in relation to the duty on Moisic iron; and from and after the passage of this act the duty on Moisic iron, of whatever condition, grade, or stage of manufacture, shall be the same as on all other species of iron of like condition, grade, or stage of manufacture.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order. On the pending amendment the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] had demanded a further count. Is that demand insisted on?

Mr. VANCE. My colleague [Mr. ROBBINS] is not present; I presume he would not insist on a further count.

Mr. DAWES. It is very evident that we cannot have a division at this time.

Mr. VANCE. I withdraw the demand on behalf of my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] suggest that this proposition be passed over to be returned to hereafter?

Mr. MYERS. The amendment was mine and——

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

Mr. MYERS. The amendment was carried by a very large majority.

The CHAIRMAN. If no further count is demanded, the Chair will consider the amendment as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move to amend by inserting after the pending section the following as a new section:

SEC. —. That the second section of the act entitled "An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872, shall be, and is hereby, repealed, it being the intent of this act to restore the duties upon the goods, wares, and merchandise mentioned in said section which were by law levied, collected, and paid prior to the passage of the act of which said section is a part.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I trust the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. PENDLETON] will withdraw his amendment until the committee is fuller.

Mr. PENDLETON. If there is no objection it can be adopted now, and a vote taken on it in the House.

Mr. DAWES. It will come in at the end of the tariff part of the bill just as well as here; and when that part of the bill is reached the committee may be full. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw it for the present.

Mr. PENDLETON. I think this is the most proper place for the amendment, but I do not wish to urge the matter unduly. I will withdraw it if I can have an opportunity to offer it hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. It might be adopted now with an understanding that a vote shall be taken on it in the House. There will be perhaps a vote on this question in some manner in the House.

Mr. PENDLETON. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. LAWRENCE. We are proceeding under a mistake. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] was not agreed to last evening. The RECORD shows (and it agrees with my recollection) that when a vote was taken a majority by the sound appeared to be for it, but a call was made for a division——

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will read the RECORD on the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. MYERS; and upon a division there were—ayes 94, noes 30; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to raise the question that the majority vote last evening was in the negative. The RECORD, however, shows that it was in the affirmative. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I have an amendment to offer by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I think it properly comes in here. I move to amend by inserting, as a separate section, after the pending section the following:

SEC. —. That the duty on jute-butts shall be six dollars per ton: Provided, That all machinery adapted exclusively to manufactures from the fiber of the ramie, jute, or flax may be admitted into the United States free of duty for two years from the 1st of July, 1874: And provided further, That bags, other than of American manufacture, in which grain shall have been actually exported from the United States may be returned to the United States free of duty, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

As originally prepared the three provisions went together. When this first clause was left out the others were attached to section 7 as the only proper remaining place. I move to strike out the provisions in section 7 and to put it all together as the committee prepared the section. I move its adoption.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move to strike out "six" and insert "ten."

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my amendment in order to move it when we have a fuller House. If there is to be discussion, however, let it go on.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his amendment or not?

Mr. KASSON. As the committee is disposed to discuss it I will let it remain.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move to strike out "6" and insert "10."

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to a protective tariff; but as the policy has been adopted in previous legislation by this Congress, I do not think I would be doing justice to my constituents unless I endeavored to secure part of the benefits of that policy to them, especially as they have to pay an enhanced price for those articles upon which we have put a higher duty in order to protect their manufacture in this country. On principle the agricultural interest of the country should be entitled to as much consideration and to the fostering care of the Government as any other branch of industry. It is one, I might say, entitled to the very first consideration, because all other branches of industry depend so much on the amount of raw material which is produced, that if you paralyze the hand of the producer every other interest must languish and die with it.

I believe if we must have a protective tariff and high duties on different articles, then that tariff ought to be distributed fairly and justly over the whole country, so that every interest should be benefited as nearly alike as possible. I have introduced this amendment in order that this Congress might take into consideration the agricultural interest of the country as well as the manufacturing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, many members of this House are aware the production of hemp and flax was one of the most important and valuable in many of the Western States. It was the best crop years back which could be made in that section of country. It was certain, subject to no blight, and there were thousands of farmers engaged in this production. That interest, however, has declined, and unless something is done to foster it, it will be abandoned entirely. Thousands of dollars invested in machinery will have to lie idle or go to waste. I am told by farmers in my district, who have been hemp-growers, it is impossible in its production to make it meet the ordinary expenses of raising it, or at least it leaves no margin for any profit to the producer. These farmers have tried different crops, but notwithstanding their efforts they have found no other which will produce equal results as when hemp and flax were the chief productions of that section of country. On account of the extraordinary fertility of the soil in the Western States it is peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of hemp and flax. This is particularly so in the district I have the honor to represent. We have as fine hemp land as can be found in this or any other country. If you are to have a protective tariff let us give the farmers engaged in this production such encouragement that they will go on and increase the production of this most valuable and remunerative crop. If we are to have protection on articles which are manufactured in different parts of the country, it is nothing but justice, it is nothing but fair, it is nothing but equitable if any benefits result from it that these benefits shall be distributed fairly all over the country, and that the agricultural interest shall be protected as well as any other interest in the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, from 1862 to 1872 the tariff upon jute-butts was $6 per ton. Under that rate of duty the amount received from customs started in at $133.95. From that it regularly increased year after year, until in 1872 it amounted to more than $118,000. In 1873 nearly 5,000 tons of jute-butts were admitted free of duty. The estimated loss of revenue to the Government was nearly $300,000. I send to the Clerk's desk statistics on this subject from the Bureau of Statistics to be read and made a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement of the amount of duty derived from jute-butts for the fiscal years from 1863 to August 1, 1873, inclusive.

1863	$133 95
1864	408 52
1865	1,382 74
1866	11,260 12
1867	12,918 60
1868	8,967 60
1869	34,272 15
1870	54,534 19
1871	78,843 00
1872	118,718 78
1 month of 1873, (August)	3,522 01
Total	324,961 66

Admitted free of duty in 1873, 4,876 11/20 tons; estimated loss of revenue $292,564.20.

We have no statistics of the duty on this article previous to the fiscal year 1863, it being included in the "unenumerated."

EDWARD YOUNG,
Chief of Bureau of Statistics.

Hon. H. B. SAYLER, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. It will be observed that under the $6 rate there was a rapidly increasing revenue to the Government, and at the same time there was a very rapid development of the production of flax in this country. Jute-butts come directly in competition with the tow or lint of flax, and throughout the section of country where I am more particularly acquainted than anywhere else the production of flax increased in a very rapid ratio, because of the fact that the straw brought from $5 to $10 an acre. But by placing this article upon the free-list it took from the products of our farming community the production of this commodity and utterly destroyed the value of the flax straw. Every flax-mill has been shut down for at least eighteen months past. My idea of a tariff upon matters of this kind is that we should blend the two conditions of an increase of home production and the receipt of revenue, and at the rate of $6 per ton our experience from 1862 to 1872 has shown that we achieved both objects, receiving a rapidly increasing amount of duty from this article and at the same time rapidly developing the growth of flax throughout the country.

I have been requested to state what jute-butts are. I suppose that most gentlemen know what they are. Jute-butts are the lint from the stump of the jute, stripped and put in packages, and shipped to this country from Southern India where it is grown, and the shippers generally prefer it as ballast to anything else. I am advised that shippers will carry it at almost a nominal rate if it be put on board their vessels without expense to them, because it serves as ballast better than anything else they can use for ballast.

Now we have an opportunity in the light of experience to bring to the revenue a considerable sum of money, and at the same time to encourage a very large agricultural interest in this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments already pending.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I renew the amendment.

During and since the war the cultivation of flax has increased very rapidly in the Western States. The oil is extracted from the seed and the oil-cake exported to England, where it is used principally in feeding cattle during the last six months of their life. The American farmer has not observed the superior value of oil-cake for feeding purposes, or not a pound would be exported. Oil-mills have been put in operation in many counties of Iowa, and some mills have been built and operated in manufacturing tow from the flax-straw after the seed had ripened. The mill-owners paid about $8 a ton for the straw. The extent of the culture of flax has increased so fast that the census of 1870 furnishes no intelligent data from which to calculate the acreage at present, but in one county the owners of one mill have loaned to farmers 27,000 bushels of flax-seed to still further increase its area. Since the import duty was taken off jute-butts the tow-mills have stopped and the straw has rotted in the fields. This is an industry that should be encouraged for several reasons, the most obvious of which is that we paid for flax-seed in 1873 $4,318,030, the amount imported being 2,936,421 bushels, and of raw flax 41,171 tons, at a cost of $1,137,737. We also imported to take the place of the flax-straw that is permitted to go to waste 35,360 tons of jute-butts, costing $1,197,773, and raw hemp 20,573 tons, costing $3,347,973, an aggregate of over $10,000,000.

The United States in 1870 produced 27,133,034 pounds of flax, 1,730,444 bushels of flaxseed, 12,746 tons of hemp; in 1873, 2,500,000 bushels and 62,500,000 pounds of fiber.

A further reason why encouragement should be given to the cultivation of flax and kindred plants is that it will be an additional means of diversifying the industries of our rural population, both in the production of the plant and the manufacture of the seed and fiber. It would not be possible to raise the large quantities that are now raised were it not for the high state of perfection to which invention and application have brought our farming machinery and the readiness with which our implements can be used in preparing the land as well as harvesting the crop. The great flax-raising country in Europe is Russia, where machinery is very rude but labor is very plenty and very cheap. British India produces flax extensively with labor at ten cents per day, and sends us jute-butts gathered at this price free of duty.

In Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa there are about ninety tow-mills, with a capacity of about 8,000 tons per annum. Since the war the importation of jute from India has driven western flax-tow from the market, with the exception of a light demand in the rope and bagging factories of Louisville and Saint Louis. In mixing with hemp 59,000,000 pounds have been wasted during the last year, because jute free of duty was cheaper.

The hemp crop that once amounted to 30,000 tons in Kentucky and Missouri has fallen off to 7,500 which could be easily restored by proper encouragement. It seems strange that this industry that might be fostered in the Northwest till all the fiber from which to manufacture the sacks necessary to handle our grain might be prepared, and all the flaxseed necessary to meet the demands of home consumption at least might be produced, is permitted to languish while we pay ten millions annually for foreign seeds and fibers.

As illustrative of the position flax and hemp occupies in the agricultural economy of the leading European grain-producing country, the exports of flax-tow and linseed from Russia between 1844 and 1848 was 17,500,000 rubles, (1 ruble equal to 75 cents;) from 1849 to 1853, 20,500,000, and from 1860 to 1865 it amounted to 33,500,000 rubles. In 1869 the flax production of Russia was estimated at 432,000,000 pounds, one-half of which is exported, and the flaxseed at 900,000,000. Russia exports to England, France, and Belgium.

Hemp is cultivated in great part in Central Russia, and its production reaches 252,000,000 pounds. The export of hemp in 1869 reached 4,500,000 rubles from the Baltic ports.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment. I think the House have only to understand this question to come to a conclusion upon it. It is supposed that jute-butts upon the one side are used as ballast, and on the other side that they come in competition with flax. Pardon me, sir; but in my judgment—and we import the manufacture to a small extent in my district—neither is true. Jute-butts are used exactly the opposite to ballast. They come from India, from whence a large quantity of linseed and saltpeter is imported, and the jute-butts are used as a deck-load on account of their lightness, precisely as when we ship granite we put in bits of cord-wood among the granite to lighten up the load, and to prevent its being so heavy that in the pitch of the sea it will go through the bottom of the ship. It is not possible to bring the linseed, out of which our oils for paint are made from India, without jute-butts, and the use of jute-butts here is to spin up the fiber into a coarse cloth, known as gunny-cloth, and the fiber is used to adulterate manila, but it bears the same relation to manila that shoddy does to wool. It runs in competition in some degree to the tow of flax, as the gunny-cloth made in India by the natives out of this material is used very largely at the South and West for putting up or bagging cotton.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Made out of jute?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, out of jute. The gunny-cloth made at home is made out of flax, and the gunny-cloth as it is sold abroad is a coarse bagging made out of jute. There is this peculiarity about the jute bag, that it is the only bag in which you can put corn and not have it sweat. It is like putting corn in a net. And so in putting corn up in bags it is found that jute is the best of all things to make the bags of, that gunny-bags are the best for that purpose. The cotton and tow sacks are found to be too tight, and make the corn sweat. So you must look out, some of you gentlemen that go against jute, or the farmers of the West will make you sweat in the same way that too tight bagging makes corn sweat.

Now, this gunny-cloth, being a very cheap article, is very largely used for bagging cotton. It answers all the better now, although formerly it was regarded as a little too tender; but since they have got to putting up cotton with iron hoops for binders it is now strong enough. The only objection to it, as a material to put up cotton in, is that it is too open, and the cotton is apt to catch fire from the sparks getting through the cloth.

[Here the hammer fell].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would like to say a few words more.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will my friend yield to me to make a request?

Mr. KELLEY. Not in my five minutes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I only want to ask permission, when I come back from the cars where I am about to go to see my family off, to offer an amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Go and see your family off, and I will make no objection to your offering an amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is all I wish to ask.

Mr. KELLEY. Since the invention of Whitney's cotton-gin there there has been nothing which has so much affected the fibrous industries of the country as the discoveries in the use of the jute and the ramie plant, to the production of both of which the two coasts of our country are specially adapted. Dundee, from being a little sea-side fishing town, has become one of the most remarkable manufacturing cities in the world by having appropriated the manufacture of jute into carpet and other cloths. In Italy the ramie fiber is interwoven with silk, with worsted, with cotton, and with flax, producing in each case an independent and characteristic fibrous article. The culture of that plant is also adapted to the coast of California and the Gulf States in this country.

Jute-butts are more largely used in this country for the making of paper than for the making of fiber; yet they are largely used in fibrous industries, and enormously used in the district of my friend from Brooklyn, [Mr. CROOKE,] being interwoven with manila hemp in the manufacture of cordage.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And making back-hair.

Mr. KELLEY. O, yes; not only for black hair, but for red hair, and hair of all colors.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not black hair, but back-hair.

Mr. KELLEY. Nine-tenths of the beautiful switches hanging at the backs of ladies, which we admire so much as we walk the avenue, are made of jute ingeniously colored. And in one or two instances the insect which is sometimes found in jute, and which is almost like the trichina, has gone from the switch into the real hair, and is said to have penetrated the skull, verifying the theory that all is not hair that waves in the wind from the back of a lady's neck.

When jute-butts were about being put on the free list I united with others in saying to the Committee on Ways and Means and to this House that it would destroy the flax industries in many portions of the country, and my prediction has been fully verified. These jute-butts, or butts clipped from near the root or stump of the tree, which yield a coarse fiber, have supplanted the flax tow, which is now being burnt up by the ton and by the acre. So long as flax was cultivated and they could use the tow for bagging and the seed for oil, the cultivation was profitable. But when they ceased to be able to use the tow, because of the competition of jute-butts, the production of flax fell off materially. Gentlemen from the Western States can tell you how the bagging factories and the bag factories of their States have been embarrassed by the interference of this plant.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. They have been almost entirely stopped.

Mr. KELLEY. Now, sir, so far as jute is used in my district it is used for making paper, and my constituents want it to come in free of duty. But I believe that their interests are involved in maintaining a generous system of protection. Therefore, while I ask Congress to protect their iron and their steel and their other productions, I feel bound to stand up here and in their name vote protection to the few materials raised by the farmers which can be protected. And for that purpose I ask that jute-butts be taken from the free list and put under a duty of $6 a ton.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this duty, whether it be $10 or $6; and my first reason is that according to my view Congress should make up its mind to have on this subject of the tariff a policy which should last—well, to be reasonable, say five years. I open the Congressional Globe and find that in April, 1870, this very question was discussed very fully, member after member taking part in the debate; and although I have not looked far enough to find out the result, my impression is that you settled the question by admitting jute entirely free of duty.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. In 1862 the duty was put at $6 and remained at that I believe until 1872.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I understand there was a change in 1870 and a change in 1872.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I do not know anything about a change in 1870; I know that in 1862 the duty was fixed at $6.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Well, it appears that the tariff with respect to this article has been changed twice within the last four years. The last change was to put it on the free list. It is now free of duty. I speak for my district, as every man here speaks for his district or section. In my district there are large interests engaged in the manufacture of manila, chiefly into paper. We import this jute and use it in our manufactures. Now, it is proposed to impose this duty, not by a bill which has been printed and before the House, of which my constituents could have notice. The bill which was laid before us in print led me to suppose that my district was not to be interfered with in any way by this change in the tariff. But I learned last night that the committee had privately decided—as privately as usual—had decided quietly, without the knowledge of the rest of us, upon an amendment imposing a duty of $6 per ton on this article, tons of which are used in my district every week.

Is this the way you are going to treat the interests of the country? I am not here begging for any additional duty. I am not haggling about tariff or free trade or anything of the sort. I have never, since I have been on this floor, begged an additional duty to protect anybody in my district; but I will say in behalf of New England, as I might say in behalf of any other part of the country, "Make your duty to suit yourselves; I do not ask any additional duty for my part of the country; fix the duties to suit yourselves, and stick to them." When you have fixed your duties, stand by them ten or fifteen years—long enough to allow people to build an engine-house, erect their engines, and start a new manufacture. I say that this fluctuating, dodging legislation, under which an article is for two or three years subject to duty, and then for two or three years free of duty, is a wrong to the country.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The duty of $6 per ton on this article was taken off in 1872.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Yes, sir; we have made a change with reference to this interest within the last two years; and now it is proposed to put the duty on again. This bill may pass here to-night, may be passed by the Senate to-morrow night; and within a week we may thus change the price of all the articles that those engaged in this branch of business have on hand; we may change in this way the market value of every ton of jute that is now on the way from Calcutta, or is in bond at New York, or is in the factory. We may change the price of every pound of paper that the manufacturer has on hand. What satisfaction or safety can there be in engaging in manufactures under these circumstances?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MONROE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order.

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw my amendment if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] will renew it.

Mr. MONROE. I renew the amendment. I entirely agree with my distinguished friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that a constantly changing or fluctuating policy in regard to the tariff is very undesirable. We only differ as to when we should allow changes of this kind to be made. The speech which the gentleman from Connecticut has just made against frequent changes in the tariff is just about such a speech as a colleague of mine from Ohio, (Mr. Upson,) who then represented a part of the district which I now represent, made when Congress proposed to take the duty off jute-butts. That was the time the speech was very appropriate. That was the time when the fluctuating policy in regard to this interest was adopted.

With this duty upon jute-butts there sprang up in two counties of my present district, and in other counties of the State of Ohio, and in other States of the West, a very large manufacturing interest which employed hundreds of people, which added to the profit of farming on account of the increased breadth of land devoted to flax culture; but when the duty was taken off jute-butts by the last Congress, the fact was—whatever my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] may say as to the logical connection—the fact was that those mills were shut up and this most important interest was destroyed.

Now, sir, I merely ask that a very short letter which was sent to my colleague in the last Congress from manufacturers of cotton-bagging, as it is called, from flax, be read to the House, as it contains several important facts illustrating this whole subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

CUYAHOGA FALLS, OHIO, March 28, 1872.

DEAR SIR: Your esteemed favor of 26th instant, is at hand. Our business is now confined to the manufacture of bagging. The small duty levied on jute and jute-butts has resulted in great benefit to Ohio. Previous to 1867 the flax-straw of this State was mostly burned as valueless, but the duty on jute and jute-butts caused machinery to be employed for producing the flax fiber, and we now use in our establishment 2,600,000 pounds annually, or the produce of full 10,500 acres of land.

We employ about one hundred and twenty persons, and at least six hundred are measurably dependent on our business. The value of our annual product is about $187,000, sold mostly in the markets of Cincinnati, Louisville, Memphis, and New Orleans, but occasionally in New York when we come in competition with manufacturers of jute and jute-butts, whose united efforts are now making to get jute and jute-butts placed on the free list. There are eight other flax-bagging manufactories in Ohio, two in Illinois, one in Indiana, and three in Kentucky. The hemp manufacturers in Kentucky and Missouri are equally interested in having the duty retained on importations of jute and jute-butts. We have abandoned the business of yarn and twine, but hope for the continuance of its manufacture in other hands, and that the present duties on flax, hemp, and jute goods and twine will not be lessened.

Very respectfully, your obliged,

JOHN HINDE & SONS.

Hon. W. H. UPSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. MONROE. I will say this was a remonstrance coming from manufacturers engaged in this industry against the fluctuating policy which my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] as well as myself condemns.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] and myself are both protectionists, but we arrive at it in a different way. His is to pile up duties on manufactured articles and mine is to take it off the raw material. My theory is, every raw material in the world upon which we can bestow our industry and which is not raised here should come in free. In that way we arrive indirectly at all the protection which my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania gets by piling it up on the manufactured article. When jute-butts were made free two years ago they entered into the manufacture of paper and entered into the manufacture of grain-bags and bags for cotton. Of course if jute-butts come in free and enter into the manufacture of paper they make paper cheaper. They make every country newspaper in the land cheaper.

Our friends who raise flax say they make grain-bags so cheap that they cannot make a bag of tow of flax unless they make it for nothing. Therefore the object of putting $10 a ton on jute-butts is to raise the cost of every grain-bag that every farmer uses just 40 per cent. in order that they may sell grain-bags made of tow 40 per cent. higher to the farmer. That is just what it is. That is the purpose and effect of it and nothing more. If you put this duty on to enable you to sell grain-bags made of tow of flax, then it makes these grain-bags so much higher to the man who raises the grain. You just put this tax additional upon every farmer.

So far as the East is concerned, I do not think it will help them one particle. My distinguished friend from Philadelphia who comes here and sacrifices the interest of his constituents upon the altar of patriotism does it to the extent of 44 tons a year. That is all. He will survive such a sacrifice as that.

Mr. KELLEY. How does the gentleman get at his figures?

Mr. DAWES. I get them out of the book.

Mr. KELLEY. That may be the amount directly imported into Philadelphia.

Mr. DAWES. We ought to understand exactly this proposition to put 10 per cent. duty on jute-butts. It makes every grain-bag and every bag for cotton 40 cents more, and it enables you to make it of tow of flax, and sell it 40 cents higher. It enables you to use the tow of flax, but the men who raise the grain will have to pay the tax on the grain-bags they use.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the gentleman get the 40 per cent?

Mr. DAWES. I will tell you.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MONROE. I withdraw the amendment which I renewed.

Mr. KASSON. If any other gentleman wishes to speak upon this subject I desire to give them the opportunity, having been authorized to represent the views of the committee on this question; but I desire to ask for a vote as early as possible.

Mr. HEREFORD. I renew the amendment to strike out "six" and insert "ten," so as to make the duty on jute-butts $10 a ton. The gentleman from Massachusetts complained that this House seemed to have no definite policy on the subject of the tariff. I desire to call his attention to the fact that during the last presidential campaign one of the political parties of the country, that upon which Mr. Greeley stood, laid down the platform that the question of the tariff was remitted to the people of each congressional district.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Shake not thy gory locks at me.

Mr. HEREFORD. I see that in this House both democrats and republicans are verifying every day and in every speech and in every amendment offered the verity and truth of that platform thus laid down, and that is that each congressional district is to be governed on the question of the tariff according to its own interests. We see that if it is to the interest of one congressional district to have a high duty on jute, the member from that congressional district, be he democrat or republican, votes for a high tariff on jute, and vice versa with each congressional district throughout the United States. During the discussion on the tariff in this Congress last evening and this evening, the wisdom of that platform has been demonstrated and acknowledged by the representatives of both of the great parties of this country.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The California delegation have been instructed to vote in favor of free trade so far as jute and burlaps are concerned. I hope the amendment will not prevail. In California we differ from the farmers in many other States in this, that we are compelled to ship our grain around Cape Horn many thousands of miles by sea, and therefore we ship it in sacks and not in bulk, as the western farmers do. Consequently we are compelled to purchase sacks, and burlaps for the manufacture of sacks, at Dundee, in Scotland. Now, we are instructed by our Legislature to vote to admit sacking material free of import duty. It will cost the farmers of California nearly $1,600,000 duty on burlaps and grain-sacks required for shipping our present crop. As the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] has remarked, we all vote here to represent our individual interests, or, in other words, the interests of our respective districts.

Mr. BIERY. When the question of wine was before the House the gentleman was not in favor of free trade.

Mr. LUTTRELL. No, sir; it is our interest to raise it, and we are crusaders there.

Mr. BIERY. Then the gentleman is for protecting the interests of his own district, but for free trade everywhere else.

Mr. LUTTRELL. We were then representing the crusader interest. We wanted to stop the importation of the adulterated article and produce a pure article of wine, and now we want to admit free the articles burlaps and jute so that we may manufacture our own sacks and give employment to our own mechanics.

Mr. BIERY. If the gentleman was instructed to vote for free trade, why did he go against free trade in wine?

Mr. LUTTRELL. I was instructed, and so were my colleagues, [Mr. PAGE and Mr. HOUGHTON,] who represent agricultural districts, to vote to admit these articles free, and therefore I shall be compelled to vote against the amendment, and hope it will not pass.

Mr. KASSON. I now call for a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment originally offered by Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, and renewed by Mr. HEREFORD; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I beg the attention of the committee for a single moment, inasmuch as I have undertaken to represent the views of the committee on this question. The amendment proposed by the bill is to put this duty at the rate of $6 per ton, and that amendment is simply a restoration of the duty as it remained from 1861 to 1872; perhaps it was once at $5, but I think it was always at $6 a ton. Under that stimulus our farmers commenced raising flax in the West to a very large degree, and on my motion in either the Thirty-eighth or Thirty-ninth Congress, that Congress authorized the introduction of machinery for the manufacture of flax, which they understood well abroad and which we did not understand here, free of duty for one year. Upon the passage of that act, the farmers of the West commenced this manufacture and developed the finest manufacture of the fibers of flax. And this interest grew into a large one in the Northwest. We believed that the duty of $6 a ton would be kept up, but by one of those sudden spasms of change, to which the gentleman from Connecticut has worthily and properly alluded, Congress suddenly cut off the duty of $6 a ton and let jute-butts in entirely free.

Since that time, as we learn from our own constituents throughout a large region of country, they have stopped saving the fiber of flax and raise flax for nothing but the seed. The agricultural interest has a just cause of complaint against this action of Congress. The proposition now is to give that interest the same protection now that they had before, in order to save the enormous waste of the fiber of the flax.

Jute-butts are used largely in the manufacture of paper. The grain-sacks spoken of here are not now manufactured in this country, but they are imported. The farmers pay 40 per cent. duty on their grain-sacks.

Mr. DAWES. Let us have a little arithmetic. The dutiable value of jute is $37 per ton, and you propose to put on a duty of $10 per ton.

Mr. KASSON. That does not even make a duty of 40 per cent. I desire to give this protection to the agricultural interest so far as to restore this moderate duty of $6 per ton.

Mr. EAMES. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] by inserting after the word "machinery" the words "not now manufactured in the United States." The proposition submitted by the gentleman from Iowa embraces two things, in one part it is a protection of $6 per ton to flax and ramie and jute, and in the next line he proposes to strike down another industry by allowing to be imported free into this country machinery to manufacture these fibers. I do not myself know what kind of machinery is used for this manufacture. If it is the same kind of machinery used in spinning cotton and weaving wool, then there is a very large interest in the section of country which I represent, and I think in New York, and I know there is a very large interest in Massachusetts that ought to be protected.

I have endeavored since I have been here, and these questions have come up in relation to protection, to follow one principle, and only one, because I believe that principle followed out will inure to the best interests of all the industries of the country. That principle is to discriminate in raising revenues in favor of home industry, whatever it may be, whether a manufacturing, a mechanical, or an agricultural interest. And if the home production of flax, or ramie, or jute, needs protection against the foreign production, whatever protection is needed to enable the article to be produced in this country I am in favor of giving that protection to it.

In passing upon this matter I hope this Committee of the Whole will be consistent with itself in any event, and while it protects jute and flax and ramie I hope it will not take off the protection now given to machinery. It should not be taken off; the duty on machinery now is hardly sufficient to enable the workshops in the country to keep going. And if the duty is reduced from what it is now, 35 per cent. on the manufactured article, you will shut up every shop and destroy that whole industry. If the machinery used in the manufacture of this fiber is the ordinary machinery used in the spinning of cotton and the manufacture of woolen cloths, then I hope the amendment I have offered will be adopted, so as to limit the importation of this machinery to that which is not manufactured in the United States.

Mr. PAGE. I hope this amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] will not be adopted. It has been suggested by my colleague that the California Representatives have been instructed by the Legislature of our State to oppose any duty on jute-butts and burlaps. Sir, it does not require resolutions of the Legislature of California to convince its Representatives here that this amendment would be a gross injustice to the people of that State.

The grain crop of the State of California for this year is estimated at 30,000,000 bushels of wheat. California uses this article almost entirely for bagging. We are differently situated from almost any other of the grain-producing States. We sell our grain in sacks, all of it, without any exception. The sacks are not returned to the farmer after the grain has been taken to market. The State of California pays annually one and a half million dollars duty on burlaps and other materials from which the sacks are manufactured which are used in that State. I think it would be an act of injustice to adopt this amendment, and lay a duty of $6 per ton on jute, for the purpose of encouraging the interest of a very small portion of the community, imposing a burdensome tax upon the great grain-producing regions of the West. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will be voted down.

Mr. DAWES. I think the committee fully understand this question. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining from the House an order to close debate, unless that can be now done by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the vote can be now taken without further debate.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. EAMES to the amendment of Mr. KASSON, it was agreed to; there being ayes 75, noes not counted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KASSON as amended, there were—ayes 106, noes 42.

Mr. PAGE called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That on and after the date of the passage of this act the importation of the articles enumerated and described in this section shall be exempt from duty; that is to say:

Extract of hemlock bark.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move to amend by inserting the following:

Pease exclusively for seed purposes.

In explanation of this amendment I desire to say——

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that this had better be inserted, if at all, in its alphabetical order.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I would be much pleased to assent to the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, but the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds desire to hold a meeting this evening and my colleagues have been pressing me during the last hour. I have been waiting for an opportunity to offer this amendment, and I must ask a vote on it now. I desire to say in explanation of the amendment that my constituents in the district I have the honor to represent, in common with the whole State of Virginia and all the Southern States, are interested in the introduction of pease for seed purposes. We cannot in that section raise our seed; we are obliged to get them from abroad; and hence we are interested in obtaining them free of duty. There is now a duty of 20 per cent. upon pease for seed purposes, and 10 per cent. upon pease for domestic use. I ask that pease coming into the country for seed purposes exclusively may be placed upon the free list.

Mr. DAWES. I trust the Committee of the Whole will adhere to the rule adopted last night, not to introduce any new matter. This amendment will let in all the seed that can be used throughout the country; and I think a proposition like this, which has not been presented at all to the Committee on Ways and Means, had better be rejected.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, it was agreed to; there being ayes 69, noes not counted.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend by inserting before the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] "alizarine." I have promised to tell the House what this article is. It is a coloring matter made from coal-tar. It has exactly the same chemical properties as madder, which has been put on the free list, and it is right that this should also be there.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by striking out the line "extract of hemlock bark." Mr. Chairman, within the last ten years it has been discovered that this extract can be made from the bark of the hemlock tree, from the limbs, and from the twigs or branches; so that the whole tree may be utilized. In this way hemlock trees in remote and almost inaccessible places may be made productive; tannin may be prepared in the forests by machinery designed for the purpose, and may be taken in condensed form to every part of the Union at so cheap a price as to be used in the tanneries wherever they may be erected.

The duty upon the extract of hemlock bark has been up to this time and during the whole period of these experiments 20 per cent. Hemlock is found growing from Maine all through the northern portions of the United States to Minnesota, all along the Alleghany range through all the Middle States to the Azark Mountains. Throughout all this region a large number of people are engaged in extracting from the hemlock tree this tannin, so that it is now furnished to the tanners of the country at less than half the price of the article before this improved process of making the extract was discovered. In fact until very lately hides that were tanned by the hemlock process had to be sent from the prairie States and the older regions of the country, where there was no hemlock, to the regions where the hemlock grows and then returned to the curriers for the preparation of the leather. There are many thousand people engaged summer and winter (for it may be carried on at all seasons of the year) in the preparation of this extract. There are hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in the machinery necessary to prepare this extract.

Mr. MAYNARD. Where does the importation come from?

Mr. CONGER. It comes across our rivers and lakes from Canada and from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Now, this invention is American. It has been developed among our own citizens, and by it the price of tannin has been reduced more than by any other process before invented. And just at this time when it is becoming almost a universal practice along the frontiers of our Northern and Middle States, where the hemlock grows, for the farmer to cut down the trees and carry the branches and the bark in the winter to wherever the factories are established—just at this time, without any recommendation from any source so far as I have been able to ascertain except a letter from one shoemaking establishment and from two or three Canadians, the Committee on Ways and Means, whose duty it is I believe to protect the new and growing useful industries of the country, propose to put this article upon the free list.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to amend by inserting "and the duty on the extract of hemlock bark shall be 20 per cent. for ten years from June 1, 1874."

Mr. Chairman, the venerable chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means announced to the House in his opening speech that he did not propose to make any great change in the tariff laws, but that he simply proposed to change from ad valorem to specific duties, and to change the phraseology of some laws so that errors which had crept in and the abuses now existing would be corrected. But, lo and behold, with all his innocent eloquence we find he has struck a blow at one of the young and struggling industries of the country which will destroy it. Why, Mr. Chairman, I ask you to look into the face of my venerable friend and see whether you would believe he could knowingly do a wrong; that he could purposely go into my district and drive my neighbors out of their homes and factories, drive them impoverished into the world, and destroy their ability to produce this extract of hemlock bark? My own colleague on the committee [Mr. ROBERTS] could not knowingly do an injustice; any child would in his presence only learn to love him, and if we could break the secrets of his committee I am sure we would find that he did not vote to destroy this industry. Yet this Committee on Ways and Means have gone into my district, and, if successful, would rob my neighbors by taking industry which is their own and giving it to other people. Some of the finest young men I know have put every dollar they are worth in the world into this manufacture, and this bill would if enacted into law take away their all. The duty is 20 per cent., and the profit is but from 5 to 10 per cent. Take off this 20 per cent. duty and you let in foreign productions to an advantage, which would drive every one of the producers into the street. There would be no profit to our Treasury in this. It is to let in from New Brunswick some sixty thousand barrels of the extract of hemlock bark free of duty. Last year the same thing was attempted on a tariff bill, and my constituents learned that these men were holding it for the purpose of bringing it in without payment of duty, and I presume it is the same now.

Mr. Chairman, this is a species of reciprocity with Canada I do not commend. None of our fishermen can go within three miles of the shores of the Dominion of Canada without paying the penalty if they should catch a fish, and yet you propose to open our ports free to Canadians, you propose to allow the Canadians to bring in this extract free and destroy this American industry. And for what? Simply that a few shoemakers in New England may make a few more dollars. I believe the shoemakers in Massachusetts are prosperous, that they are doing well; let other industries also prosper. I doubt whether the shoemakers in New England are very poor. My friend from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] said last night that the poor people of his district wanted the duty on tin reduced, so they might have their houses and barns covered with tin roofing. The poor people elsewhere do not use tin for roofing their houses and barns. The shoemakers in New England are well off. You are coming here now at a time when the Treasury needs revenue to strike down a young industry and at the same time take away a revenue. A host of as noble young men as are in the world have put every dollar they are worth into this business—this bill makes them beggars, and simply to enrich a few shoemakers in Massachusetts. This is not the kind of protection to American industries I advocate.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. The duty on the extract of hemlock bark is 20 per cent. The proposition of the Committee on Ways and Means is to make it free of duty. I was very much pleased in the confusion which has taken place between different gentlemen on this bill to hear the remarks of my friend from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.] On thing is certain about this question of the duty on the extract of hemlock bark. Some gentlemen in favor of the tariff seem to be actuated by the same principle as the lawyer mentioned in the old spelling-book who had an ox gored by another man's bull. Circumstances, Mr. Chairman, alter cases. It depends upon whose ox is gored.

There is a tariff of 15 to 35 cents upon leather which is tanned by this extract of hemlock bark. A good deal is tanned by sumac—a bark which comes from my county—which is the living of some of the poorest people of the whole country. The object of this is to lessen the price of the article by which this leather is tanned. I have not heard a single man on that Committee on Ways and Means propose to take off the duty on leather. We heard a good deal about the enormity of the tariff on jute-butts. I do not hear a single man say a word about taking the duty off leather or off paper except by my honest friend from Pennsylvania, who said he would stand by his principles. He is the first man who said he would stand by principle on this subject. They propose to take the duty off jute-butts, and now it is proposed to take it off the extract of hemlock bark. Why do they not propose to take it off leather?

Mr. HEREFORD. Well, that is part of our platform.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I know it is part of our platform, but as I understand that platform we represent the men who raise the sumac bark which enters into the manufacture of leather, and when you bring this extract from Canada, and Nova Scotia—and last year you imported 167,000 cords of hemlock bark—when you propose to do that, I say that if protection is to be granted let it be on both sides, to the farmers and agriculturists of our country who get this bark and produce this sumac which enters into the manufacture of leather and the leather also. The gentleman asks further protection for the leather interest by giving them this extract free of duty to manufacture leather with, while he does not propose to take one cent off the duty on leather so as to make it cheaper.

Now, I say that when he has the benefit of a tariff for the protection of leather, let the gatherers of sumac in this country and the manufacturers of this extract have the same benefit of a tariff, so that they may be protected to the same extent that he is protected in his leather. It is a bad rule that will not work all round. When these gentlemen who are interested in the manufacture of leather ask that this material shall come in free of duty, let them take off the duty from the manufacture of leather. If we are to have iron and steel free, let us have pocket-knives free also. I am perfectly willing to stand it on either ground; but while protection is given to leather, I do insist that protection shall also be given to this article which enters into the manufacture of leather.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say a word in favor of the hemlock forests. It is proposed to put a tax on this material which is necessary to make the shoes that are worn by everybody. It is said that it is in the interest of shoemakers that this article should be free. You make a great mistake about that, for we make the people pay for our shoes what they cost us plus the profit, and whatever you put additional on the cost of shoes we make other people pay for, and if you add to the cost of tanning leather you add to the cost of shoes, so that you are now really putting a tariff on to an article which everybody needs and must use.

But I do not mean to speak for that interest alone. I desire to speak for another interest. We have been dealing with our hemlock forests as if they were inexhaustible. There is only a small belt of land as compared with the world in which the hemlock and the pine grow, and we have used our pine so lavishly that whereas forty years ago the State of Maine thought she could supply all the United States with it, now Maine has to import pine lumber. Michigan was in the same position. She thought she could supply the whole world with pine lumber, and now pine lumber is up in price to-day, so that in this very city it costs $100 for 1,000 feet. You are stripping the whole belt of pine and hemlock forests, and in order to make this extract you are going through the whole tract of the hemlock and stripping the bark off, and letting the trees rot.

Mr. MERRIAM. There are one hundred and twenty-five miles square of it in my State.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What are one hundred and twenty-five miles square?

Mr. MERRIAM. Large enough to lose Massachusetts in.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That is the size of the gentleman's district, and it would not make extract enough to keep a Lynn shoe-shop running one year. It cost them $18,000,000 last year for shoe-strings alone. What is one hundred and twenty-five miles square? Why it is a belt about three hundred miles wide, running around this whole continent, and the pine and hemlock has been so depleted that the price of lumber has already doubled within my life-time To-day in the city of Lowell, where forty years ago the best kind of lumber could be got for $10 a thousand feet, it now costs $100 a thousand feet.

Mr. MERRIAM. What is the price of hemlock? We are not discussing pine.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Hemlock lumber was never valuable but for two purposes: for fencing and for lathing before we had laths. It was used to make the thin boards for lathing, but not very much, and it was used for coarse-board and fencing stuff. The trouble is that you are putting a premium here, by putting a tax on this article, on the destruction of your whole hemlock country.

Mr. MERRIAM rose.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I cannot yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MERRIAM. I will give you all the time I have to spare.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. You have not more time than you have hemlock.

Mr. MERRIAM. If it is not good for anything what do you want to save it for?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We want it for tanning purposes. Why should we not have this raw material free?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. You have spoken once on the question.

Mr. CONGER. Not on your proposition. I object to the gentleman withdrawing his amendment.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman need not be afraid of what I have to say.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I certainly am not afraid.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is timid all at once.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not at all.

Mr. CONGER. Then, I will go on. In the State of Michigan there are hemlock forests from which if I had the honor to lead my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] into them and leave him in the center, he never would return to bless the world more; he would be lost forever to the world.

A MEMBER. And to himself.

Mr. CONGER. And to himself.

Mr. DAWES. "Lost to sight, to memory dear."

Mr. CONGER. I accept the amendment. One fire in the State of Michigan three years ago burned up and destroyed hemlock enough to make all the tannin that could be used by all the shoemakers in the United States for the next twenty years.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They do not use tannin; they use leather.

Mr. CONGER. It was burned up and destroyed. In the progress of settlements all along in the new countries of the Northwest, and perhaps in the Northeast, there is more hemlock destroyed every year, burned up and wasted by the farmers necessarily in clearing their lands, than would make all the extract of tannin which the United States could use for the next fifty years.

The pine of Michigan gone! Why, sir, we furnish 2,000,000,000 feet year by year, and we have enough to furnish that for the next one hundred years. The gentleman said that pine in this city is worth $100 a thousand. Why, sir, we are glad to sell it from our mills at $13. From whom does the gentleman buy it here? How much could my constituents sell here at half the price he speaks of? But I will not dwell upon that.

All through the Middle States of this Union, through the mountain regions, hemlock is to be found, useless for any other purpose but for obtaining tannin, continually destroyed by fires. There is scarcely a Representative here but what represents a State some part of which may utilize this industry. It costs from $15,000 to $35,000 to prepare the machinery, and there are hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in the machinery to-day.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Allow me to ask a question.

Mr. CONGER. One question, if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman said when he was up before that the supply of hemlock had got so low up in Michigan that they were utilizing the twigs and branches of the hemlock tree. How is it, then, that the supply is inexhaustible?

Mr. CONGER. Because by so doing the farmers in clearing their lands can get a profit from the whole tree. They can save their hemlock while clearing their lands. By this process we hope to enable the settlers in the wooded evergreen regions to clear their lands with a little profit from stripping the bark and clearing the limbs and twigs from the hemlocks for the purpose of extracting the tannin, and using the logs for lumber, thereby utilizing the whole tree.

Why will my friend here withdraw his attention from the Geneva award, and from the great questions committed to him, and stand up here in defense of the trembling, delicate hemlock tree? What shoemaker stands behind him?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. None; our shoemakers do not use tannin.

Mr. CONGER. What interest does he represent here that makes him plead the cause of the hemlock tree, lifting his hands to heaven and saying, in the beautiful language of my friend, the poet from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES]—

Woodman, spare that tree?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRADLEY. I want to ask my colleague [Mr. CONGER] if it is not true that there are hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of machinery standing idle in Michigan to-day that has been erected for the exclusive purpose of manufacturing this extract of tannin? And is it not true that gentlemen from Michigan during the last fall were offering to the constituents of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] barrels of this extract by the thousand at their own price, and they could not sell it because there was no demand?

Mr. CONGER. I will answer the question in this way: I am informed that the price paid for tannin is reduced to the lowest possible figure which will in any manner pay for its manufacture.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I can answer the question. It was so thin and poor that it soured and our people would not buy it.

Mr. BURCHARD. Two years ago Congress reduced the duty on leather from 35 per cent. ad valorem to 15 per cent. ad valorem. It made hides free and it put hemlock bark on the free list.

Mr. CONGER. Where it is now.

Mr. BURCHARD. Three years ago the importation of hemlock bark, then paying a duty of 10 per cent., was about $100,000 worth. The next year after it was made free the importation increased to $196,000. During the last fiscal year $203,000 worth was imported free of duty. Now, there is a very small trade in this article of extract of hemlock bark. Only $24,000 worth was imported last year and the duty was only $5,000. But the price of bark has largely increased.

Mr. CONGER. The value of the importation of the bark last year was $157,000.

Mr. BURCHARD. And $46,000 more you will find just below in the import statement, which add to that makes the amount $203,000. The bark has increased from $4 a cord to $5 a cord. The bark and extract evidently are advancing in price. I cannot see how it is going to injure this interest connected with the extract of tannin or extract of bark to put this article on the free list, any more than it injured the hemlock forests when we put hemlock bark on the free list. I, for one, think that we should carry out the policy we adopted two years ago in reducing leather in the interest of the manufacture of leather. If I believed with some gentlemen here that the Canadians paid this duty, my view might be different. But I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] that the consumers in this country pay it. For that reason I think we ought to make the duty as light as possible.

Mr. DAWES. I hope that now we shall have a vote.

Mr. MERRIAM. I withdraw my amendment that my colleague from New York [Mr. SMITH] may renew it.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I renew the amendment. The gentleman who has last spoken [Mr. BURCHARD] inquires what harm is to be done by putting extract of hemlock bark upon the free list. I can bear witness for one that some harm will be done. In my own district—I do not speak critically, but I judge that from $200,000 to $300,000 has been invested within eighteen months in establishments for the manufacture of the extract of hemlock bark; and this little amendment putting that article on the free list wipes out that property of my constituents to the amount of $200,000 or $300,000.

A protective tariff has been defined to be "a combination of jobs." Of course that is a false definition, yet it contains a vast deal of truth. What is the sort of protective tariff that this Committee on Ways and Means advocates? It seems to be, as my colleague has said, a tariff which shall protect the interests of the tanners upon the sea-shore of Massachusetts, while it ignores the interests of these property-holders throughout the Middle and Northern States and wherever this hemlock grows. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] whose disposition to protect the people of this country touches the sublime, proposes to protect them by making their property worthless, so that they cannot sell it. It strikes me that this is a sort of protection of which we do not desire very much.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country, the settlers in our new Territories, find it necessary to sell their hemlock bark in order to pay the expenses of clearing their lands. The establishments in Canada, in the midst of hemlock forests exceeding millions of acres, fell the forests for the hemlock bark alone. We cannot compete with them; and when you allow the extract of hemlock bark to come in free you not only drive out of existence all the manufactures of the extract in this country, but you render comparatively worthless every acre of land throughout this Union that grows hemlock. I sincerely hope that the protection which our friends demand for the manufactures of New England may be extended also to the manufactures in the Middle and Western States.

Mr. MERRIAM. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to strike out the clause placing extract of hemlock bark on the free list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quicksilver.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to amend by striking out quicksilver. I cannot understand why the Committee on Ways and Means propose to put quicksilver on the free list, and thus take away some $15,000 per annum of revenue. I would like the chairman of the committee to explain the reasons to us; for the facts in regard to quicksilver are simply these: Spain produced last year 36,000 flasks; Russia 11,000 flasks; Austria 9,000 flasks—all produced by convict labor, against which well-paid American labor must compete. Our own industry engaged in the production of quicksilver on the Pacific coast is struggling to maintain itself. One of the principal companies, the New Almaden, has not paid but one dividend for over ten years, although it has several millions of dollars invested. Let me state the production of the companies in the United States last year: The New Almaden produced 11,500 flasks; the Idria 9,000 flasks; the Redington 5,500 flasks; other mines 8,000 flasks; making 34,000 flasks. The entire production of the world is about 90,000 flasks—not enough to supply the demand of the world. Our miners want it cheaper; but if they knew the fact that if we do not collect a duty from it the Rothschilds get the difference and they would not gain a dollar, they would be the last men in the world to ask us to do it.

The mines of Spain are owned by the Rothschilds, who are so wealthy and produce so much quicksilver that they establish the price everywhere. Whenever our mines cease to produce what is required here the Rothschilds send us quicksilver; otherwise they do not. Now, if we take off the duty, the Rothschilds get this 15 per cent. instead of our own bleeding and suffering Treasury. This is the whole fact in regard to the matter, and I do not see the policy or philosophy of the charity proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Now, these gentlemen have been told there is a monopoly among quicksilver-producing mines in this country. At one time it was so. Three or four years ago the New Almaden, the principal quicksilver mine in the country, ran behind some three or four hundred thousand dollars, which it owed to the Bank of California. That bank was about to foreclose, take possession, and own the mine. They made a bargain with the New Almaden mine that they should have the entire production for two and a half years at $31 a flask. They had no sooner made the bargain than they put the price up to $85 a flask. The Rothschilds joined them. The miners throughout the country were obliged to pay an enormous price for quicksilver. That monopoly has expired, and none of these men are connected with each other, and there exists no monopoly now. They are entirely distinct, and each American mine is independent of any other. The fact is there is not quicksilver enough in the world to supply the demand. Our mountains are full of it, and it is an industry that needs protection. We should encourage the searching of our mountains for this metal, which in former days was called a noble metal.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was then taken; and Mr. MERRIAM'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend in section 6, page 5, by adding "salt in bulk or packages" after the word "quicksilver."

Mr. Chairman, it would appear as if an unnecessary thing to argue the propriety of repealing the tax on salt. This matter has been discussed frequently in the American Congress. Mr. Benton labored for a number of years to get it abolished and finally succeeded. The question was likewise discussed in England, and the Parliament at last removed the tax; a wise step, and one which brought honor to that body. It is impossible in five minutes to enter upon the question fully, and I shall content myself with calling the committee's attention to the following facts:

First, salt is of prime necessity to the life of man and beast. It enters largely into the composition of food, and is absolutely essential to health. The Almighty has made it a necessity to sustain animal life and health, and, to carry out His wise provision, He has made it abundant around the globe. It is mentioned, I believe, as a medical fact that the want of salt some years since was the origin of that dreadful scourge, Asiatic cholera.

Secondly, it is used by all classes. Not a single person in our broad land can do without it. The poor widow, struggling to support her children, is compelled of necessity to purchase salt.

This tax, therefore, lays a burden upon that which sustains existence, and places embarrassment and trouble upon the poorest of the poor. Its free admission would in a great measure re-establish the trade between our southern ports and the West Indies; a very desirable thing to those living in the South Atlantic States, and which would help them to regain some of their lost prosperity, and thus enable them to pay more taxes into the Treasury. It would also by its free introduction and consequent reduction of price be of value to the farmer as a fertilizer, used in connection with lime. The price of salt at New Berne, North Carolina, in 1861 was 16 cents per bushel, and now it is from 37 to 50. In my own district the price ranges from 62½ cents to $1 per bushel. This makes it quite a burden upon the people.

I would much prefer to see the tax remain on matches and bank-checks and see it taken off salt.

The present revenue is, I think, with an average ad valorem duty of 158 per cent., about $742,000. If you inquire how that shall be made up, I say place it on salaries and incomes, and stocks and bonds.

The Forty-second Congress did a good work in reducing the tax. Let us do a better and abolish it entirely.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am glad this subject has been brought up entirely in the way it has. This argument in reference to the duty on salt is one which has been made in our part of the country a great many years back. The same argument which was very well stated here this evening we have heard a great many times before. It prevailed so far prior to the late war. We depend almost entirely upon the foreign supply for our domestic purposes. A distinguished citizen of my own State once remarked in a discussion that the poor man's cow consumed more salt than a banker of Wall street. What was the result? I appeal to gentlemen living in that part of the country. When the war came on and the blockade closed around us so our foreign supply was cut off our people were famished for want of this article, although there were salines in the South capable of supplying all the salt we wanted, all the salt of the country. I will never vote in favor of, or sit silent without protesting against, any policy which will make our portion of the country dependent on any other part of the world for its supply of this so necessary article. For in case of any calamity coming upon us, as in the case of the calamity of war cutting it off, we will be placed in a most deplorable condition to which I do not want to see my neighbors reduced again.

Instead of taking the duty off salt, as a representative of the southern portion of our country, with our salines so fruitful, so abundant, I would encourage the manufacture of the article by every possible expedient of legislation we may devise.

Mr. HEREFORD. I move to strike out the last word. The argument of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] in favor of free salt applies just as well to every other article on our tariff list. He says it should be made free because it is one of the prime necessities of life. So is iron one of the prime necessities of life. It is a part and parcel of the blood itself. Salt has to be manufactured before it can be made useful. So does iron have to be manufactured before it can be made useful. So throughout the whole list.

This tariff, if it is for the purpose of protecting the labor, the industry, the manufacturing industries of the country, applies with equal force to salt as it does to iron or to any other article that is manufactured throughout our land. And I come now again to exemplify in my own person and to furnish certainly a practical demonstration of the platform of one of the great political parties in the last presidential campaign that this question of the tariff was remitted to each congressional district to decide it for itself. The district that I represent objects that salt should be made free; and I see that my friend on the opposite side of the Ohio River has an interest identical with my own.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman why it is the interest of his district that salt should not be made free?

Mr. HEREFORD. I will tell you. Almost while I am talking and for years several of the salt-furnaces of my district have been lying idle on account of the low price of salt, and hundreds and hundreds of men are thrown out of employment who were engaged in the manufacture of salt, and in the hundreds of other means of employment that are necessarily used in the manufacture and production of salt. I do not see why the gentleman should strike at the article of salt, which is one of the few articles that should have protection if there is any at all. I am opposed to the amendment that the gentleman from North Carolina has offered, and hope it will not prevail. It is not in the original bill, and in the spirit of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I say that we should not add any new articles to this list. If we do, our labors will be interminable, and we will not get away from here until the summer shall have passed by.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make one more appeal to the committee to say by their votes on this amendment whether they desire to have any bill at all. It is perfectly apparent that unless we restrict ourselves within some limits it is quite useless to spend our evenings here. We cannot go on and revise the whole tariff. It would not be wise for us to do it if we had the time. It is utterly impossible for us to do it; and therefore for us to spend time here in picking out this industry and that industry, and putting it into the bill without consideration by a Committee of this House at all, is as useless a labor as could possibly be engaged in.

This whole matter of salt was before the Committee on Ways and Means two years ago, and the committee spent weeks in hearing those interested in that article. The question has not been before the committee this session. No man has asked the committee to consider the question of touching it this year and to bring it into a bill, the object of which is to correct mistakes in the tariff, and to spend our time in that way is entirely throwing it away. We shall lose what we have gained in reference to silk and other matters, and we might just as well conclude that when the committee rises to-night the three days and nights we have spent on this bill have been thrown away, for I do not think the Committee on Ways and Means will feel disposed to ask the House to go into committee again on this bill, if the purpose and intent of the committee is to take up any new thing.

Of course, the Committee on Ways and Means know that it is in the power of the House to load this bill down with new matter. They do not expect that their conclusions on these items will be adopted without debate or change. They do not ask that, but they do ask of the House that matters that never have come before any committee of the House shall be left out of the bill. If the House decides otherwise, the Committee on Ways and Means sees, if the House does not, that it is utterly impossible for them to go on. Let us therefore have a vote that will settle the question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has already been opposed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. Only one speech has been made on the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.] He offered an amendment to strike out the last word, and spoke to it; and that is the only speech that has been made on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] spoke in opposition to it.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman from West Virginia will withdraw his amendment and let the gentleman from Virginia renew it.

Mr. HEREFORD. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, I have not been of those who have interfered with the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, and perhaps after this amendment we may receive the admonition of the chairman of that committee, and not hereafter interfere with its report. But this question is now before the committee and we are called to vote upon it, and therefore I desire to give the reasons why I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE.] Salt is an article of prime necessity, used by everybody as much or more than tea or coffee. Tea and coffee can be dispensed with, but salt can be dispensed with by neither man nor beast. It is an article that goes into the household of everybody, rich and poor; and the very reasons stated by my friend and colleague—if I may call him so—from West Virginia why it should not prevail to my mind are conclusive that the amendment should prevail. Why? Because he says it will make salt cheaper, and he wants the tariff to remain on salt in order to protect one or two manufacturers in his district at the expense of all his constituents; thus making the people of his district and the people of the United States pay tribute to one or two manufacturers. We manufacture salt extensively in my State, more extensively than in any other State of the South, and perhaps as much so as in any State in the Union. Yet Virginia asks no protection for that manufacture. She considers the interest of the ninety-nine hundredths of her citizens as of more importance than the interests of a few manufacturers in the State who make salt.

Mr. HEREFORD. Have you any salt manufactories in your district?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No; but I speak here not only for my district but for the people of my State, while the gentleman would put the interest of a few persons in his State against the interests of all the people of his State. I hope that it will be the pleasure of this committee to put salt on the free list as they did last year along with sugar and coffee.

Mr. HEREFORD. We did not put it on last year.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The House put it on but the Senate did not concur.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] suggested that I wanted to give the House an admonition. I have no disposition to do that. Of course every gentleman in the House has his own judgment about what his duty is. I suggested, from my experience in tariff bills, that it would be utterly impossible for us to pass this bill if the committee took up matters which had never been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means. If the Committee of the Whole differ with me, as they have a perfect right to do, then they can do as they please about it. But let us have a vote.

Mr. FORT. I would inquire of the gentleman how much revenue we derive from salt?

Mr. DAWES. I cannot tell how much.

Mr. FORT. About how much?

Mr. DAWES. I cannot tell.

Mr. VANCE. I would like to explain the reason why I offered my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FIELD. I move to strike out the proposition in regard to salt and insert the words "on quicksilver, 15 per cent." It appears that last year we realized in duties on quicksilver $10,000. I fail to perceive in what way we are to be benefited by striking off the duty on that article.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FIELD] pertinent to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE?]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Chair please state the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. FIELD.]

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out the proposition in regard to salt, and insert "on quicksilver, 15 per cent."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair misunderstood the amendment. It is not in order.

The question was then taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. VANCE; and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 56; no quorum voting.

Mr. VANCE. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. VANCE, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DAWES, to act as tellers.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was read, to insert in the free list these words:

Salt, in bulk or in bags.

The committee proceeded to vote by tellers, but before the result was announced,

Mr. VANCE said: If I can have an opportunity to offer my amendment in the House and have a vote upon it I will withdraw my demand for a further count.

Mr. DAWES. I will not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair understands that the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] will be considered as agreed to, and a separate vote will be taken on it in the House.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that.

Mr. DAWES. On the count before the call for tellers the majority was against the amendment. The gentleman from North Carolina called for tellers, but before any quorum had voted by tellers he said that he would withdraw his call if I would permit him to offer the amendment in the House and have a vote upon it, to which I consented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the proposition to the committee. It is that the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] be considered as adopted, and a separate vote be taken on it in the House.

Mr. CONGER. I object to any understanding that the amendment is agreed to. The proposition, as I understand, is that the gentleman from North Carolina would withdraw his call for a further count if he could have an opportunity to offer his amendment in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The shoe is on the other foot. He had a majority for his amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Not so.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee rose; and Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TYNER reported that, in pursuance of the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. COBB, of North Carolina: The petition of Tod R. Caldwell, governor of North Carolina, for the passage of an act to refund to the State of North Carolina the value of certain cotton bought by the State during the late rebellion and seized by agents of the Treasury Department, with interest from the date of seizure, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COBB, of Kansas: The petition of grange organizations of Butler County, Kansas, for the construction of the Continental Railway and passage of the House bill therefor, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. HAYS: A paper for the establishment of certain post-routes in Alabama, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: The petition of Elizabeth Dougherty, widow of Charles Dougherty, late sergeant Company C, Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOLFE: The petition of William T. Daniels, Samuel Conn, and others, of New Albany, Indiana, that the Chinese indemnity fund be appropriated to the education of the Chinese within the United States, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ——: The petition of F. E. Heath, and others, of Webster Parish, Louisiana, for a post-route from Minden, Louisiana, to Palestine, Arkansas, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Webster and Bienville Parishes, Louisiana, for the establishment of certain post-routes in Louisiana, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 29, 1874.

The Senate met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of the American Seamen Friends' Society, praying an appropriation for the cost of repairing the Seamen's Bethel church at Norfolk, Virginia, used for military purposes from 1862 to 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I present a communication from the freedmen residing among the Chickasaws and Choctaws, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, representing that they are still slaves except in name, and asking the Government to pay the expenses of a delegation to Washington that they may present their grievances. I move its reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented the petition of H. C. Harvey and 160 other citizens of Camden, Delaware, praying that the law imposing a tax of 10 per cent. on State-bank circulation may be repealed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

INDIANS IN NORTHERN SUPERINTENDENCIES.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business I desire to call up the bill (S. No. 154) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain tribes of Indians in the northern superintendency," approved June 10, 1872, which is regarded as very important by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business at the expiration of the morning hour is the Military Academy appropriation bill. The Senator from Connecticut gives notice that he will ask to lay that bill aside informally and take up the bill indicated by him.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3171) to amend the customs-revenue laws, and to repeal moieties, to report it back with sundry amendments; and I also give notice that on Tuesday next, at the expiration of the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to take up this bill for action.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 809) to incorporate the Island and Seaboard Coasting Company of the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3237) to authorize the First National Bank of Seneca to change its name, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire and report as to the repeal of the law forbidding the producers of tobacco from selling to persons other than licensed dealers, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. CONOVER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 314) for the relief of the heirs at law of Mathieu Alexis de Rochefermois, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 393) to provide assistance to circuit judges in certain cases, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1217) providing for an appeal from the circuit court to the Supreme Court in certain cases of habeas corpus, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 854) relating to circuit and district courts of the United States, and containing a variety of provisions, most of which, the committee think, are the law already, and the others unnecessary, have directed me to report it back adversely and to move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 135) relating to certain public lands bordering on Lake Pontchartrain, in the city of New Orleans, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 309) to extend the time for proof and payments on pre-emption claims upon the public lands, reported adversely thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that that bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

TIME OF HOLDING COURTS IN VERMONT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3169) changing the time of holding circuit and district courts in Vermont, to report it back without amendment. If there be no objection, as the bill only changes the time of holding existing courts and does nothing else, at the request of the judges, I ask for its present consideration. If any gentleman desires the bill to go over in order that he may look into it, of course I do not ask it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It provides that the term of the circuit court holden at Rutland on the 3d of October shall be held on the first Tuesday in October, and the term of the district court holden at Rutland on the 6th of October shall be held on the first Tuesday of October; the term of the circuit court holden at Windsor on the fourth Tuesday in July shall be held on the third Tuesday in May; and the term of the district court held at Windsor on the Monday after the fourth Tuesday of July shall be on the third Tuesday in May; but the act is not to apply to the next terms of the circuit and district court to be holden at Windsor, but they shall be held at the times now provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGALIZATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3354) to legalize entries of public lands under the homestead laws in certain cases, to report it back without amendment, and I ask the attention of the Senate to the bill at this time.

Mr. SCHURZ. I hope the Senate will proceed to the immediate consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

In all cases of entries of public lands made under the act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, where the affidavit required by section 2 of the act was made before the clerk of the county of the residence of the person making the entry, without having first made the settlement and improvement required by the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act amendatory of the homestead law, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1864, the bill proposes to legalize and confirm those affidavits, so as to have the same force and validity as if the provisions of the last-named act had been strictly complied with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the effect of that? I should like to have it explained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCHURZ. I will explain it. Under the amendatory act of 1864 certain parties could enter lands under the general homestead law, by making the preliminary affidavit before the clerk of the county where the party might reside, but in such case the party must have first settled on the land. Under previous acts this settlement was not required if the affidavit was made before the register or receiver. This distinction as to settlement was not understood, and entries were made under the act of 1864 without settlement, just as might be done properly if the affidavit were made before the register or receiver. Now, the want of previous settlement renders the affidavits invalid, though they would have been proper if made before the other officers. The only mistake of the parties specified under the act of 1864 was that they made the affidavit before, instead of after, settlement. In all other respects they complied with the law.

Since that time a law has been passed by Congress granting certain lands to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and in consequence of the irregularity committed by these homesteaders the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company claim these lands and they will fall into their hands unless that irregularity be legalized by Congress. So that here we have a number of bona fide settlers who were misled by a legislative act as to the necessity of making their affidavits before the receivers and registers and made them as that act permitted before the clerks of the counties in which they resided, and unless we pass this remedial act the lands may be taken away from the homesteaders and fall into the hands of the railroad company. That is the whole case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This, as stated by the Senator from Missouri very frankly, is rather a serious question. It appears that these settlers did not enter the lands so as to acquire a legal title to them. Then came along a railroad company having certain rights under a land grant I suppose, and took possession of the same lands or took such legal steps as entitled them to the same lands as against this invalid title of the settler. Now, Congress is asked to say, "we will validate the title of the settler, and, supposing we have the constitutional power, we will turn out the railway which has now got the valid title." What is the railway to say to that? What demand will be made upon us by the railway people to make good to them this wrong that we have committed against rights that they had legally acquired? I should like to hear the Senator from Missouri on that point.

Mr. TIPTON. If the Senator will allow me, the act granting the lands to the railroads saved all the rights of actual settlers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President; but according to this bill and according to the law as stated by the Senator from Missouri, these actual settlers had no rights to be saved, because they had entered into the possession of the lands, if they did enter, or had made their entries in the land office under circumstances that the law did not allow to create a good title; that is to say, they made certain affidavits when they had not settled on the lands and taken them up, instead of having settled on the lands and taken them up and then made affidavit of that fact, as I suppose, as showing that they were entitled to that homestead grant.

Mr. TIPTON. The claim in this case is that the affidavit was invalid because it happened to have been taken before the county clerk instead of before the register.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So I understand. The law required, in entries of this kind, that the settler, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, should first make settlement upon the land and occupy it, and then he should make an affidavit before the clerk of the county in which the land was situated of certain facts, and upon that affidavit and those facts the settler became legally entitled to the land as a homestead, subject, I suppose, to his vacating if he did not live upon it the requisite length of time. The result is that the particular settler who did not occupy the land in conformity to the statute which pointed out his method of occupation did not acquire a legal title to it. The railway coming in, then, subject to legal rights, enters these same lands as part of its land grant. The railway, therefore, has the legal title, and the settler has not, because he has acquired the land not in conformity to law.

Now, this bill proposes to make the occupation by the settler valid, which I should doubt very much the right of Congress to do if the other party has acquired a right. We cannot take the property of a citizen or of a corporation without due process of law; and an act of Congress is not due process of law. On the case as it is stated, the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company has the legal title to this land. On the case as the bill makes it, we propose to say that the settler and not the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company shall have the legal title to the land. That may be right as a matter of fact; but as a matter of law, if that is the state of the case, in my opinion it would be nugatory; and if not nugatory, we ought to consider what claims we are creating in behalf of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company against the United States for dispossessing them of land to which they were legally entitled.

Mr. SCHURZ. There is a certain class of cases in which the parties making these entries abandoned their entries after the passage of the law making the railroad grant, and then the Secretary of the Interior held that the lands reverted to the Government and did not inure to the railroad company, and held the lands subject to entry by other parties and they were accordingly taken up in good faith as public lands under express instructions of the Commissioner to the local land officers. Thus it appears that the Secretary of the Interior held that although Congress had passed a land grant and invested the railroad company with certain legal rights, yet when settlers who had so entered the lands abandoned their claims the lands did not revert to the railroad company but to the Government. It was expressly provided that all land affected by homestead rights should be excepted from the railroad grant. Here; therefore, we have a direct issue between bona fide settlers and a railroad company. Unless we give them relief by congressional legislation the lands may go to that company and the settlers be ousted. There are, as I am informed, hundreds of such people who in good faith settled on the lands who will lose their homesteads, improvements and all, unless we pass such a bill as this.

Mr. BOGY. I believe the position taken by the Senator from Vermont would be correct if the statement of facts made by him be as he put it. The law as stated by the Senator from Vermont is correct on the facts understood by him. That is to say, if the entries made by these parties were at the time they were made and are yet void, any legal right acquired since that time by the railroad company of course cannot be affected by any law we may pass at this time. I agree that there can be no doubt about the correctness of that position. But what are the facts? The law donating lands in the State of Missouri to this railroad company protects all the rights of preemptors and persons who made locations as homesteaders. The company cannot interfere with persons having pre-emption rights or who have made any location as homesteaders. These persons are yet residing on this land. They have made a location according to the law granting homestead rights, have made great improvements, have complied with all the laws, the certificate of entry has been given to them; but the affidavit, which it appears now the law required to be made before the register or receiver of the land office, was in these cases made before some county officers having the right to administer oaths, but not the person designated by the law regulating the location of homesteads. The railroad company cannot make any location upon any land thus situated. Therefore the railroad company can have no legal right, and it is yet competent for Congress to enable these persons to complete by a mere legal formality that which already exists. It is a homestead location that the railroad company cannot take, but if abandoned of course it becomes a nullity, and then it will lose its character of a location under the homestead law and the lands will fall into the hands of the railroad company.

Mr. SCHURZ. I believe that the railroad company has in no case perfected its title to any of these lands since.

Mr. BOGY. I know they have not; but if the homestead right be abandoned or be done away with, as a matter of course the lands will fall into the hands of the railroad company. It is a contest, in other words, between the railroad company and the homesteaders. That is the simple question. The persons having the homestead rights did not exactly comply with the law as to the party before whom their affidavits should be made. Up to this time the railroad company has no right to make a location or take that land within its grant, and I hold that it is perfectly competent, perfectly proper, perfectly legal to pass this law, and if there be a question let the courts settle it.

These persons have made these locations in good faith, have made these improvements, have complied with the law. They supposed at the time and the officers of the Government believed that it was all right; but the affidavits were made not before the register or receiver as required by law, but before county officers. They were believed to be correct; but whether correctly made or not, the homestead is a legal fact, which fact prevents the land from being subjected to the railroad grant. The bill I think is perfectly proper, and I hope the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection. It is a contest between this railroad company and these poor people who have made these locations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this subject, addressed to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, may be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
General Land Office, Washington, D. C., May 23, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the bill which you recently left in this office, H. R. No. 3354, entitled "An act to legalize entries of public lands under the homestead laws in certain cases."

The homestead law of the 20th of May, 1862, as a general rule wisely requires that parties desiring to avail themselves of the benefit of that law in the entry of public lands, shall first appear and make affidavit as therein prescribed before the register or receiver of the district land office for the land district in which the desired tracts are situated, thereby enabling the register and receiver, sworn officers of the department, responsible to it and acting directly under its instructions, with the law records of the district before them for their enlightenment, in every case more effectually to guard against the occurrence of irregularities in the inception of claims, as well as to detect and defeat the fraudulent devices resorted to by parties not entitled to the benefits of the law, yet seeking to turn its provisions to their advantage by making entries of public land thereunder. Under the amendatory act of the 21st of March, 1864, third section, the rule is relaxed in certain exceptional cases, where the family of the applicant, or some member thereof, is residing on the land upon which a bona fide settlement and improvement have been made, and where from distance, physical infirmity, or other good cause, the applicant is prevented from attending at the district land office, whereby the applicant is permitted in such exceptional cases to make the required affidavit before the clerk of the court for the county in which he resides. Now it happens that certain parties in cases not characterized by the exceptional circumstances thus provided for in the act of 1864, cases in which neither the party's family, nor any member thereof, was residing on the land, effected homestead entries on affidavits not taken before the register or receiver, as the law requires in such cases, but before the clerk of the county court, as if their cases were of the class provided for in the act of 1864, which they were not. And the object of the inclosed bill is to legalize the affidavits in these cases, and render them as effective as if made in strict conformity to law. The parties it proposes to benefit now stand on the same footing in this respect with others seeking to acquire title to public land under the homestead law. Under the regulations of this office, they may even now perfect their entries by going to the district land office and making their proper affidavit before the register or receiver as others are required to do in similar cases, or where this cannot be done, from special circumstances, if the requirements of the law in other respects have been complied with, the entries will be confirmed on proper showing made by the board of equitable adjudication under the acts of the 3d of August, 1846, and 26th of June, 1856. This bill, if enacted, would place them at an advantage as compared with homestead parties who are required to attend at the district land office, to make the affidavit, in exempting them from such requirement. For giving them this advantage, by special legislation, I can see no sufficient reason. On the contrary, it appears to me objectionable inasmuch as it may be viewed as sanctioning and rewarding the irregularity and evasion of law which attended the making of their entries. I am therefore of opinion that it should not be enacted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. W. CURTIS,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM SPRAGUE,
United States Senate.

Mr. BOGY. It is as I stated. The entry is all proper and legal excepting that the affidavit was made before persons not authorized by law. Nevertheless, these entries were authorized to be completed; the officers in the land offices in Missouri believed them to be in compliance with the law; otherwise they could not have effected the entry. The register and receiver received these applications, and I say of my own knowledge that it is very difficult to ascertain that the affidavits were not proper, because in some cases the affidavits may be made before county officers. Where the party making the application states certain facts, the statement is conclusive that he comes within the exception; but in this case it seems they did not state the fact that they could not go to Boonville or Springfield or wherever the land office was. It was a mere form that was not complied with. It is true in some cases these entries could be perfected now; but the reason they are not is simply this: it is possible that rights in other parties may have accrued between the original entry and the present time. They could go now and make the affidavit de novo and date their rights from to-day; but it it possible that in the mean time other parties may have acquired rights. And if that were done, they would be postponed for five years before they could perfect title to the land, whereas if this bill is passed they have the advantage of the time, and the railroad company can have acquired no legal title to this land because their subsidy was based upon lands not subject to pre-emption or homestead location.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We know, Mr. President, that all that appears to be homestead is not always such, that the actual settler on paper is sometimes an eastern speculator, and that an apparent settlement is made and the law partially complied with and some fabricated papers got up, and the land is held, instead of being cultivated and built up for the benefit of the State or Territory where it is. Therefore I do not think we ought to act on this bill upon the score of any special sympathy for anybody who has unwillingly been drawn into a legal difficulty. We must act on the principle that everybody understands his rights and intends the natural consequences of his own acts. The law has provided certain restrictions upon making homestead entries, the theory and object of the law being that a homestead entry should be a real one for settlement, for cultivation, for permanent occupation and improvement; and all these guards set about the thing were intended to preserve that idea. Otherwise we could just say by an act of Congress that anybody could take up any amount of public land where he pleased to have it and be done with it; that he could file an affidavit before himself and put it in his pocket, and call that his title and when anybody undertook to oust him show it. Of course there are a thousand ways of getting rid of the protective provisions of the statute if you wish to do it.

Now, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office shows to you most clearly, the people covered by this bill undertook to acquire title to this land in a different way from that which the law provided, and in a way which the Commissioner says gives them a great advantage over other people who undertook to acquire their lands in the way that the law does provide. Now you step in and say that the people who do not choose to comply with the law, and who thereby gain an advantage over other people similarly situated, shall be regarded as entitled to the same equity and to the same right and that you will pass a law which will cover all their illegal proceedings. I do not believe in that, and I do not think the Senator from Missouri does, because I know the Senator to be a right-minded man as a general rule. The Commissioner of the General Land Office tells you he does not think this bill ought to pass, and he explains the reasons why he thinks it ought not to pass, which to my mind are conclusive; and yet without having that in print, the bill being reported this morning, we are asked to pass it in a hurry.

Another thing to which the attention of the Senate perhaps has not been drawn is that as this bill now stands it is a perpetual act for the future as well as the past, and this illegal practice as it has been can be continued and legalized for all time to come under this bill if it passes; and any man, whether he comes under the act of 1864 or not, can file his affidavit in a county clerk's office before he takes possession and take possession at his leisure. This is not a bill merely to legalize some little irregularity that has occurred heretofore, but it is a bill which extends in terms to all cases of the entries of public lands hereafter as well as those which have passed heretofore. Do we wish to make this change in the law? Is that the intention of the honorable Senator from Missouri? I presume not; yet that is the effect. I suggest, therefore, that the bill lie over until to-morrow for consideration and we can think of it. I move to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I wish to say a word in answer to the last remark of the Senator from Vermont. By a bill recently passed by the House and agreed to by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, all officers having an official seal are authorized to take affidavits in these cases. This bill confines it to the county clerk, who of course has an official seal; so this action is in the spirit of the legislation already agreed on.

It was observed by the Senator from Missouri that these lands having had the settlement provided for by law, and the settlers being disqualified only by the want of a proper affidavit, when abandoned by the settlers reverted to the Government and not to the railroad company. By the report of the Commissioner I doubt if these lands would go to the railroad company. That is an open question. Lands that were abandoned by parties standing in the same relation to the grant as these parties did reverted to the Government and were thereupon rehomesteaded.

In the judgment of the committee there is nothing in this bill but what it purports to be. It purports to legalize a defect from non-compliance with a technicality in the law. All the parties who located and settled on these lands were bona fide locaters and settlers and made their improvements, and were only informed later that they had not complied strictly with the law. This bill is to remove that technicality, which it is perfectly competent for Congress to do, and which it should do, in the judgment of the committee.

Mr. SCHURZ. The Senator from Vermont made a remark which led me to conclude that he suspected some trick of speculators under this bill to get hold of lands. It is just the reverse. There are no speculators interested in this bill, but on the contrary there are actual settlers interested in it as against speculators.

Now, as to the homestead act, the first requirement is that he who wants to claim and own a certain quantity of land under that act has to settle upon it. This was done. But those who settled on these lands and cultivated them as farms and made improvements simply made a mistake, and a very natural and excusable one, in fulfilling provisions of technicality and nothing else; and all that they ask is that relief should be granted them so that in consequence of their mistake as to a technical point of the law they shall not lose the land they have inhabited, they have cultivated, they have improved, and which they thought they owned, so that they shall not be deprived of all they have by a corporation. That is all.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator from Vermont says that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is opposed to this bill. That is true; but the Committee on Public Lands, by a unanimous vote, have recommended the passage of the bill. Which of the two bodies should have the most weight? I say the committee, for they have investigated the subject and have made a unanimous report. The very argument of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is only a matter of form as to affidavits. We admit that the affidavits were not made before the persons authorized to take them, but nevertheless the land officers in Missouri received those affidavits and permitted those locations to be made, and if there be any fault to be found it is with the officers of the Government, and not with these individual locaters, who are not men generally very well versed in the law, but who act in entire good faith. The officers of the Government received these affidavits and permitted the locations to be made, and hence the Committee on Public Lands have made a unanimous report, and I hope the bill will not be postponed, but will be passed this morning.

Mr. PRATT. When this bill was before the committee, I was troubled with the same scruple that the Senator from Vermont has just given expression to. I apprehended that the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company might make reclamation upon the Government for any lands that were lost to them under this bill. But upon further consideration, it seemed to me a conclusive view was this: that at the time the grant of alternate sections of the public lands was made to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, these homestead settlers were upon these lands in their actual occupancy, having complied with all the conditions of the homestead law except in the simple fact of having made the requisite affidavit before the wrong officer. I believe there had been some change in the homestead law which misled them, whereby they made the requisite affidavit before the county clerk instead of making it before the register or the receiver of the land office.

The fact was patent to the railroad company at the time they received this grant from Congress that these men were upon these lands claiming title by virtue of the homestead law, and they took the grant from Congress subject to that fact. And, sir, there is no complaint made that the affidavits, as made before the county clerks, were not in strict conformity with the law. Every condition was complied with by the settlers except the simple fact, as I stated before, that the affidavit was made before the wrong officer. They had at that time actually made settlements upon these lands, done everything to entitle themselves to a patent from the Government at the expiration of five years, except simply having made the affidavit before a wrong officer. The local land officers took no exception to these affidavits; they received them as a valid compliance with the existing law; but the railroad company now sets up a claim that, inasmuch as there was a technical failure to comply with the law in force at that time, although these settlers acted in good faith, therefore they must lose the benefit of their settlement, they must lose not only their land, but must lose all their improvements, and the railroad company succeed to all. That would work a very great injustice to these settlers; and for myself I would sooner run the risk of reimbursing this company than that these homestead settlers who have made these improvements in good faith should be turned out without any compensation whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There was one remark made by the Senator from Vermont which would control my vote on this measure. I understand him to say that this bill changes permanently the law. That I certainly would not vote for. But it seems to me that, with that exception, the bill is a mere remedial act. It seems to me that these settlers had a right, by virtue of their settlement, the same as if they had paid a consideration for it, and that this law is like to an act making an acknowledgment before a justice of the peace, when the law required it to be before a judge, valid and good.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have done my duty so far. I will try again. I move, in conformity to what has been asserted here that this does not affect other people's rights, to add after the word "with," at the end of the sixteenth line, this proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall have the effect or be construed to impair the valid adverse rights of any person or corporation to any such lands.

Mr. BOGY. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I think this corporation will get all it is entitled to without it.

Mr. SCHURZ. I think one of the purposes of this act is to prevent litigation and not to invite it, and by this amendment you would clearly invite litigation. You would say to this railroad company, "Now, we think you may have a right to these lands, and we invite you to make use of what power you have to have that right confirmed by the courts." In other words, it is to involve the settlers now holding these lands in endless litigation. For that reason I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do begin to believe that there is something in this bill, as the Senator from Missouri suggests. In the first he has told us that the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company was going to turn these settlers off, that they set up some claim. Then I say to him, "How is it that we are going to take away the land of a corporation, even if it be a corporation, and give it to private persons?" Then he replies, and so does the other Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] "They have not got any rights; we are not impairing their rights." Very well; then I say, "Say so in the bill, that you do not undertake to take the property of A, by act of Congress, and give it to B." If anybody has a valid adverse right to these lands, let him maintain it and do not take it away from him by act of Congress. Then the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] rises and says, "That will not do; that will lead to litigation." In other words, if Congress does not act in a judicial capacity and give these lands to these settlers in spite of its former grant, if there be any, then there will be a contest. Why? Because some railway company or somebody else sets up a valid adverse claim to the land. What will be the consequence, Mr. President? The consequence will be one that we have experienced before now in similar cases; we shall have undertaken to dispose of the public lands of the United States twice, and that will lead to reclamations, as the honorable Senator from Indiana has suggested, and the United States will be called upon to make good to one party, and perhaps to both, by fresh indemnifications, the loss that they have sustained on account of the passage of this bill.

I confess I am surprised, when you are going to validate what it is said is a technical difficulty, that any Senator should object to the usual saving clause, that we do not hereby undertake to take one man's property that he has a legal right to and give it to another. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. TIPTON. I stand in this matter on the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, that in a case where some of these settlers went off their lands they could not be claimed by the railroad company, but they reverted to the Government of the United States and were open for other settlers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then this proviso does not harm them.

Mr. TIPTON. I do not propose by my vote that anything shall come into the bill which will recognize any claim on the part of the railroad company when it has been so decided by the Interior Department. I stand by the settler and the right of the settler, and the whole Committee on Public Lands, after a most careful examination of this question and of the interests of the railroad, and with no hostility to railroads as such, have decided that these people need just this bill—nothing more, nothing less.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Vermont for information merely. If in the original grant to the railroad company these lands were embraced at that time and the railroad company performed its part of the contract, would it not have a right of action although this bill should pass if the lands in law at that time inured to its benefit by its complying with the grant?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That opens a question which is perhaps doubtful. If the right of the railway company has become vested, absolutely vested, then, in my opinion, Congress, although it can impair the obligation of contracts under the Constitution, or certainly some contracts, cannot divest the title which exists in somebody else. But there is a difference of opinion among people about that; it has been often discussed, and particularly where there is an inchoate title on one side and an act of Congress making an absolute grant of a patent on the other. It may be open to question there whether the patentee would not hold even against the right that the other party had, and that sends the other party to the person who has wronged him, with a demand for indemnification. I cannot say positively what the law is, because I think no man can say certainly how that question will be decided. Therefore I had supposed that nobody who was sincere about this business would object to providing that any valid existing right should not be disturbed by this legislation. If there is a valid existing right to the injury of these settlers, and they have any claim upon us, we ought to make a different provision from this. We ought not to take the land which belongs to the railway company, if it be a railway company, and give it to them; but if we have wronged them by allowing a railroad company to get land which they in equity ought to have, we ought to make some other provision for them.

Mr. LOGAN. Leaving the bill as it is, it would leave the question, if there was a question as to who had the legal title, to be decided by the courts; but if you put on this proviso the railroad company will probably come before Congress for indemnity, and the construction might be very liberal when in a court it might not be. It makes that difference certainly, in my judgment, which is very material. By thus providing you invite the railroad company, as was very well said I think by the Senator from Missouri, to litigation. It may be litigation before the courts, or it may be a claim against the Government for indemnity, which will come before Congress. I would much rather trust it the other way myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They could certainly have no right to come to Congress if by this act we declare that we do not affect any legal right they have.

Mr. BOGY. I did not hear what transpired between the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Vermont in their private conversation on the other side; but I would say in answer to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont that if the railroad company or anybody else has any rights now, no law we may pass here can affect those rights, and his amendment amounts to nothing at all beyond a mere invitation to the company to litigate with the parties who have made these entries. We cannot impair their rights, and it is not necessary to say that we do not intend to impair their rights. If the law does take away any rights they have, our saying that we do not intend to take them would not affect it. We do not want to insert an amendment of this kind, which would be nothing in the world, as stated by my colleague, but an invitation to this corporation who may claim this land—because the contest will be between them and the pre-emptors after all—to litigate with these people until they will be compelled to abandon their lands. That will be the whole effect of it. The amendment amounts to nothing in law. The result of it will be that the proviso will be a mere invitation to litigation. I hope it will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont calls for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. I have not been able to attend fully to everything that has been said; but I see one thing in this bill to which I think I ought to call attention. If it has been covered by the explanations which have been made, some Senator will be kind enough to suggest it. The bill provides that—

Where the affidavit required by section 2 of said act was made before the clerk of the county of the residence of the person making the entry, without having first made the settlement and improvement required by the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act amendatory of the homestead law, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1864, said affidavits be, and the same are hereby, legalized and confirmed, so as to have the same force and validity as if the provisions of said last-named act had been strictly complied with.

I supposed when the bill was read and I heard a Senator observe upon it, that its whole purpose was to validate those affidavits as explained. Am I right in that?

Mr. SCHURZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I beg to call attention to what I think is the remarkable language found in this line: "so as to have the same force and validity as if the provisions of said last-named act had been strictly complied with." One of the provisions I see of the last-named act is that, apart from making the affidavits, a settlement is to occur, improvements are to be made. Then, if I understand this language, the effect is to be not only to cure all infirmity in the affidavit as to time and otherwise, but to obviate entirely all that the claimant would have found it necessary to do had his affidavit been regular, timely, and perfect in all respects. Can that be the design, to take a class of claimants as to whose affidavits there is some defect, and not only cure that defect, but put them on a footing occupied by nobody else and dispense with all obligation to settle upon the land or improve it?

Mr. SCHURZ. The Senator from New York undoubtedly refers to the provisions in this act that all the other provisions of the homestead act should have been complied with aside from the affidavit. Is not that it?

Mr. CONKLING. Stated in another form, yes. If the whole object is that avowed by the Senator a moment ago in answer to my question, obviously it seems to me those who are promoting this bill should make a provision tantamount to that indicated by the Senator; that is, they should correct the particular defect complained of, and not under guise of that defect proceed to confer upon these parties benefits and advantages conferred by the law upon nobody else, and which they could never have had their papers been regular.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that it be laid aside informally to continue the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I can consent to that only upon the supposition that the bill will not lead to further debate. If the debate is continued I shall call for the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS. It will be recollected that two or three days ago this morning after the morning hour was designated for taking up the bill relative to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and I ask for its consideration now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the introduction of bills has not been reached this morning, the Chair will receive bills before presenting the unfinished business.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KELLY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 869) granting to the Wasatch and Jordan Valley Railroad Company the right of way through the public lands for the construction of a railroad and telegraph; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 872) to quiet the title of settlers on certain railroad lands; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 873) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota belonging to the half-breeds or mixed-bloods of the Dakota or Sioux Nation of Indians, and for other purposes," approved July 17, A. D. 1854, and to confirm sales of the certificates issued under said act, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 870) giving the assent of Congress to the acceptance by the officers of the United States ship Monocacy of silver medals presented to them by the King of Siam; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 871) granting the right of way through the public lands to the Arkansas Valley Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

PORTLAND, DALLES AND SALT LAKE RAILROAD.

Mr. KELLY. I give notice that after the conclusion of the morning business on Thursday next I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 331) providing for the construction of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad and Telegraph, and for the performance of all Government service free of charge.

ANGLO-AMERICAN MUTUAL COMPANY.

Mr. PATTERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. No. 668) to incorporate the Anglo-American Mutual Company; which was ordered to be printed.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Francis W. Sykes, late contestant from the State of Alabama, out of the appropriation for the compensation and mileage of Senators, the sum of $3,374.80, being the salary of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, to the 28th day of May, 1874, inclusive.

Mr. CONKLING. That resolution is to pay eight thousand and odd dollars of salary to a man who the Senate has declared was never a Senator, and for a service not one day of which he ever rendered. I ask that the resolution lie over, and when it comes up I shall venture to divide the Senate upon it, in the hope that upon that resolution or some resolution very soon, we shall come to the time when we shall no longer vote back pay or pay as a member of the body to a person never a member of it and for service no part of which was rendered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was—

Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Thomas Hughes, for pay as an officer in the late war, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRINTING OF A DOCUMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for an order to print a document which will be important to us in the consideration of the bill I reported a short time ago. It is a tabular statement showing the compensation of collectors and surveyors of the customs and naval officers in the several collection districts of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1873. I ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance. I shall ask that the bill be recommitted, after it is printed, to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

COTTON PERMITS.

Mr. ALCORN. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the Senate with copies of all cotton permits issued by Presidents Lincoln and Johnson; also the names of agents appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase cotton in the Southern States, with copies of the forms used by said purchasing agents, and with a copy of any instructions from time to time issued by the Secretary of the Treasury or officers under him to said purchasing agents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that resolution had better go over until to-morrow that we may see what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

Mr. ALCORN. I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at twelve o'clock, to-morrow being Decoration Day.

The motion was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF PEMBINA.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yesterday the Senate refused to order to a third reading Senate bill No. 44 to establish the Territory of Pembina and to provide a temporary government therefor. Not committing myself at all to the bill, yet in view of the circumstances under which that vote was taken I move a reconsideration of that vote. I do not ask action at this time. I simply desire the motion to be entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe the Military Academy appropriation bill is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the bill reported by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. SPRAGUE] was before the Senate, and a request was made to continue it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought that had been disposed of.

Mr. SPRAGUE. No; it is still pending.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then when that is disposed of, I wish to ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to take up the bill of which I gave notice to provide for printing extra copies of public documents for sale. I do not think it will take long to dispose of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont demands the regular order, which is the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS. The day before yesterday it was unanimously understood that after the morning hour this morning Senate bill No. 571, to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, should be taken up and disposed of. Now I understand the Senator from Maine who has charge of the appropriation bill is willing to allow it to lie aside informally for that purpose. I think it will only take a few moments to dispose of Senate bill No. 571. It will be remembered that this bill has been before the Senate four or five times during the session, and each time by the request of some Senator it has been postponed to a day named. We are now near the close of the session, and the bill must go to the House, and if anything is to be done it ought to be done at once. Inasmuch as it was the unanimous understanding that the bill should be proceeded with to-day, I ask the Senate now to proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The regular order I believe is the West Point Academy appropriation bill. It usually takes about three minutes to dispose of that bill. I believe the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has no other appropriation bill that he is ready to take up.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. O, yes; there are two others.

Mr. WINDOM. The Indian appropriation bill is ready; and I give notice that immediately after the Military Academy bill is disposed of I expect to call up that bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The regular order is of no particular account. We have already taken up three-quarters of an hour upon this bill in relation to affidavits in entries of public lands, and I trust the Senate will resume its consideration and pass it or reject it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand the regular order is before the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before it is taken up I trust I shall be pardoned for suggesting that the bills on the President's table ought to be submitted for reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as the Chair can ascertain what proceeding is to be had on the bill the Chair will do so.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the regular order be postponed for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill which was under consideration during the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope that will not be done. I wish to say one word on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not necessary to say anything.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well. I was willing that this bill should be disposed of if it could be without controversy; but if there is to be a controversy about it, I think we should proceed with the appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill was only reported this morning, and I submit it is rather ungracious to insist on considering it now when there is serious question about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was not agreed to.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill is regularly before the Senate; but prior to proceeding with it the Chair will lay before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the joint rule of the two Houses, No. 6, which provides that after a bill shall have passed both Houses it shall be duly enrolled on parchment, be suspended so far as relates to bills of the House No. 1215, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; No. 2879, revising and consolidating all the laws authorizing post-roads in force on the 1st day December, 1873; and No. 3349, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia, in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; and that the same may be presented to the President of the United States as engrossed in the House of Representatives and passed in the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish I could have the attention of every Senator to this resolution, because if it be adopted I wish the Senate and all its members to assume the responsibility, and not to have it done by the urgency or request of the committee having charge of the subject to which it relates.

The Senate is aware that the large volumes to which the resolution refers, and which were recently adopted by the Senate as bills, were printed in the main last autumn. A thousand copies, perhaps fifteen hundred were printed, enough to furnish one to every member of both Houses and enough to enable us to send one to each of the persons upon a list which the committee made up with some care extending over the whole country and embracing those who we thought would be most likely to give attention to this work and to make suggestions with regard to it. This edition of printed volumes has been in both Houses the foundation of action. The bills have not been engrossed, nor has there been any change made in this original print except changes made with a pen. The number of every section from beginning to end has been changed to conform it to amendments which were adopted. Interlineations have occurred and erasures, and in some instances interlineations too copious to be written upon the margin are carried upon a separate bit of paper, although these are few, and securely fastened in as part of the book, or bill, or act, as it has now become.

Having received the final action of both Houses, not under a statute, for no statute requires it, but under the rules of the two Houses, it would naturally be enrolled with a pen upon parchment. The purpose of this resolution is to obviate that necessity; and now if I can have the attention of the Senate I wish to state two or three facts, a memorandum of which has been given to me by the enrolling clerk of the House of Representatives. He says:

First. At eight hours a day it would take one hundred and eighty days' labor according to an estimate I have made from my own experience to enroll the bill.

Second. It would cost at the lowest rate $800 for parchment.

Third. These laws in their uncodified condition, as in the Statutes at Large, are now on file in the State Department in parchment rolls, and there is no necessity for their duplication in that shape.

Fourth. Greater accuracy will be secured by sending them in their present revised and corrected shape as passed by both Houses, thus avoiding any risk of errors in transcribing so voluminous a work.

He makes some other observations which are rather of argument than of fact.

Now it is for the Senate to say whether it is worth while to transcribe upon parchment these three bills which together I think constitute about three thousand large, closely-printed pages. It may be said, on the one hand, that there is risk in committing to the printer and to the President to sign the present copy of the bill upon which action has been taken, and that the same argument which makes it well to enroll other bills would make it well to enroll these. On the other hand, it is to be said, first, that the labor is so enormous, it is to extend over so many weeks and months that the liability to error is very great; that a comparison of this work would be so interminable and laborious that it may well be doubted whether any two minds can be kept concentrated so closely upon it as should be the mind and the eye of the proof-reader or of him who compares not only literally, but as to matter of punctuation and absolute exactness.

Again, it may be said that after the enrollment has occurred, making, as it will of course, a stack of parchment which cannot be bound together as a volume, which cannot be contained except in a space and bulk and weight too great to be handled, there is not any use practically to be made hereafter of that which would justify the expenditure of money and time in its creation.

I said the other day that we must all be prepared for errors in this work; there is no doubt of it; and the errors will be in the ratio of its magnitude. All revisions in States, comparatively diminutive, have left much work for the gleaners to do afterward. Here is a much greater work than we know of in the history of State revision, and no doubt the errors will be multiplied in proportion. If in the printing of this bill errors of type shall occur, they will be added to those errors which we are certain to be called upon to confront and which we must hereafter correct by legislation.

I know of nothing else that I can say about this matter. I have no motion to make in regard to it in the sense of a recommendation, because everything concerning it is as patent to every Senator as it is to me or to any member of the committee.

The Senator from Maine at my side [Mr. HAMLIN] asks me to state precisely what this resolution does. I will tell him. It speaks of three bills in separate items, as there are three; I will speak of them together. The provision is that in place of being enrolled upon parchment they shall be carried as they are, the identical paper that passed the two Houses, to the President for his signature and shall thus be deposited as the original bill, or rather the enrolled bill, as it would be should it be enrolled on parchment under the rules of the two Houses.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is no objection to the presentation of these bills to the President in type rather than in manuscript. In my opinion that would be an advantage, and I think all our bills ought to be enrolled in print and ought to be engrossed in print to pass from one House to the other. It would insure much greater accuracy, although it would cause some little delay. But I perceive one difficulty in this proposition which strikes me as pretty serious. There are in this volume many emendations in manuscript. Not only have all the sections been renumbered, but I understand the Senator from New York to say that there are interlineations, and there are some emendations so voluminous that they could not be placed between the lines, but have been placed upon separate paper and fastened in the book. That offers a very dangerous facility for subsequent alterations. We all know that the erroneous or fraudulent—I do not know that it was ever decided which it was—insertion of a comma between two words in an act passed a few years ago cost the Government $300,000; and if there are emendations in this enrolled bill in manuscript, fraudulent emendations can be put in, and we may readily conceive of a case in which it would be worth millions of dollars to alter a word or two in some act.

I do not say this by way of objection. I acquiesce fully in the necessity of passing these bills as we did. It occurs to me that these emendations in manuscript should all be noted in a foot-note the same as alterations in a deed are sometimes, and that that note should be in print, because if the note is in manuscript, the note itself may be altered. That would be a security. If every emendation that is made in manuscript is enumerated, referred to, and placed in print at the foot of the bill, made a part of the enrollment, it would give a considerable security. But it does seem to me that it would be a very dangerous thing—I do not know but that it is necessary—to have the whole body of the laws of the Republic, affecting every man's rights and duties and obligations, laws to affect a man's liberty and his life as well as his property, all in a volume to which there are emendations of such a character that they can be imitated.

I make this suggestion in the hope that the chairman of the committee will consider it frankly, and if there be any remedy other than the one I have suggested, that it may be proposed. I do not know myself what would be the effect of delaying this matter until the next session, that the whole might be put in print precisely as the law stands without any alterations in manuscript. I do not know whether that is practicable. I do not know what effect it might have upon the revision; but if it is practicable, it certainly would be desirable.

I wish to say one thing more before I conclude, on a wholly different branch of this subject, which I intended to say yesterday. By existing law this which is an act of a public nature is liable to be printed, and I suppose it is obligatory on the Secretary of State to print it in the newspapers that print the laws. That would cost $9,400,000.

Mr. CONKLING. That has already been corrected in an appropriation bill for the future, and I have spoken to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations who will bring in a section in one of the bills which will also take this in. The present provision speaks onward from the end of this year. To cover this, it should no doubt be made to apply to this session, and that the honorable chairman of the committee, the Senator from Maine, says he will attend to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That had not occurred to me, but I will attend to that.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not know that there is any way to avoid the passage of this resolution or something like it; and yet I must say that it strikes me as being most extraordinary that when we have prepared a code of laws covering every subject of legislation of a general character, and when we have passed it here in this body, I think I can say safely with perhaps not one in twenty having examined it, having to pass it necessarily without reading—a code of laws that affects every man in this entire nation, every person in the nation in his life, liberty, and property, and in all the rights he has—I say it does strike me as being most extraordinary that we are asked to take a printed copy with interlineations all through that printed copy, as I understand, and without any examination, such as bills receive that affect even in the slightest degree individuals or their property, by a committee of this body when bills are enrolled, we are asked to take it all upon trust; and because it may cost a few thousand dollars to have the bill enrolled or take some time, we propose to depart from the rule that we adopt with reference to every other bill that has passed through Congress and take this bill without an enrollment. I say I do not know but that it is right; I do not know but that we shall be compelled to do it; but it does strike me as being most extraordinary.

Sir, it seems to me, if there is any bill that ever has passed this body that should require enrollment and most careful scrutiny, this is that bill of all others. It affects the entire machinery of the Government; it affects every man in his relations to the Government; it affects every man in his obligations to the Government; and when we know how easy it is by mispunctuation, or the omission of a word or a letter, to affect the most sacred rights of individuals and also to affect the nation in its interests, it seems to me that, in view of the importance of this bill, if possible this resolution should be avoided. I do not know that it can be, and I do not know but that I shall be compelled to vote for it; but I think it proper to call attention to these things so that we may see where we are. These bills have passed as they are now; they are not enrolled; we take them with all of the interlineations that have been made, with all the errors notwithstanding the care that has been exercised, with all the foot-notes as to errata; we accept them on trust largely. Perhaps we are compelled to accept such a work upon trust; but there never was anything in the history of legislation or in the experience of men that tends to show the fast hurrying disposition of our people more than this very thing. Here, as I have said, is a law of the magnitude I have spoken of, and we cannot take time to observe the rules that are required to protect, certainly or as far as it is possible by rules, the rights of individuals and protect the Government also. I think if possible some other means ought to be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if there is any practical difficulty in putting these bills, as they now stand, with the interlineations, with new numbers of the sections, &c., in printed form. In other words, I ask him if the original type, the original basis of this compilation, is still standing, or is it stereotyped?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not sure whether the original type is standing or not, and the Congressional Printer is not sure. I can ascertain in a short time by telegraphing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator also how long it will take to set up the type or compose it again in case the type has been distributed?

Mr. ANTHONY. The book, I suppose, contains about three thousand pages. I think the printer could get off two hundred pages a day. I think he could do it in twenty days certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the original type is still standing, I suppose there will be no difficulty in inserting all the amendments, correcting all the errata, and numbering the sections as they will stand finally, and thus give us a clean printed copy within a few days.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the original type is standing, that could be done in a few days, and that would make the most perfect enrollment we could have, without any erasures.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is some force in the objections that have been made to putting on file in the State Department as an enrolled bill the final bill passed, a bill with a great many interlineations, writings, &c., in it. It may give rise to controversies hereafter. Some future changes may be made upon this single copy. I think it would be a great deal better, if it is practicable, to have this bill put in type. If the type is now standing it could be very easily done, and all these amendments could be noted, and then the President could sign a clean bill, and it would be impossible ever hereafter to change that bill, because there would be other copies printed in the same form, and it would be impossible to have any dispute about it, except possibly on account of mistakes made in the printing of the amendments, but they could not be very dangerous.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the type is standing I should think the amendments might be printed and a perfect volume made with those copies we have.

Mr. SHERMAN. According to the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island, two hundred pages a day could be set up, and there being three thousand pages, it might be done in the course of two or three weeks, and then it would be perfect, and the completed book could be printed from that type; so that I think there is no expense lost and only a little delay.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think if the interlineations and amendments do not occur upon a very large proportion of the pages, the pages upon which they do occur might be reprinted and inserted in lieu of the existing pages, and then there would be no alterations with the pen except the enumeration of the sections.

Mr. SHERMAN. It all depends on whether the type is still standing.

Mr. CONKLING. The bill was printed several months ago, and they could not spare so much type.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not appear to me that there is any difficulty in enrolling this bill in the regular way except the difficulty of hard work by several persons. It will take one hundred and eighty days, the Senator from New York says. Well, if you employ fifty clerks they can do it in four days, because it is of such a nature that you can take various copies of the print where there are not interlineations and erasures, and copy them; and you could employ, if you wanted to do so, five hundred people, and there are enough scriveners who are competent and worthy that can be obtained in this town at a day's notice.

Now look at the importance of the thing. Here is this print not only with interlineations which are in one handwriting, I will assume, or in some known handwriting, but here are a great many erasures of printed lines where nothing comes in in their place. Now suppose this goes to the State Department in this form, and a year hence, I being interested in some lawsuit, or right or title, do not want to have the law as it is and I hire somebody to get access to this one copy—as you can; it is done sometimes; you can get access to anything if you have money enough—and run a pen through five or six lines or through a whole section, just as may be the case with the next section. Neither the man who drew that law in committee nor any of us can tell whether he did it or whether it was done afterward. It does not need to imitate anybody's handwriting, but it stands exactly like the rest of it, and it is totally impossible to detect a crime committed in that way.

This is to be a perpetual memorial of what this code of laws is, in case of any dispute on a printed statute. We all understand how the law is. If there is any dispute whether a statute printed by authority is exactly as the law is, a reference is made to the original paper signed by the President and deposited in the State Department to see what the law is. Now we are to be sent to this print. Another line is erased. The statute does not conform to the original roll. The original roll controls, and no oral evidence can be admitted; and you could not get it if it could be admitted. That is extremely dangerous, and it is only met by the suggestion, so fairly made by the Senator from New York, who sees himself the danger of this thing, that it is troublesome to have this measure carefully transcribed in full, examined by the committee, and sent to the President. All that can be done in a week. I hope, therefore, we shall disagree to this resolution and let the very competent Clerk of the House of Representatives, whose business it is, see that this bill is regularly enrolled and regularly presented to the President.

Mr. MORTON. It occurs to me that there is more danger to result from the hasty transcription of this immense volume by writers who are picked up here and there for the occasion, and done in hot haste, than to take it in its present form. I admit the dangers resulting from placing these bills on file in their present form; but I think we need not hesitate now very much. It is straining at a comparatively small gnat after having swallowed this immense camel of a volume without knowing what it was, adopted an entire code, taking it upon the trust of three commissioners.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We want to know what it is hereafter.

Mr. MORTON. After we have done that, I should think we need not be afraid of small dangers, such as have been pointed out by Senators.

Mr. CONKLING. I am very glad that other members of the Senate have expressed their opinion as far as they have done on this subject. I took occasion to say before that I made no motion about this resolution, and I say now that I am quite unwilling to have the resolution adopted by the Senate either upon my motion or upon my advice or recommendation in any form. That this is a dangerous mode of proceeding and preserving in the archives of the Government an original authentic record of a bill so important and grave as this, no one can doubt. I felt bound to state, as I have done, to the Senate the considerations which had been suggested in regard to it; and now having heard the suggestions which have been made, I venture to make this further proposition: If it would take one clerk one hundred and eighty days to enroll this, it would take eighteen clerks ten days, would it not?

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. That is good arithmetic.

Mr. CONKLING. That is certified by Senators here who are known arithmeticians. Even the Senator from Vermont agrees to that; and it must be unquestionable. Then, Mr. President, it is possible to take this volume and by separating its leaves, separating it into chapters or what the printers would call signatures, and committing each one to a clerk to enroll, to accomplish it except so far as the pages of parchment would mismatch; and there is something not to be overlooked. Senators have spoken of the readiness with which a word might be added, a change made. When you have copied upon almost countless pages by different hands, of course in different handwritings, this bill, leaving on a page perhaps an inch of unoccupied margin——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That must be marked.

Mr. CONKLING. On another carrying it all the way down, although as the Senator from Vermont says it would be very easy to resort, as we do in filling up a blank or even a check, drawing a line or transverse lines which would fill the space, still every one must see that here is a piece of work accessible to error and accessible to wrong. There is trouble about it in any way. If you commit it to a single clerk to copy, one hundred and eighty days beside Sundays, assuming that he pursues his work every day, would elapse. The printing is not to begin till after that; and meanwhile here is a great space with the law buried away where nobody can read it or have access to it. That is objectionable. Having it done by contemporaneous and various copyists is objectionable; and having it done in the way proposed in the resolution is objectionable.

Now, making no motion myself about this resolution and asking the Senate to dispose of it, I leave it, with an inclination, I will say before taking my seat, to believe that upon the whole, the safest, the most cautious thing we can do is to leave the acts for enrollment as an enrollment can best be made by as many hands as can be applied to the work under the direction of the committees of the two Houses having charge of enrolled bills.

A suggestion occurs to me which I believe nobody has yet made, and, if I am right in it, I wonder that it has occurred to no one else. The session is to terminate on the 22d of next month. These bills are to fail unless they be signed or ten days elapse while Congress is still in session. If the President washes his hands of a bill for ten days, Congress being present, it becomes a law; but if the Senate adjourns meanwhile and he does not sign it, it fails to become a law. Now I ask the question whether any mode of enrolling these bills which has been suggested is likely to reach their enrollment so as to have them presented for the signature of the President in season not to have the whole enactment perish for lack of the executive signature.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there any practical difficulty in having this whole law as it now stands put in type, so that a clean printed copy may be presented to the President?

Mr. CONKLING. I observed that suggestion of my friend a moment ago, and this struck me and I think it will strike him: In the first place suppose you can set up two hundred pages a day, it will take two or three weeks. Now I ask the Senator who is going to read it, who is going to traverse minutely a greater body of printed matter than is contained in the Old and New Testaments both put together, so as to know that it is right in punctuation? The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] called attention to the harm that a comma did. Who is to study the commas on three thousand octavo pages, after it has taken three weeks to set them up, and have the result of that study ready to submit for the signature of the President before the 22d of June?

Mr. SHERMAN. It would be difficult to prevent the possibility of some mistakes being made in the printed copy; but we avoid the great danger which is to be feared from the manner proposed. It will not be possible to have that printed copy, which will be signed by the President, altered, because being in print, without erasure; no copying can change it; and if there is any defect in the law it will be very quickly ascertained and may be immediately corrected. But if you adopt the method proposed by the House of Representatives, a controversy may arise after this in regard to what were the identical provisions of the law.

Mr. CONKLING. Would the Senator under his suggestion take the hazard of presenting from the printing house to the President, without its being read, such a copy as would there be made?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly there is danger; but it must be done under the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. CONKLING. They have nothing to compare by.

Mr. SHERMAN. The copy now here can be duplicated in exact form, and this copy will not be sent to the printer.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What is the objection to printing the whole book?

Mr. CONKLING. Of course, absolute identity is the object we seek. In the first place, on every page of the printed book changes have been made several times on a page, in the numbering of sections, for example. Of course if you take the printed book as it is, and go on with a pen and make all those changes, then you have simply duplicated the very thing that we have. Then if you reprint wherever a considerable interlineation occurs and reprint nothing else, you have still substantially the same uncertainty that there is. Therefore if you are to produce, as the Senator from Ohio suggests, one complete and clean copy in print, the type having been distributed, you must set it all up again, because if you reprint merely those pages on which the alterations are most numerous you must then take the newly printed pages and bind them up together with other pages on every one of which alterations have been made with the pen in respect of the numbers of the sections, not to speak of anything else.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The alterations in the numbering of sections are not material; but wherever a change is made in the text, I would print that so as to have a perfect printed copy with the exception of the numbering of the sections.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not see why this printed copy which we have may not be duplicated. The amendments in it are not numerous. I do not see why another printed copy may not be taken and these amendments inserted in that printed copy. These two printed copies, the original and the duplicate, could be examined by the proper committee and verified; and then I do not see why a sufficient number of printers cannot be put at work on this verified copy and a fair print made of the whole revision. That fair print before it is sent to the President for his signature can be verified by the proper committee, and it seems to me certain that as many printers can be put on this work as you can put clerks at copying. The work will be taken to pieces and put in the hands of separate printers; and there can be no difficulty in the proper committee taking the original print and taking another printed copy and interlining the amendments as they have been interlined in the original, making an exact duplicate of the original, taking that duplicate to the printing office and having a fair copy produced in print and then examined by the proper committee in comparison with the original, and if it be found correct, let it be sent to the President for his signature. It seems to me that might be done in eight or ten days, or two weeks at the outside.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am satisfied on reflection and listening to the suggestions which have been made that the only safe way is to have these bills enrolled in the usual mode. It is not to the mistakes that may be made that we are to look for the great danger; but it is to alterations that may be made twenty years hence in the original document; and as has been already suggested, while the interlineation of words might be traced because handwriting is always some guide to its authenticity, mere erasures cannot be traced, and a section may be stricken out of this document twenty years from now and it would be utterly impossible to determine whether it had been altered or not. There is to be no copy kept anywhere to compare it with. The rule of law is well settled, that where statutes printed by authority are supposed to be erroneous, that question must be settled by a reference to the original document in the possession of the Secretary of State, and that would be so here.

As to the inconvenience of doing this, of course it is inconvenient. There are inconveniences all around this subject, and must necessarily be. The Clerk of the House, if need be, if he cannot find sufficient force without doing that, can apply to the Secretary of the Treasury and have twenty-five clerks detailed to enroll this document, who will make good engrossing clerks, whose profession is to copy papers, and who will copy accurately. He can get twenty-five or he can get fifty clerks from the Departments detailed on simple application on a necessity of this kind. There is no insurmountable difficulty in the way of enrolling these bills in the usual way; and certainly the mere expense of doing it ought not to weigh one moment, it seems to me, considering the great importance of having a permanent record of these bills in a form that cannot easily be forged or changed. I shall therefore vote against this resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is in order, I move that this matter be referred to the Committee on Printing for the purpose of seeing whether a printed copy cannot be procured in time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it had better be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. SHERMAN. Or the Committee on Enrolled Bills. I think the better way is to present this revision in type and give us an example of the reform we have been told so often about, of printing bills instead of enrolling them on parchment. The committee can learn whether this bill can be printed and a complete printed copy, that cannot be altered, presented to the President in a week or two. If so, it solves the question.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am quite willing to entertain the question; but it seems to me that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, who have had this whole subject under consideration and have been consulting with Senators on other committees, would be the proper committee to consider that question.

Mr. CONKLING. How does this pertain to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws? I think that committee in a manifest sense has very fully discharged its duty, whether well or not, on this subject. This now is a matter merely of enrollment. The same question might arise upon any other bill. Here is the Committee on Enrolled Bills, of which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLAYTON] is chairman. This behooves him, not the Committee on Revision any more than if the bill had come from the Committee on Finance it would behoove the Committee on Finance to see to its enrollment.

I simply call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that this has now reached that stage which ordinarily pertains to the Committee on Enrolled Bills. If anything is to be done touching its printing, that goes to the Committee on Printing, and there is no knowledge that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws has, nothing which is to be found in the particular provisions of the bills, to change the question at all. The question is whether these great bills, enormous as they are in volume, no matter what their contents are, are to be enrolled in one way or another.

Mr. BOUTWELL. This discussion has demonstrated that it is practicable to pursue the usual course in regard to these bills, and therefore for one I should be indisposed to accept the suggestion to try the experiment of enrolling these bills in print. As this is perhaps the most important legislative act that has ever been performed, if we are to introduce a new system it had better be upon matters of ordinary legislation. In the first place it is possible to employ enrolling clerks in sufficient number to do this work. We can employ readers. Of course it is not possible for the Committee on Enrolled Bills to examine the enrollment; but it is possible to employ competent readers, distinct from the enrolling clerks, who shall examine the work and compare it with the bills which have passed both Houses of Congress.

The dangers of willful alteration in these bills are not as large at the present moment as they often are in matters of legislation affecting immediate interests. This bill mostly relates to public interests in which private parties for the moment have no special concern, and therefore the danger that enrolling clerks would be tempted or bribed to make alterations is very slight. But when these bills, thus constructed, with erasures, interlineations, additions, shall have been deposited in the Department of State, and questions shall arise hereafter affecting the right, the liberty, or the life of persons, then the temptation will be very great to cause alterations to be made in the original of the statutes; and that danger we ought now to guard against, and I believe we guard against it most perfectly by pursuing the usual course. The danger of a subsequent alteration of an enrolled bill upon parchment is very slight indeed. I consider it so slight that it is not worth the consideration of the legislative branch of the Government; and inasmuch as it is practicable to do this work in the ordinary way, I hope we shall decide to-day, so far as the Senate is concerned, that there shall be no departure from the usual course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to refer the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me, let me suggest a motion to disagree to this resolution. It is the only motion which it occurs to me will be communicated to the other House; and inasmuch as the matter is in charge of the House, we ought not to postpone the resolution or lay it on the table or let it slip so that they would not have notice of its disposition. If we disagree, that fact will be communicated to the House and they can go on with diligence and see what ought to be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to disagree to the resolution of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. That will leave to the House the determination of what is to be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will leave the House to do its duty; the Clerk of the House to enroll these bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to, and the resolution was disagreed to.

FREE BANKING—THE CURRENCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes, and asking a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment to the House bill and grant the request for a committee of conference. I wish to say——

Mr. SARGENT. I move to amend by proposing that the Senate adhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not? That motion takes precedence.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Chair rule that the motion to adhere is not in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds the motion to be out of order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Chair rule that my motion is out of order as an original motion or as an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand both motions can be made contemporaneously, that a motion to insist takes precedence, but both motions are in order and both may be pending at the same moment, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to insist takes precedence. If that fails, the other motion can then be made in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Both motions can be made at the same time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate insist on its amendment and grant the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST.] If he were here he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on this motion.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KELLY, (who had voted in the negative.) I wish to withdraw the vote I gave. I forgot that I was paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. DENNIS] now absent. He would vote for the motion; I should vote against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Carpenter, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Sprague, Tipton, Windom, and Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler, Conkling, Cooper, Edmunds, Fenton, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, Wadleigh, and Washburn—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Brownlow, Cameron, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Ferry of Connecticut, Hager, Howe, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Spencer, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, and West—18.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suppose the next question is how shall the committee be appointed. I trust there will be no objection to the Chair appointing the committee in the usual way.

Mr. CONKLING. Nobody has made any objection to it, I think.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I suppose it will be understood that the Chair appoints the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the committee of conference be appointed by the Chair. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say before the matter passes from the consideration of the Senate that I suppose ordinarily I should be entitled to a place on the committee, having made the motion; but in view of my engagements upon the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Finance, both of which committees have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, I ask to be excused from serving on the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORTON, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. MERRIMON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 3422) for the relief of Mercy Ann Hall, widow of Captain Charles F. Hall—to the Committee on the Library.

The bill (H. R. No. 3522) to extend the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 3509) to expedite the survey of private land claims—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 2770) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States,'" approved August 6, 1856;

A bill (H. R. No. 3247) in relation to executors' bonds in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3514) to provide for the taking of land by the United States for public use and providing for just compensation to the owners thereof;

A bill (H. R. No. 2976) to define a legal day's work in certain cases;

A bill (H. R. No. 3516) to make valid assignment of wages or salaries of officers, agents, or employés of the Government;

A bill (H. R. No. 3519) to provide for holding terms of the United States circuit court for the western circuit of Missouri at Saint Joseph and Kansas City, Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3520) to remove the political disabilities of George E. Pickett, and Dr. Charles H. Williamson, of Virginia; Thomas Hardeman, jr., and James Jackson, of Georgia; and John H. Reagan, of Texas.

PONTON BRIDGES ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2538) to legalize and establish a ponton railway-bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien:

The amendment of the House was to add to section 4 of the Senate amendments the following proviso:

Provided, That in the bridge mentioned in this section only one draw shall be required unless otherwise determined by the Secretary of War, which draw shall be located as he may direct, and be not less than four hundred and eight feet in width.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I move that the Senate concur with the House in the amendment to the amendment of the Senate to that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. DAVIS. According to the understanding that we would take up to-day Senate bill No. 571, I move now to proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS. I appeal to the Senator from Maine to give way for a few moments. It will only take a few moments to dispose of Senate bill No. 571. It is well known to the Senate that this is the third or fourth occasion when a time has been set for the consideration of the bill, and I appeal to the Senator from Maine to give way.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will give way if it is not to occupy time. My honorable friend thinks he can dispose of it without discussion. If so I will yield, reserving the right to call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill will be laid aside informally.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the appropriation bill was up, my colleague, who has an interest in this railroad bill proposed by the Senator from West Virginia, has stepped out, and I hope we shall go on with the regular order until he comes in.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If there is any hitch about it, I will call up the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have sent for my colleague. I suppose he had no idea that this bill would be called up at this moment.

Mr. DAVIS. There are amendments to which we all agree to perfect the bill, and we can act on them before the Senator comes in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will not want those amendments. I submit to the Senator from West Virginia whether he himself thinks it would be quite the thing to suddenly start off with this bill when another subject was before the Senate until the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall have an opportunity to come in.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the bill be read. The Senator will be here in a moment, I suppose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator insists, I think it my duty——

Mr. DAVIS. Here he is now.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 571) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch, and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. DAVIS to strike out the following words commencing in line 7 of section 1:

> And, also, with both said branch roads, to enter the city of Washington at a point on its northeastern boundary, between the points where said two roads now enter said city, and to locate and construct said roads upon such new route, and with such number of tracks in said city as may be agreed upon between said company and the board of public works of the District of Columbia, to its present passenger depot, or such other as may be constructed on square 681.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to hear an explanation of that bill and the amendment. I do not know that I understand this bill now.

Mr. DAVIS. The whole explanation is that as the bill is proposed to be amended it permits the two roads of the Baltimore and Ohio Company, the one leading from Baltimore and the one leading from the West, to connect outside of the city limits. That is the intention of the bill, and it will do nothing else as it will be perfected when the amendments are made. The bill does not propose to touch at present anything within the limits of the city.

Mr. STEWART. If that is the bill, I have no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. That is all of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move as a substitute for the bill to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order at the present time.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Let us perfect the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator will have an opportunity to offer his amendment after the bill is perfected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire, then, to make an explanation of this bill. As it now stands, the bill proposes to grant to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company the right to bring together their two branch roads outside of the District, but it does not propose to remove either of the branches that come into the city upon the right and left of Delaware avenue, and proposes to leave the depot on New Jersey avenue as it is now and until there shall be some future legislation.

I had supposed that the vice-president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company would at once accept the proposition that is made in my amendment, which Senators can get by application to the Clerk if it is not on their desks, which provides that these roads may be connected outside of the District and come in on Delaware avenue, and then gives them the right to condemn any amount of lands on the northeast of Massachusetts avenue to take one or more squares as may be necessary on either side of Delaware avenue. But I find that the representative of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is unwilling to do anything to relieve the District either at this end of the road or the other, but desires that we shall grant them the privilege of intersecting outside of Washington and in the District. It has appeared to me that it would be better for us to settle this question now rather than to postpone it and to ask for action at the short session of Congress next winter.

It does seem to me that the railroad company need have no apprehension of future legislation provided they build their depot northeast of Massachusetts avenue, a central spot where two large avenues cross each other and several other streets; that will give them access to the central portion of the city, and certainly it seems to me to afford the best accommodations that any railroad need require if it is coming into the city at all. I may say that the general sentiment of the world is adverse to the idea of railroads coming into large cities at all, unless they come underground or over the tops of buildings. In Europe I believe it is almost universally the case now that railroad companies have been compelled to build their depots on the boundary lines of cities, or to come in underground or over the tops of houses and stores and other buildings.

Under these circumstances, several of the best citizens of this city have written to me since the discussion we had the day before yesterday, urging that this road ought not to be permitted to come even as far as Massachusetts avenue, but that it ought to be kept back to K street or to the outside boundaries of the city. If, as the amendment which I have proposed provides, we allow both these roads to connect outside of the city and to come in on Delaware avenue, and come down to the northeastern side of Massachusetts avenue, it seems to me that is all that ought to be required; and I presume that for the next twenty-five years there will be no complaint about it.

I therefore trust that if this bill is to pass at all, it will pass in the shape I have presented in the amendment I have submitted. I have certainly endeavored, on consultation with several members engaged in the discussion on the day before yesterday, to make it so that it will give all the favors that any reasonable party ought to require; that is to say, to give the company an opportunity to purchase any land that they desire or to have it condemned under process of law. Under these circumstances I trust that the Senate will adhere to the idea that we ought to have some care for this city after it has been to such vast expense in improving the various avenues and streets; and that we shall not allow them to remain incumbered by nuisances or to allow new ones to be constructed and built up.

Mr. SHERMAN. My attention was first called to this matter yesterday; and I looked with the Senator from Vermont over the papers and documents relating to it. The request now made by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company is to allow them to connect their two outside railroads that do not come within the city of Washington at all. They have one route from the West called the Metropolitan Branch which approaches the city on the north; they have also their route from Baltimore which approaches the city on the northeast, both outside the city. Before they reach the city of Washington they come within three or four miles of each other. This bill authorizes them to connect those two branches so that the freight trains instead of all coming into Washington and backing out again may form a connection outside and pass on to Baltimore or around the city to their southern connections. In other words, the idea is that their western trade may connect with the South and with Baltimore without coming through this city. To refuse that it seems to me would be very hard indeed. The Senator from Vermont does not propose to refuse it in his amendment. He gives them what they ask in that respect. All the company ask of us is simply the authority to build a lateral road connecting their two branches outside of the city, most of it in the State of Maryland but touching the District for some two or three miles. There is no objection to the proposition made by the railroad company. But the Senator from Vermont desires as a condition to granting them not this favor, but what would appear to be a right, to compel them to locate their depot in a particular place. He wants as a condition-precedent to granting them what everybody would say they ought to have, to compel them to locate their depot at the corner of Massachusetts avenue and Delaware avenue. I am rather inclined to think it is better for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, better for the community, better for all parties, that they should locate their depot, when they move their present one, at the place designated by the Senator from Vermont; but I appeal to him whether it is right to delay granting a reasonable request, a request that he himself says is reasonable, that he is willing to concede, merely to compel them to remove their present depot beyond Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No. I consulted with the Senator from Ohio yesterday, and I thought he was agreed upon the amendment which I presented and expressed to me his approbation of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not agree that it is reasonable and right that they should come in on two tracks and cross over fifteen or twenty streets with the two roads now or at any other time. I think when we give up a whole avenue and blot it out for all useful purposes and that without price, they ought to be compelled to come in on that, and not put the city to great inconvenience in relation to travel in two other directions instead.

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly when they make this lateral track at great expense they will come in in that way, and that will necessarily lead to the abandonment of the track they now use. But look at the other point. While I am disposed to agree with the Senator from Vermont that the best place for the location of the Baltimore and Ohio depot is north of Massachusetts avenue at the intersection of Delaware and Massachusetts avenues, there are some facts which the Senator from Vermont did not tell me yesterday but which I have learned since, and I will ask him whether they are facts or not.

In the first place, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company are compelled by the change of grades in this city to remove their depot from its present location. They have had earth piled up on two sides of them and are threatened to be overflown, and are required to build large embankments. Indeed, the grade of the city runs over their track so that it is impossible that they can carry on business at the present depot. They are compelled to move; they are compelled to seek another place for locating their depot.

Then two or three years ago Congress granted to their rival, the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, a very favorable location within two hundred yards of Pennsylvania avenue. I voted for that proposition. I thought it was right at the time, although I see myself now that it is making a much greater obstruction to the Mall than I supposed at the time. Perhaps when the improvements are made that they contemplate it will not be so much so; but it is a serious objection now to crossing the Mall. At any rate that privilege was granted to them. At the same time we passed laws which compelled the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to abandon their present property without any compensation. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, according to statements made to me, went to work and purchased a square of ground which cost them over $100,000. They did that after consulting with the District authorities, who by law are authorized to fix the site. They had the grant of power to go to their present depot, crossing over the very route now occupied, and they have occupied that ground for thirty years. They have purchased ground which cost them $100,000 which happens to be this side of Massachusetts avenue. They have arranged with the District government for all their crossings, for parks, for avenues, for grades. They have compounded and arranged with the District government so as to allow them to build their depot on the site selected, and they have purchased the ground.

If these are facts, it seems to me they give to this railroad company a very strong equity against the proposition now made by the Senator from Vermont to require them to abandon the purchase they have made and to remove their depot beyond Massachusetts avenue.

But let us go a little further. I understand that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company do not deny that Congress may require them to remove their depot beyond Massachusetts avenue, to abandon the purchase they have already made, and to comply with whatever requirements may be made by Congress; but pending this matter, the Senator from Vermont introduces a proposition that this whole subject be referred to a commission, that the question of the right of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad to retain its present advantageous location shall be referred to a commission and also the question of a site for a depot as a union depot or for a depot for each, and all the questions which relate to the right of these various companies. The whole question of the location of depots and the construction of routes he proposes shall be referred to a commission, and that bill is pending. As I understand, the representatives of the Baltimere and Ohio Railroad are perfectly willing and anxious to have that bill passed, so that their rights may be fixed definitely with the rights of other railroad companies whose roads come into the District.

Under these circumstances, I submit to the Senator from Vermont whether it is not reasonable to postpone action upon this compulsory process, requiring this company to abandon the purchase already made at an expense of $100,000, requiring them to abandon the legal arrangement they have made with the District authorities and locate their depot at the point where he and I think it ought to be, till a general examination shall be made under the bill the Senator himself proposes to pass, when the whole subject can be examined into and a final location of these depots be fixed by law.

Under the circumstances I think it would be unjust to delay the granting of authority to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to build this lateral branch until the question of the final location of their depot shall be settled. All this bill proposes, as I understand it, is to authorize them to connect their tracks outside of the city, leaving the question as to the location of the depot, the question as to all the tracks within the city and all the authorities conferred by law within the city, both by the District government and the General Government, to be settled by the future legislation of Congress. It seems to me that, having dealt so liberally with the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, we ought to give the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad the facility of making a lateral road to connect their different branches, and without embarrassment by legislation that would create delay, and that is evidently hostile to them and will delay their operations in the construction of their lateral branch.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not agree at all with the Senator from Ohio that the District of Columbia has any authority whatever in relation to this matter. It is true, I suppose, that this railroad company have purchased a lot of land, but it is not true that they will suffer any loss from it, because if they were to remove their depot and locate it where it is proposed they may locate it, the land that they have purchased will be worth a great deal more than they gave for it.

But I do not desire to prolong the discussion. It is and must be clearly understood by all Senators present that this road demands privileges and yet will not concede one jot or tittle to the convenience of the city. I desire to see and shall ask for a record of the vote whether we are prepared in all cases to yield whatever may be demanded by railroads and to ask nothing in return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Now I move my amendment as a substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I have another amendment to offer to perfect the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the amendments of the Senator from West Virginia be disposed of first before the proposition of the Senator from Vermont is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is first in order to perfect the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. My amendment is to the second section, to strike out all after the word "company" on line 10, as follows:

Of the roads hereby authorized to be constructed, or "to enter said city of Washington on its northeastern boundary, at Delaware avenue, and to construct said road along Delaware avenue, with as many tracks as may be necessary to connect with that portion of said Washington branch now located on said avenue.'

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Now I propose an amendment to the first section. On the seventh line, after the word "District," I move to insert "outside of the city of Washington."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to hear the bill read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct a lateral road, from any point on its Washington branch, into the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, to intersect the Metropolitan branch thereof at any point in said county and District outside of the city of Washington: Provided, That such work shall be completed within five years after the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That all the provisions of the several acts of Congress relating to the lateral road authorized to be built into and within the District of Columbia by an act passed March 2, 1831, entitled "An act to authorize the extension, construction, and use of a lateral branch of the Baltimore and Ohio road into and within the District of Columbia," and the supplements thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared to apply, as far as they are applicable, to the location, construction, and use by said company of the roads hereby authorized to be constructed.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think the language is exactly what is intended. It speaks of intersecting outside of the city of Washington. The construction should be outside too. I do not think that is covered by the language used.

Mr. SHERMAN. It cannot be otherwise.

Mr. STEWART. That ought to be amended.

Mr. DAVIS. There is no objection to the Senator's suggestion. That is the intention and meaning.

Mr. STEWART. I know it is the intention, but I want no doubt about it being expressed that the road shall be entirely outside of the city limits. Let the clause read:

To intersect the Metropolitan branch thereof at any point in said county and District, the whole of said branch road being outside of the city of Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection this amendment will be agreed to. It is agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to insert in line 9 of section 2, after the word "applicable," the words "and in conformity to the provisions of this act."

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I see no objection to that.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the clause be read as it would be if amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment will make the clause read:

SEC. 2. That all the provisions of the several acts of Congress relating to the lateral road authorized to be built into and within the District of Columbia by an act passed March 2, 1831, entitled "An act to authorize the extension, construction, and use of a lateral branch of the Baltimore and Ohio road into and within the District of Columbia," and the supplements thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared to apply, as far as they are applicable and in conformity to the provisions of this act, to the location, construction, and use by said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am very reluctant to correct the grammar of the Committee on the District of Columbia; but I really do not understand this language: "and the supplements thereto be, and they are hereby, declared to apply." I should like to know exactly what that means. I suppose that it means "shall apply and they are hereby declared to apply."

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to amend by striking out "be" in line 8 and inserting "shall apply."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Now I move the amendment proposed by me as a substitute for the entire bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be inserted will be read by the Clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be, and hereby is, authorized to construct a lateral road from any point on its Washington branch, in the District of Columbia, to intersect the Metropolitan branch of said company at any point in said District outside of the city of Washington; and, when so united, to enter the city of Washington with both of said branch roads at a point on the northeastern boundary of said city, on Delaware avenue, removing all branch roads which now enter the city elsewhere, and may locate and construct said roads with four tracks upon said avenue, occupying not more than forty-four feet of the central portion thereof, to any convenient point or terminus northeast of Massachusetts avenue; and said railroad company may, and shall, within two years from the passage of this act, remove their present tracks and depot and construct, at the terminus of the branch roads herein authorized, a depot at some point or place upon any square or squares on either side of Delaware avenue northeast of Massachusetts avenue.

SEC. 2. That the tracks on Delaware avenue as afcresaid shall be so constructed, upon the established grade, as not to impede the passage or transportation of persons or property across the same, and shall be fenced or parked, except at the crossings of streets, which shall be guarded by flagmen, to give warning of the approach of trains; and any pavement that may be taken up or removed shall be restored and replaced and kept in good and complete order, on Delaware avenue, to the extent of the ground occupied by said tracks and two feet on either side of the same; and all trains moved by steam-power of this or any other railroad company shall be allowed no greater speed than at the rate of six miles per hour within the limits of the city of Washington.

SEC. 3. That all the provisions of the several acts of Congress relating to the lateral road authorized to be built into and within the District of Columbia, by the act passed March 2, 1831, entitled "An act to authorize the extension, construction, and use of a lateral branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad into and within the District of Columbia," and the supplements thereto shall apply, as far as they may be applicable and not inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act, to the location, construction, and use, by said company, of the branch roads and passenger depot hereby authorized to be constructed, and for the purchase or acquisition by other legal process of any real estate on either side of Delaware avenue northeast of Massachusetts avenue, for the purpose herein mentioned, and no other.

SEC. 4. That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to what will be the practical result of the passage of the first bill proposed and which has been read and perfected here. It will leave the question of the depot to remain a great annoyance and nuisance, so far as the completion of all streets in this neighborhood is concerned, for another year at least. It will also leave at the further end of the city these two tracks to come in on the right and the left of Delaware avenue. It is a postponement of the question. It is no relief at any one point of the present inconveniences of this road. I do not see why the question cannot as well be determined now as at any time. I do not understand that the company or any friend of the company objects to the proposition that has been made by me as unjust, as improper, or even as likely to be changed hereafter if it should be adopted now. Then why not act upon it now? Why postpone it for another year? Why can we not have one question in relation to railroads settled, and settled somewhat as the wishes of Congress may seem to deem correct?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am going to vote against the proposition of the Senator from Vermont for the very reason which he has alleged, upon the very statement he has made, because I wish to know a little more definitely what justice and equity require in relation to this road when contrasted with what we have done by other roads that come into the city, before I am willing to vote for the amendment which the Senator has presented. I do not know that upon mature consideration I shall not agree to do at some future time precisely what this amendment proposes; I give no opinion now. My opinions probably differ from those of any other Senator in this body. I have no horror of railroads coming into this city. I remember when this railroad came down to Pennsylvania avenue, and it would have my vote to come there now. I believe that when you accommodate railroads you accommodate the public. I believe railroads are entitled to accommodations as well as individuals. I voted to bring in the railroad of the Baltimore and Potomac Company to Sixth street, and I would vote to-day to do that very thing. It was an accommodation to that road, but it was a vastly greater accommodation to the public. When you bring as near as you may to the central portions of your city your modes of communication, you do what? You accommodate those who have occasion to use those roads.

Now, as I understand the proposition, the bill as perfected in the Senate simply allows the roads of this company going north and south around this city to make their connection north and south outside the city limits. That is all there is in the bill. If you add to this now what the Senator proposes, you get in a controverted question, which would not trouble me, but a question which in all human probability will defeat the bill for this session, and then you go over a year, leaving this railroad in a position which is objectionable to my friend from Vermont; but you leave the whole of it; the whole goes over. Instead of one-half of the proposition, the whole of it goes over another year, and I do not know but that it will go to the end of time.

I would give the facilities that these roads want to make connection so that they may go north and south outside of the limits of the city, and I would leave it to subsequent legislation to determine well and wisely what we shall do. If we are disposed to apply the power which we possess to this road we may do it hereafter, though the power which I would apply would be one of a very gentle character, because I have none of the alarm that troubles other gentlemen so much about allowing railroads to come into the city for the purpose of accommodating the city.

These are my views, and for these reasons I shall vote for the bill as it has been perfected and against the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. STEWART. I am inclined to think that the bill had better be passed as perfected without the amendment. I agree in part with the Senator from Maine, that railroads coming into a city need excite no horror wherever they come in right, and engineering can determine that question. I have observed in cities where they come in underground or overground they do not disturb travel, and if they have handsome depots they are not a nuisance in a city. I believe the Senator from Vermont is on the right track with his bill for a plan. It may be that the plan which the engineers will suggest will be not to remove the depots so far out, but to put them where they will not destroy the symmetry of the city, not interfere with travel, not endanger life, and they should be located in such a manner as will accommodate the railroads and the people. If that plan be separate depots or that a portion of the city should be dedicated for that purpose, or any plan consistent with convenience and beauty, as it undoubtedly would be with the provision suggested by him, we can carry it out. I believe in making both these roads comply with those terms. We legislated rather liberally for the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, and we have got them in a place where they have injured the Mall more than we intended. That has to be remedied in some mode; there is no doubt of that. The situation there has got to be remedied. This location on New Jersey avenue has got to be remedied too. The present situation is inconvenient and unsightly, and it cannot remain as it is.

Inasmuch as the question must be dealt with, I suppose we had better deal with it as a whole after the report of the engineers. I believe there is no objection in the mean time to letting these two branch roads of the Baltimore and Ohio come together. As for having the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad destroy the principal avenues by running across them so as to obstruct view or travel, it is out of the question. If the bill as it was orginally presented were passed allowing them to establish a depot very near the present one, they would be insecure. It would be a vain thing for them to do, and a foolish thing for us to talk about. We cannot tolerate railroads coming into the city in such a way as to destroy the main avenues or injure life or property. If they come in, they must come in underground or overground in such a manner as shall be consistent with the wants of the city and the safety of the people. I think the best way is to let the bill go through as it is perfected and let the immediate wants of the company be attained by the junction of the two roads, and then I hope the Senator from Vermont will press his bill to meet the whole question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will withdraw the amendment, and after this bill shall have passed I will ask the Senate to pass the bill appointing a commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Now I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 861) for a commission to regulate and arrange tracks and depots and steam-railways within the city of Washington.

Mr. ROBERTSON and Mr. JOHNSTON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then I move to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then I enter a motion to reconsider the vote on the bill just passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont enters a motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (S. No. 571) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 857) to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof. I see the Senator from Maine has possession of the floor; I suppose for his appropriation bill; but I ask that that be laid aside informally.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would suggest that the Senate made a special assignment for the business of the Committee on Pensions at three o'clock to-day, subject to appropriation bills only. I had rather made up my mind not to interfere with the business of that committee this afternoon.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator will give me, as the time of the Senate necessarily belongs mainly to him, the opportunity to bring up this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will; and I will indicate to the Senator when that can be done.

Mr. ANTHONY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I objected to the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Vermont for these reasons: The subject is an important one, and I do not think the bill ought to be passed in a hasty manner. Besides, it relates to a subject appertaining to the Committee on the District of Columbia and it has not been considered by that committee, and as a member of that committee I object to any other committee of the Senate undertaking to take jurisdiction of what properly belongs to it and report bills which should come from that committee.

Mr. PRATT. Now that the hour of three has arrived, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of the bills reported by the Committee on Pensions specially assigned for this hour.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to know whether the Senator from Vermont has entered his motion to reconsider the bill just passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion has been entered.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe that it is in order to ask that that motion be considered now. It is a motion, I was going to say, made merely out of spite. The Senator should reflect that his bill was only introduced this morning; it probably has come from no committee, but is presented on his responsibility, and he asks the Senate to pass it; and because one member objects he moves to reconsider a bill which he himself has no objection to. I ask the Senate to settle that question by proceeding to vote on that motion. That will be the end of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent of the Senate the hour of three o'clock this afternoon was assigned for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Pensions. That hour having arrived, the Senator from Indiana is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator from Indiana to allow a vote to be taken on the motion to reconsider and let the matter be settled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. PRATT. I cannot.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move, as it is a matter that ought to be settled and as the Senate was almost unanimous in passing the bill, to postpone the pending order and take up the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana was on the floor and did not yield to the Senator from West Virginia for that purpose. The Chair cannot entertain his motion. The Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I give notice that as soon as the floor is yielded by the Senator from Indiana I shall make the motion.

ANN CRANE.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 280, granting a pension to Ann Crane.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, Mr. President, am I entitled to the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS.) The Senator from Indiana has made a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will state his point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My point of order is that the Senator from Indiana cannot retain the floor to have a bill brought before the Senate until other Senators can discuss the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont may not remember that to-day after the hour of three o'clock was specially assigned by the Senate for the consideration of cases reported by the Committee on Pensions, and that hour having arrived, the Senator from Indiana asked the attention of the Chair and received the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; he has the floor and has made a motion. Now I ask the Chair if that motion is not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair supposes that it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well. Then, the motion being debatable, I suppose any Senator would have the right to take the floor and debate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Indiana yields the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senator cannot retain the floor while the bill is being read, I submit. He certainly cannot hold the floor until his bill is passed and prevent all debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was in the act of being read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the question then?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 280. That is the motion, and pending that motion the Clerk was about to report the bill for information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is a motion, it is certainly debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so held.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, if it is debatable, I object to anything being read until the Senator from Indiana finishes his speech, if he is retaining the floor, and when he has yielded, then of course it is open to other Senators. I make this point in the interest of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] who insists that he has the right to get the floor to make a motion to postpone or to argue against the taking up of this bill. I do not think the Senator from Indiana can keep the floor and have a bill go through without some other person being entitled to make a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not say that. It is undoubtedly in the province and power of the Senate to postpone this order and take up any other business it pleases.

Mr. DAVIS. Am I now entitled to the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him, and that motion is now pending.

Mr. DAVIS. Now I move to postpone that and all other motions and proceed to consider the motion to reconsider the bill which has just passed.

Mr. PRATT. I hope my friend from West Virginia will not press his motion.

Mr. DAVIS. It will only take a moment.

Mr. PRATT. There are between thirty and forty private bills here to which there is no earthly objection, and we can run them through in the course of half an hour. Then there are some general bills which will come up for consideration and will lead to debate.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator knows that it will only take a moment to vote on the motion to reconsider. All we ask is to have that vote taken. I move to take up the motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of Senate bill No. 571.

Mr. PRATT. I have only to say in opposition——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moved to proceed to the consideration of a bill. The Senator from West Virginia moves to postpone that motion and proceed to the consideration of another bill, which motion is not in order. That end can be reached by voting down the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or he can make his motion after the bill is taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly, after the bill is taken up, the motion will be in order. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move to postpone the present order and proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote on Senate bill No. 571.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. STEWART. I will vote for it on condition that I understand my friend from West Virginia is in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. DAVIS. That is all right then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill taken up on the motion of the Senator from Indiana will now be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Ann Crane. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Ann Crane, widow of the late Benson B. Crane, of Pickens County, South Carolina, and to pay her a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month; to commence from the approval of the act, and to continue during her widowhood.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, in line 6 to strike out "fifteen" and insert "eight;" so as to read, "a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed, and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARY STORRS.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1228.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1228) granting a pension to Mary Storrs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mary Storrs, mother of Charles Storrs, late private in Company K, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and of Gilman D. Storrs, late private in Company B, Tenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers; and to pay her at the rate of eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN M. BRACKETT.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1949.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1949) granting a pension to Ann M. Brackett was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann M. Brackett, widow, mother of John M. Brackett, late a private in Company F, Eighth Regiment Maine Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN V. JACKSON.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 658.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 658) granting a pension to Martin V. Jackson was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin V. Jackson, late a first lieutenant in Captain N. J. Roscoe's Company, Second Regiment of Kansas State Militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS SMITH.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 690.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 690) granting a pension to Thomas Smith was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Smith, late a private in Company C, First Regiment of Michigan Light Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed

JOHN FOLGER.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1439.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1439) granting a pension to John Folger was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Folger, late a private in Company K, One hundred and twenty-second Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EZRA H. FOSTER.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1719.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1719) granting a pension to Ezra H. Foster was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ezra H. Foster, late private in Company I, First Wisconsin Cavalry and in Thirteenth Wisconsin Battery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DENNIS M'CARTHY.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1866.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1866) granting a pension to Dennis McCarthy, a soldier of the Mexican war, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized by the bill to place the name of Dennis McCarthy, Company D, Captain William M. Robinson, First Regiment Virginia Volunteers, upon the pension-roll at eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY BRUCKNER.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2217.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2217) granting a pension to Henry Bruckner, late a private of Company F, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Bruckner, late a private of Company F, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCINDA JONES.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1843.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1843) granting a pension to Lucinda Jones, widow of Thompson M. Jones, late a private of Company G, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda Jones, widow of Thompson M. Jones, late a private in Company G, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the rate of eight dollars per month, and two dollars per month for each child until arriving at the age of sixteen years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JANE DULANEY.

Mr. INGALLS. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to allow me to have the opinion of the Senate upon House bill No. 2680, granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Dulaney.

Mr. PRATT. If my friend will give way until we pass other pension bills, he certainly shall have that opportunity.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2081) to facilitate the exportation of distilled spirits and amendatory of the acts in relation thereto.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 1512) for the relief of C. C. Spaids; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2356) granting a pension to Edwin Jardine, late colonel and brevet brigadier-general United States volunteers.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1507) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Colorado; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3500) to authorize the importation of certain animals for the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, free of duty.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of James P. Gillespie be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That Matilda Barnett and sister have leave to withdraw from the files papers in relation to their claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has there been an adverse report?

Mr. JOHNSTON. There has been.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then copies will be retained.

HELEN M. STANSBURY.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to have an order made recommitting the case of Helen M. Stansbury, widow of Howard Stansbury, late major in the Topographical Engineer Corps, to the Committee on Pensions. The House of Representatives passed a bill giving her a pension, and it was by the Committee on Pensions reported on adversely. I have had a conversation with the chairman of the committee on the subject, and he agrees to the motion. I desire to move that the order discharging the committee be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions with the papers in the case.

Mr. PRATT. I understand from my friend from Minnesota, that there is new testimony in the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the vote discharging the Committee on Pensions from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1943) granting a pension to Helen M. Stansbury be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I now present additional papers in the case, and I move that they be sent with the bill to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS M'KINSTER.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2676.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2676) granting a pension to Thomas McKinster was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas McKinster, late captain of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN BENNETT.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1414.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1414) granting a pension to Susan Bennett was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan Bennett, mother of Peter V. Bennett, late a private in Company I, One hundred and seventy-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LLEWELLYN BELL.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2792.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2792) granting a pension to Llewellyn Bell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Llewellyn Bell, late a private in Company C, Thirty-third Ohio Veteran Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

URIAH W. BRIGGS.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 533.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 533) granting a pension to Uriah W. Briggs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Uriah W. Briggs, of Gorham, New Hampshire, late captain of Company F, Seventeenth Maine Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED BOLDER.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 551.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 551) granting a pension to Alfred Bolder was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alfred Bolder, late a private in Company C, Forty-third Regiment United States Colored Troops, at the rate of eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. S. LOOMIS.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2672.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2672) granting a pension to Mary A. S. Loomis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. S. Loomis, widow of Colonel Gustavus Loomis, late of the United States Army, and to pay her a pension at the rate of thirty dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER J. CRATZER.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 196.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 196) granting a pension to Peter J. Cratzer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Peter J. Cratzer, late a private in Company K, One hundred and thirty-eighth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. LASLEY.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 767.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 767) granting a pension to Andrew J. Lasley was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew J. Lasley, late a private in Company K, Second United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. LONG.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 768.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 768) granting a pension to John S. Long was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John S. Long, late of Company D, First Battalion Twelfth United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. BALDWIN.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2220.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2220) granting a pension to Andrew J. Baldwin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew J. Baldwin, late a corporal in Company G, Tenth Indiana Cavalry Regiment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GUADALOUPE TORRES.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1335.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1335) granting a pension to Guadaloupe Torres was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Guadaloupe Torres, at the rate of eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH HACKLEMAN.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1832.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1832) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hackleman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Hackleman, widow of Robinson Hackleman, deceased, late a private in Company —, Sixteenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH W. SUMNER.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 615.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 615) to increase the pension of Mrs. Hannah W. Sumner, widow of Major-General Edwin V. Sumner, who died March 21, 1863, while in command of the Department of the West, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-rolls the name of Mrs. Hannah W. Sumner, widow of Major-General Edwin V. Sumner, who died March 21, 1863, while in command of the Department of the West, at the rate of fifty dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood, and to be in lieu of the pension heretofore granted to her under the provisions of the general pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAGDALENA DOCKS.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2116.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2116) for the relief of Magdalena Docks was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Magdalena Docks, widow of Francis Docks, late a private in Company A, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. FARNAM.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 240.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 240) granting a pension to John C. Farnam was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John C. Farnam, of Westmoreland, New Hampshire, who was a private in Company E of the Fifteenth Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EBENEZER W. BRADY.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 814.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 814) granting a pension to Ebenezer W. Brady was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ebenezer W. Brady, late a chaplain of the One hundred and sixteenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOROTHEA IRONS.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2925.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill (H. R. No. 2925) granting a pension to Dorothea Irons, mother of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dorothea Irons, mother of Joseph F. Irons, first lieutenant of the First Regiment United States Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PRATT. At the last meeting of the Committee on Pensions on Thursday there were several cases considered and favorable reports agreed upon, but I suggested to the members of the committee who were prepared to make reports to hold them up until this afternoon and ask present action. My friend from Illinois has some of those cases.

HARRIETTE A. WOODRUFF.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions to report favorably on several bills from the House of Representatives, adopting the House report in each case, and I shall ask action at once on these bills. The first one I will report will be House bill No. 2899, and I ask that it be considered now.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2899) granting a pension to Harriette A. Woodruff was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriette A. Woodruff, mother of Eugene A. Woodruff, late a first lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY ABBOTT.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2790) granting a pension to Nancy Abbott, to report it back without amendment, and ask its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Abbott, mother of Amos W. Abbott, a sergeant of Company A in the Ninth Regiment of Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEBORAH A. SWAN.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am also directed by the same committee to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2669) granting a pension to Deborah A. Swan, to report it back and ask its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Deborah A. Swan, widow of Levi Swan, late a private in Company D, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES HERBERT.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2678) granting a pension to Charles Herbert, to report it back and ask its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Herbert, late a private in Company C, Sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers, at the rate of twenty-four dollars a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY B. HAVENS.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1907) granting a pension to Henry B. Havens, late a private of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, to report it back and ask its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry B. Havens, of Grant County, Wisconsin, late a private of Company K, Twelfth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, disabled while in service and line of duty, at the rate of eight dollars per month, subject to the limitations and restrictions provided by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORNELIA A. WASHBURN.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he has overlooked House bill No. 2216, granting a pension to Cornelia A. Washburn?

Mr. PRATT. I have not overlooked that bill, but after the private bills are disposed of I intend to call up the general bills, and that among the number, for the consideration of the Senate.

LUCY ANN CUMMINGS.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2353) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Cummings, to report it favorably, adopting the House report, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucy Ann Cummings, mother of A. Boyd Cummings, late lieutenant-commander United States Navy; the pension in her behalf to take effect from the date of the death of the widow of Lieutenant-Commander Cummings.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN COLAHAN.

Mr. PATTERSON. The same committee have instructed me to report a bill granting back pension to John Colahan, and I ask for its consideration at this time.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 874) granting back pension to John Colahan was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Colahan for back pension from January 1, 1863, the date of his discharge, up to April 30, 1868, the date when his present pension commenced, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to inquire of the Senator from South Carolina whether that bill was ever agreed upon by the committee?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; it was reported on the 14th of May, and I hold the printed report in my hand; but the bill reported on that day was in some way mislaid.

Mr. PRATT. I notice that it is a departure from the general rule of the committee in granting arrears of pension.

Mr. PATTERSON. This is a case where the party filed his papers, but his attorney failed to present them. His attorney was afterward put in the penitentiary.

Mr. PRATT. Was it the direction of the majority of the committee that the bill should be reported?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN HUMPHREYS.

Mr. INGALLS. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2214) granting a pension to Ann Humphreys, of Philadelphia, to report it back favorably and ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Humphreys, widow of Lawrence Humphreys, late a private in Company H, Ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNTY-LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. PRATT. By direction of the Senate the bill (S. No. 763) explaining the intent and meaning of the fourth section of the act entitled "An act in addition to certain acts granting bounty-land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1855, was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. The committee have had the bill under consideration and have directed me to report it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That all military bounty-land warrants granted or to be granted under and pursuant to any act of Congress to officers, musicians, and privates, whether regulars, rangers, or militia, and to the officers, seamen, flotilla-men, clerks, and landsmen in the Navy, or to other persons enumerated in any such act for services in any of the wars in which this country has ever been engaged since 1790, and the lands obtained by said warrants, shall be exempt from the payment of any debt or liability incurred by such officers, sailors, seamen, or other persons named in such warrant, prior to the issue of patents for said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read, "A bill to exempt military bounty-land warrants, and the lands obtained thereby, from sale or execution by virtue of any order or decree of court."

EQUALIZATION OF PENSIONS.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2452.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2452) to equalize pensions in certain cases.

The bill proposes to declare that all persons entitled to pensions under special acts fixing the rate of such pensions, and now receiving, or entitled to receive, a less pension than that allowed by the general pension laws under like circumstances, shall, in lieu of their present rate of pension, be entitled to the benefits and subject to the limitations of the general pension laws entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1873; but this is not to be construed to reduce any pension granted by special act.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like the Senator from Indiana to explain the provisions of that bill.

Mr. PRATT. This bill was reported by my friend from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] who will explain the operation of it.

Mr. INGALLS. The only explanation the bill requires is found in the fact that certain persons entitled to pensions have heretofore been the recipients of pensions at a lower rate under special laws than they would be entitled to receive under the general law had they been so pensioned. This bill proposes to remedy that inequality by allowing persons who would be entitled to a higher rate under the general law to receive that rate under the special act.

Mr. DAVIS. To what number does it extend? How much will it increase the pension-rolls?

Mr. INGALLS. I cannot tell the precise number, but the number is very few. The bill was referred to the Commissioner of Pensions, and received his approbation.

Mr. DAVIS. Can the Senator approximate to the number?

Mr. INGALLS. I cannot.

Mr. DAVIS. May it not be ten thousand?

Mr. OGLESBY. O, no; not two hundred.

Mr. INGALLS. The number is very small.

Mr. OGLESBY. In addition to what the Senator from Kansas has said, I will state that there are several cases in which persons have been granted pensions by special act of Congress; I have one case in my mind now where the pension granted was seventeen dollars a month. The Senator from West Virginia will remember that in 1873 a general pension law was passed, a new law, including all the former laws on the subject, a revision of all the pension laws; and in that law a provision was inserted increasing the rate of pensions to persons who were totally disabled, who had a total general disability or a total specific disability. The pensions of those persons were increased to eighteen, twenty-four, and thirty-one dollars a month, according to class. Now I have in my mind one of the cases that this bill will benefit; a man who was excluded from the benefits of the pension law on account of being a contract surgeon, and a special act of Congress was passed some years ago giving him a pension of seventeen dollars a month. The general pension law of 1873 included contract surgeons, and he, laboring under a total specific disability, would be entitled under the general law to get the pension of his class provided for in the general law; but the Department decides against him, because the special act that gave him a pension two or three years ago at seventeen dollars a month confines him to the benefits of that act. The number of these cases is very limited; and instead of passing over and over special acts to bring them within the class of pensioners provided for under the general law, we have presented this bill to entitle them to the benefits of the general law without having a special law passed in each case; that is where the case is a clear one, where the evidence on file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions is unquestioned, where the Commissioner believes that the parties are entitled to the additional pay, but cannot get it because they are limited and confined within the special acts of Congress. This bill lifts them out of the boundaries and limitations of the special law, and puts them under the provisions of the general law of 1873; and I say again the number is very limited. I should not like to state definitely the amount, but it is nothing like a thousand—far below that; probably not more than two hundred.

Mr. DAVIS. Who is to judge of the class that they belong to?

Mr. OGLESBY. The Commissioner of Pensions undoubtedly. They must have a clear case, showing their degree of physical disability, to entitle them to the pensions. In the case I have mentioned the man is paralyzed, totally helpless, has to be carried about, cannot be moved, and he is granted a pension of seventeen dollars a month under a special law passed when contract surgeons were not allowed a pension by general law. If he had not received the benefit of a special act, the general law of 1873 would have taken him up and given him the increased rate fixed for that class by that law. That case is a clear one, and so were several that came before us, in which the evidence now before the Pension Bureau is unquestionable, and they would be entitled to increased pensions under the general law if they were not laboring under the disability of a special act.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that I shall object to this bill; but I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are getting further and further from the war, and the minor children who were entitled to pensions must be coming of age and others entitled to pensions must be dying off. While we ought to be just to all who are entitled to pensions properly, yet our pension-roll is increasing yearly, I believe, when, as I think, it ought to be decreasing from the fact that many each year are dropping off by death and many minor children becoming of age. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois what he means by contract surgeons who will get the benefit of this act?

Mr. OGLESBY. During the war there were certain regimental surgeons and assistant surgeons appointed to each regiment in the service. There were times when there were soldiers on detachments, or in garrisons, or in hospitals, where regimental surgeons could not be detailed or detached from their regular service, and contract surgeons were employed under the direction of the Surgeon-General of the Army by contract. They went into the service under a contract, and of course performed the same service that a regimental surgeon or an assistant surgeon performed; but the law did not provide for that class of surgeons originally. The act of 1873, however, which consolidated and revised all the pension laws, admitted them justly enough. Before that time several special bills were passed through Congress recognizing that they were a meritorious class of sufferers, and granting them pensions according to the rate of second lieutenant's pay, seventeen dollars a month. Some of those surgeons are men now in the condition of being totally disabled, as if both eyes were out, or both arms off, or both legs off, who require the personal attendance of somebody to take care of them. It is obvious to the Senate at once that seventeen dollars a month is not a just pension to such a man, who must pay nearly the whole sum for personal attendance. Now, instead of passing special acts in every one of these cases for that class of men, we propose to pass this one general law. The honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. HAMILTON] assures me that the number is less than 5 per cent. of those on the pension-roll. We give them by this bill the benefit of the general law. The bill is meritorious in every sense.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOTALLY DISABLED PENSIONERS.

Mr. PRATT. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 735) to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have been totally disabled.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out the following words from lines 8 to 14:

Shall have lost the sight of both eyes, or shall have lost the sight of one eye, the sight of the other having been previously lost, or shall have lost both hands, or shall have lost both feet, or been permanently and totally disabled in the same, or otherwise so permanently and totally disabled as to render them utterly helpless, or so nearly so as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, shall be.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Shall have been so permanently and totally disabled as to require the constant personal aid and attendance of another person, by the loss of the sight of both eyes, or by the loss of the sight of one eye, the sight of the other having been previously lost, or by the loss of both hands, or by the loss of both feet, or by any other injury resulting in total and permanent helplessness, shall be.

So as to read:

That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions," and approved March 3, 1873, be so amended that all persons who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall have been so permanently and totally disabled as to require the constant personal aid and attendance of another person, by the loss of the sight of both eyes, or by the loss of the sight of one eye, the sight of the other having been previously lost, or by the loss of both hands, or by the loss of both feet, or by any other injury resulting in total and permanent helplessness, shall be entitled to a pension of $50 per month; and this shall be in lieu of a pension of $31.25 per month granted to such person by said section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following proviso at the end of the bill:

Provided, That the increase of pension shall not be granted by reason of any of the injuries herein specified unless the same have resulted in permanent total helplessness, requiring the constant personal aid and attendance of another person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JANE DULANEY.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2680) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Dulaney.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Jane Dulaney, widow of William Dulaney, late colonel United States Marine Corps.

Mr. PRATT. I ask that the report in that case be read. The Committee agreed upon a report adverse to the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. A majority of the committee.

Mr. PRATT. A majority means the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. A very respectable minority, including myself, did not agree to the report.

Mr. PRATT. I ask that the report of the committee in the case may be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted in the House of Representatives by Mr. O'BRIEN on the 27th of March:

The Committee on Invalid pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Jane Dulaney, having considered the same, submit the following report:

Jane Dulaney, applicant, is the widow of William Dulaney, colonel United States Marine Corps, who died on the 4th of July, 1868. The proof shows that he entered the corps June 10, 1817, as second lieutenant; served continuously on shipboard and at different naval stations, (having been promoted during the period to first lieutenant, captain by brevet, and captain;) was on the Brandywine with La Fayette, (1825,) and commanded the guard of United States frigate Constitution, December, 1825, to July, 1828; was the first officer of the Marine Corps to volunteer his services for field-duty in co-operation with the Army at the breaking out of the Florida war; that he served with conspicuous gallantry and untiring devotion throughout that war, 1836, 1837, 1838, commanding the marines and a portion of the Army; that Fort Dulaney was named in his honor, and he was complimented by Major-General Jesup in General Orders 102, and tendered the thanks of the country therein, General Persifor F. Smith also testifying in the highest terms to the Navy Department his appreciation of his brilliant services; that during these campaigns he was prostrated by disease, and advised by surgeon's certificate that to remain longer in that malarious climate would endanger his life; he, notwithstanding, continued in the field until the close of the war, when he returned in command of his force.

That while in command of Fort Pickens, Florida, (1846,) he was again the first marine officer to tender his services for the Mexican war; that in this war he likewise commanded the marines with marked gallantry, and (having in the mean time been promoted and commissioned major by brevet and major) for gallant and meritorious conduct at the storming and capture of the castle of Chapultepec and the capture of the Belen Gate and the city of Mexico received the brevet of lieutenant-colonel.

That after the close of the Mexican war he served continuously in command of the marine barracks at New York, Boston, and Portsmouth, New Hampshire; that he was a native of Virginia; that at the firing of the first gun on Fort Sumter he telegraphed his services for duty in the field; that he was commissioned a colonel of the corps by President Lincoln, (to rank from July 26, 1861,) and in command of the marine battalion at Norfolk, Virginia, from October 1, 1862, until November 8, 1865, having been placed on the retired list June 6, 1864, under the act of Congress retiring officers of forty-five years' service. That he died in service, as above stated, July 4, 1868, and has left a widow of advanced age, in very indigent circumstances, and with a large family of children.

In consideration of the gallant and valuable service rendered to the country by her husband, covering a period of half a century, (aside from the fact that he was a volunteer in the war of 1812 while yet a boy,) your committee are of opinion that the venerable widow is entitled to and should have relief in her need. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. PRATT. I ask the Clerk to read the bill again. I do not remember the amount of the pension granted.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. PRATT. I would inquire of my friend from Kansas who made that report?

Mr. INGALLS. That is a House report which was on file among the papers and submitted to the Senate Committee on Pensions, and after being heard by them a majority of the committee instructed an adverse report to be made on the bill, to which I did not assent, and upon my suggestion and request the bill was placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report. It appears to me that after hearing read the military history of this man, his long and meritorious services, and the indigent condition of his widow and family, no Senator who honors valor can refuse his assent to this bill. I hope the Senator from Indiana will withdraw his opposition and permit it to pass.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, there is a fatal defect in this case, and that is that there is no evidence whatever that this officer died in consequence of any wound received or disability incurred in the service. That is my general recollection.

Mr. INGALLS. The reason why a majority of the Senate committee thought the bill should not be passed arose from the fact that Colonel Dulaney had been placed upon the retired list and was therefore not technically the subject of a pension. There was no question about his long and laborious service, or about the fact that his health was seriously impaired while he was engaged in the discharge of his duty, and that he died in consequence of the hardship he suffered and the exposure he endured.

Mr. PRATT. May I inquire of my friend at what age he died? Was it seventy or eighty?

Mr. INGALLS. The report will show that he entered the service in 1818, and served continuously through four wars and was retired in 1865, and died at a very advanced age.

Mr. PRATT. This is one of a class of cases that come before the committee in which officers have died of pure old age in the natural order of events, and a case is attempted to be trumped up of their having died in consequence of disabilities incurred while in the service. The facts in this particular case are not very fresh in my mind now; and that was the reason of my inquiry to my friend from Kansas, whether there was any evidence whatever before the committee that this gentleman died of any disability incurred while in the service. My general recollection is that he died in the ordinary course of human events.

Mr. INGALLS. Every man may be said to die in the ordinary course of human events. I suppose on that proposition there could be no difference of opinion between the Senator from Indiana and myself. But when he intends to convey the impression that Colonel Dulaney did not die in consequence of exposures and hardships that he suffered and incurred during his long and arduous service in the cause of his country, he is entirely outside of the record, because my recollection is that the medical testimony was very strong upon that point and was satisfactory at least to my mind.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that this is a case which does not come within the usual rules of the committee and that an adverse report was made upon it. Am I correct in that?

Mr. PRATT. Entirely so.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas what the lady's family consists of, whether grandchildren or great-grandchildren? Her own children must have been grown up many years ago.

Mr. INGALLS. I have the honor of a personal acquaintance with the reputable widow of Colonel Dulaney. She is a lady of now somewhat rising sixty years of age. She is nearly blind. She is in indigent circumstances. She has a minor child.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I make no reference to her character; but it was stated in the report that she had a very large family.

Mr. INGALLS. She has one minor daughter with whom I am acquainted, now about sixteen years of age. As to the rest of her family I know nothing.

The bill was ordered to a third reading.

On the passage of the bill a division was called for, which resulted—ayes 9, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that by general consent the bill lie over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No business can be transacted until the presence of a quorum is ascertained.

Mr. DAVIS. I think if the vote is taken again a quorum will be found to be present.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No business can be done until a quorum is found to be present.

Mr. BOREMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. It is in order yet to call for the yeas and nays on the passage of that bill in order to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays can be called upon the motion to adjourn. The Senator from West Virginia moves an adjournment, and the Senator from Pennsylvania calls for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SCOTT. I appealed to the Senator from West Virginia to withdraw his motion to adjourn so that I might call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill and thus procure a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas desires the bill to be laid aside informally; and the yeas and nays can be taken on the adjournment.

Mr. RAMSEY. Would it be in order to make a motion to go into executive session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not now.

Mr. SCOTT. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 7, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boreman, Cooper, Flanagan, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, McCreery, and Wright—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Carpenter, Chandler, Davis, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Logan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Scott, Sherman, Stewart, Tipton, Washburn, and Windom—31.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones, Lewis, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Wadleigh, and West—35.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate refuses to adjourn and a quorum is present. The Dulaney bill will be considered as laid aside informally.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF 1812.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2190) to amend the act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the widows of deceased soldiers," approved February 14, 1871, and to restore to the pension-rolls those persons whose names were stricken therefrom in consequence of disloyalty.

Mr. RAMSEY. As that bill will occupy more time probably than the Senate desires to stay here this evening, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. ANTHONY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 10, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Carpenter, Chandler, Gilbert, Hitchcock, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, and Wright—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ransom, Robertson, Tipton, Washburn, and Windom—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boutwell, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Wadleigh, and West—39.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 29, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I give notice that on next Monday I shall move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 3279) amendatory of and supplemental to the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. DAWES. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to:

VENTILATION OF THE HALL.

Mr. TYNER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to examine the feasibility of the plan proposed by Robert S. Crawford for improved ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives, and if approved by them, to report by bill or otherwise.

KANSAS INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Public Lands a bill (H. R. No. 3528) providing for the sale of the Kansas Indian lands in Kansas to actual settlers, and for the disposition of the proceeds of the sale; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

MRS. MARY J. ORR.

Mr. ORTH, by unanimous consent, reported back adversely from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 1456) for the relief of Mrs. Mary J. Orr, widow of Hon. James L. Orr, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Russia.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid on the table.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, and ask that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. ORTH. The report is adverse.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that; but under the rule any member may object to laying on the table a bill reported adversely, and may insist that the bill be placed on the Private Calendar. The House may be disposed to reverse the action of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have the bill referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and it will be so referred.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Toward the close of the session the necessity for adhering to the regular order of business is imperative; and I therefore give notice that after this morning I shall insist on the regular order.

Mr. BECK. The House sat last night two hours and a half in Committee of the Whole to consider business of the Ways and Means, and there was no quorum present. Sessions have been fixed for to-night and Monday night on important business. I desire to give notice that business of the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee of Ways and Means shall not with my consent go on without the presence of a quorum. Unless a quorum shall be present to-night, I shall demand a call of the House.

SWAMP LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the county court of Franklin County, Missouri, asking the confirmation of title to swamp lands in Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SURVEYS OF THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed one thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on the Public Lands on the subject of the geographical and geological surveys of the Territories west of the Mississippi; five hundred copies to be for the use of the Department of the Interior and five hundred copies for the use of the War Department.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2546) reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, providing for the gradual reduction of the Army of the United States. The previous question has been ordered on the bill and amendments. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] is entitled to one hour to close the debate.

Mr. RANDALL. Would it be in order to have the amendments read?

The SPEAKER. There are only two amendments; they will be read when submitted to a vote.

Mr. COBURN. I yield for twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

Mr. HURLBUT. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted to me for the discussion of this measure it will not be possible for me to give as thorough examination of the various provisions of this bill as perhaps in the opinion of the committee they may deserve. But I am gratified that I have been saved a good deal of trouble by the thorough dissection which the bill has received from every member of the committee who has spoken on the subject, each of whom, with the exception of the chairman, has found fault with some important provision in it.

But, sir, I rise to antagonize this bill upon the fundamental principle which underlies it. I deny either the wisdom or the expediency or the economy of reducing the Army permanently at this time. Some things which are done under the false idea of economy are the most wasteful and expensive that Congress can indulge in. I remember very well, sir, that lugubrious afternoon when the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] gave this House his melancholy picture of the finances of the country. Sir, on that occasion the honorable gentleman radiated darkness over the financial status of the nation. That blackness is past. The dawn of a better day is here. The funereal countenance has disappeared. He no longer performs the function of chief undertaker—I am sorry he did not take the part of chief mute—at the funeral of the national credit. He says more lately and in more cheerful tones that the country is able and willing to carry out all honorable engagements and to meet whatever duty we are called upon to discharge.

Mr. DAWES. If my friend from Illinois means to say that I ever said this country was neither able nor willing to discharge in good faith every obligation of every kind he has totally misunderstood me.

Mr. HURLBUT. I have no time to turn away from the main purpose of this discussion to this side issue with the gentleman from Massachusetts. The substantial question now before the House is, whether or not we shall enact into a law a provision which shall break up not only the organization of the Army but the spirit of the Army.

Now, sir, I am not going to speak here in behalf of any of these staff corps. Their social position, power, and location here in Washington give sufficient strength to them to secure whatever rights justly belong to them. But I speak in behalf of a body of men who have no organized agency here—the great mass of the effective fighting army of this United States. It is the important branch of it, because it is for the fighting army of this United States that these staff corps are created. They exist because the Army exists. The Army does not exist for their benefit.

I heard I think the other night some reflection attempted to be cast upon the regular Army of the United States. I do not think the Army needs any defense at my hands. Gentlemen like myself, who have served in the volunteer service of the United States, ought to know that at this present speaking the majority of the officers of the regular Army of the United States are not graduates from our military school at West Point, but graduates from that sublimer school of actual service of four long years, by meritorious conduct in which they have been transfered and now hold their positions in the regular Army of the United States.

It is not a question and cannot be made a question between the regulars and volunteers. It is, however, a question of good faith and fair dealing with a body of men to whom Congress has substantially pledged its faith. It has said to them if you go into the service of the United States and do your duty there we will keep you there so long as you do that duty, or if you retire from failing constitution or casualty or injury received in war, we will not desert you in your old age. It is the highest and most solemn pledge a nation ever gave to its employés, and it is by reason of that pledge, by reason of that security of position, largely by reason of that, we are enabled to maintain that sentiment of high honor or that appreciation of the position which the uniform and duty cast upon them which has hitherto been able to hold the great mass of our officers clear from any imputation of base or sordid transactions under the most appalling temptation.

Now, sir, if you strike at that security you damage to a great extent the esprit de corps, that professional honor which belongs and is an essential and necessary part of the office.

I do not believe with the gentleman whom I indistinctly heard speaking from the other side of the House that Congress can if they choose diminish or reduce these officers—I mean I do not deny their legal rights; but in determining how many officers and how many men you need for the military service of the United States Congress is to be governed by the testimony of witnesses who know of what they speak. They are not to give an arbitrary decision. I may think twenty-five thousand men enough. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] if I understood him, thought we did not want any. Some other gentlemen think five thousand enough, and some may think ten thousand sufficient. We sit here as a tribunal to decide upon evidence competent to tell us, and I challenge the Military Committee to deny what I now say, that all the officers of the Army who have anything to do with the administration and effectiveness of that Army universally and of one accord say a reduction from the present standard will throw a burden upon the small remnant which remains which they are incapable of performing and doing their duty by the country.

It is folly, sir, for any man to contrast the position which this country occupies now with the position it occupied in 1860. Our Army is charged with duties now that it had not then. We have detachments scattered over all parts of the country, performing every class and description of duty. We are not only covering our seaports but the whole vast line by which civilization presses into these new countries, penetrating wherever discoveries are made, pushing wherever any land can be appropriated to any profitable use. And on all this indented line, covering infinitely more surface by the mere fact of the indentations than if it were a straight line, it is necessary to keep up and we must keep up a sufficient force to protect our own people and to protect the Indians themselves.

That is not all. The Army of the United States is scattered through the various States of this Union not merely for the purpose of keeping the peace, but for the purpose of acting as a posse comitatus, if I may so say, to enforce your revenue laws. There are belts of country scattered all along on this fringe of our society where constant evasions are made of your revenue and internal-revenue laws, and the Army is constantly being called upon to enforce those laws. And not only there, but it is within the last two years that I have seen that even in the city of Brooklyn, New York, the Army of the United States has been called out to enforce the process of the Internal-Revenue Department. I call the attention of gentlemen who live on the sea-board to the condition of the whole line of fortifications that extends along our coast. At the fort which guards the entrance to New York Harbor, Fort Hamilton, there are but ninety artillerists to garrison it; and yet this bill proposes to strike out one regiment of artillery. Take the whole frontier that lies all along the vast State of Texas bordering upon Mexico, with a river fordable nine months in the year for more than two hundred and twenty-five miles, with bad neighbors and worse friends, with raiding bands perpetually crossing at every point where they can reach the settlements of our people, and who can only be controlled, and put down by the use of cavalry, the only arm of the service capable of rapid motion and constant action; will the gentlemen from Texas, or will any men who have an interest in the progress of our civilization and the maintenance of our line, desire to reduce this effective arm, this right arm of the service? So, too, along the whole Indian frontier, where the mounted Indians are. I believe my friend from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] does not object to my abusing the horse Indians. All these predatory, dangerous, warlike tribes can only be reached and either driven back to their haunts or kept off from the settlements by the use of cavalry.

Now, sir, if it be true, as I have stated, that every officer of our Army from the General commanding down who has anything to do with the disposition of troops affirms to you that all those posts are necessary that are now established, and that the garrisons in them are as light as they possibly can be, how is this House going to get over that class of testimony?

Sir, I desire to say one other thing. This bill in itself is evidently a compromise in the Committee on Military Affairs of conflicting opinions. There is no system in it. Each member of the committee evidently wanted either to hit or protect some particular staff department, and they all united in cutting down the effective rank and file. Now that reminds me of the kind of surgery that we had in the Army in the early part of the war. Then, if a man got a wound in an arm or a leg the butchers that we had at that time thought it was economy of time to cut the leg or arm off. So it is in this case. I admit that there are defects in our Army organization. I wish I had time to show the House what I think they are, but I have not. But the defect is not in the limbs; it is not in the arms or legs. It may be that there is some paralysis in the administration of our military affairs; but paralysis always comes from the head, and he would be a very bad physician, who, if he found a man dragging one limb after the other, knowing that the disease was in the brain, should for the sake of economy of time cut off the leg at the thigh.

That there are defects I have no doubt, and I will tell the House what from my observation I consider to be the prominent cardinal defects in our military system. The cardinal defect is that we have not that direct, immediate, individual responsibility that we ought to have. The cardinal defect is, that the staff corps and the staff department naturally—I am not blaming them—but naturally assume to themselves power and independence which are inconsistent with military discipline and military order. And this thing goes back many years in the history of this country.

There is no law and there never was a law authorizing the Secretary of War to give military orders; but he does it every day. The General of the Army, who by your laws is made responsible for the condition of the Army, has no power to get even a report from one of the staff departments. The General of the Army, whom you hold responsible, may never know of orders in relation to the movements of troops until he sees them in the newspapers. The General of the Army, who is responsible for the good order and conduct of his officers, knows nothing about charges and specifications and the trial of his own officers until they have passed through the Bureau of Military Justice and the findings of the courts-martial have been approved by the Secretary of War. All that is wrong, and all that thing will be corrected whenever the Committee on Military Affairs or any other committee choose to reach down to the real thing which lies at the bottom of the whole matter. And yet these staff departments are charged with a great deal more delinquency than belongs to them. The appropriations for the Army are loaded down to-day with millions and millions of dollars that have nothing to do with the effectiveness of the Army. Your whole Signal Corps, valuable and advantageous as it is, is no part of the Army; it is not particularly under military control; it has nothing to do with the effective strength of the Army. It is for the benefit of commerce, internal and external. And yet a million dollars goes to them yearly, and it is wisely expended.

The Quartermaster's Department is charged with enormous expenditures, expenditures that are very heavy. Among them I will give you one single item. You appropriate properly $1,000,000 to be expended this year for head-stones for the graves of our deceased soldiers. That is not a military expenditure, and yet it goes toward increasing the burden of supporting the Army.

Your Engineer Corps, nominally a branch and an important branch of the Army, both in time of war and peace, is charged with innumerable civil surveys all over the country. All those things go to swell the amount of expenditures for the Army, and the fighting, effective force of the Army of the United States has to bear all that.

Now, I ask the House of Representatives to do simple justice in this case to the plain, hard-working men of the Army, and not by a single blow cut off this number of effective men from the Army and displace at a moment's warning the men to whom you have pledged your national honor. Nothing is so bad for the discipline and morale and character of the service as this constant apprehension that Congress at any time, by a single blow, may break up a man's whole life-plan and cast him adrift upon the world, for which you have prepared him not to be a good citizen and not to earn his living.

Mr. KASSON. That is true; every word of it.

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to say a few words more in regard to some of the provisions of this bill. I do so because I happen to know that of which I aver. With regard to the provision of this bill, for example, providing for paying the troops by checks, I say it is the most unutterable swindle that ever was attempted to be perpetrated upon the enlisted men of the Army. It delivers them over hand and foot into the clutches of the money-changers, and the money-changers are post-suttlers and traders at all these distant points. I see that the committee have put in a proviso that the Secretary of War may order payments to be made in the regular way if this system does not work. But they take away from him the means by which that provision could be carried out. Enough of that.

Now one word in regard to what seems to me to be a peculiar cruelty in the provision which compels the General of the Army to dismiss three of his aids. I speak in regard to those gentlemen because I happen to know them thoroughly and well. General Sherman has no man about him who has not won every honor he has in the field of battle. He has taken his staff not from those who lay still and kept away from active service, but he has taken them from men who started in with him at Shiloh and were with him in every battle he fought during the entire war. And to compel him to exercise an invidious distinction in selecting three of his aids to be retained, and reducing his staff from six to three, I say is wrong. Although I do not profess to have any authority to say what the officers of the Army would prefer, yet I say that I would far rather this House should determine to reduce the salary of the General commanding the Army and all others in high positions. I admit that those salaries are high; grant it. But those salaries were given not to the office but to the men. They were given as a gratuity for glorious and meritorious service rendered by these individual men. And unless the House is willing to go back over the whole thing, they should not adopt the proposition to compel the General of the Army to single out three of his six aids, all of whom he has selected under these circumstances.

One other thing about this bill, for I have not time to go through the whole of it. I do not know whether the committee know it or not, but I affirm that under the provisions of this bill there is no possibility under heaven of assigning the class now graduating at West Point, and whom you have educated, to any position whatever in the Army. If gentlemen desire to break up that institution, that is one thing. But why educate men for four years at the expense of the Government and then render it utterly impossible for them to enter into the service for which you have educated them?

It is a great error to suppose that there are any idle officers in the Army. There are no idlers around General Sherman. There is no officer in the whole of our Army but what is constantly and fairly employed. Sherman is not a man to have idlers around him, as all of us who know him know well. There is no single man too much among the officers of our Army now to carry on the various duties which are devolved upon them by acts of Congress in addition to the duties devolved upon them simply as members of the military arm of the service. I do not know that I desire to say anything more about this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address the House for a few moments in support of this bill. It has been prepared by the Committee on Military Affairs, and has received their patient and deliberate consideration. It is now recommended by that committee to the House as a bill proper and suitable to be passed. I was one of those who concurred in reporting it, and now believe it ought to be passed.

I have listened with a great deal of surprise to some of the remarks that fell from members of the committee yesterday, touching this bill and its various provisions. It could not be expected that in framing a bill consisting of twenty sections every member of the committee should be satisfied with every section and every part of every section; but at the same time it might well be expected that a bill of twenty sections could be framed which should receive the support of a large majority of the committee, and be such a bill as the House could well sustain. Doubtless the bill contains some things, perhaps many things, which I would not approve when taken separately. But the measure as a whole meets my approbation to such a degree that I support it warmly.

No gentleman of the committee who addressed the House is, so far as I understand, opposed to the bill as a whole. If any one of them is opposed to the bill as a whole, he did not say so. Those gentlemen oppose certain features of the bill. For instance, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] is opposed to that feature proposing to pay the soldiers, where practicable, by checks or drafts. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a very small matter. It is a very small question whether we shall undertake hereafter to pay the Army by checks or drafts in places where the system may be practicable, leaving it discretionary with the Secretary of War how far he will undertake to put the system into operation. It is a very small question, in view of the whole subject, whether we shall try that experiment or not. That is not a thing of such importance that a man should vote against this bill because that particular provision does not meet his approbation; for in any event the soldier will be paid.

Now, it was the opinion of the majority of the committee that this system might properly and safely be tried. The committee found that it had worked well in paying the pensioners; and they were not able to see why in the large cities and towns where soldiers are located they could not be as well paid under this system as the pensioners are. I would like any man to undertake to give me a reason why the system should not operate well in such cases. And when we find that in the Pension Bureau payments by this plan are made with so much less cost to the Government than the payments in the Army, it is certainly an experiment worth trying.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to stand here to-day and take the time of the House in discussing that proposition at greater length. I shall vote for it because the bill provides that the Secretary of War may exercise his discretion in the matter so that the system shall not be applied except to posts and places where, in his opinion, it may be adopted with safety to the soldier and advantage to the Government.

Another objection is made to the bill, and an amendment is offered to meet it by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DONNAN.] He thinks that the heads of different staff corps should all be colonels. But, sir, it is a very small question, in view of the whole subject, whether the heads of these staff departments should be brigadier-generals or colonels. Certainly that is not a point which ought to prevent any gentleman from voting for this bill; for upon the whole it is such a bill as is worthy of support.

But, sir, I proceed now to the merits of the bill, upon which I ask the attention of the House for a few moments. Both branches of Congress at this session have determined that the Army shall be reduced five thousand men. Now, what is the use of coming here to-day and discussing the question whether the Army should be reduced to that extent or not? That question has been discussed in the House and in the Senate; and both branches of Congress have deliberately declared by the appropriations they have made that the Army shall be reduced five thousand men. What, then, was the plain duty of the Military Committee of this House in view of that action of the two branches of Congress? It was to declare in pursuance of that action that the Army of the United States should consist of not exceeding twenty-five thousand men, and to go to work to reduce the officers of the Army to correspond with the reduced number of the rank and file. My colleague [Mr. HURLBUT] who has just addressed the House says that he speaks here in behalf of the rank and file of the Army, the private soldiers of the Army. Why, sir, does not my colleague know that the rank and file of the Army is depleted constantly at the rate of ten thousand men per annum by desertions and by the expirations of enlistments? This bill does not propose that any soldier shall be turned out of the service. But before the 1st of January next the Army will in the natural course of events be reduced more than the five thousand contemplated by this bill as the extent of the reduction.

As to the officers of the Army, no man feels more kindly toward them than I do. But, Mr. Speaker, we cannot, in the American Congress, in view of our duty to the people, say that because these officers have been educated at the expense of the Government, because they have been employed at the expense of the Government in positions of honor and trust during years past, therefore they must now be continued though their services are not needed.

Why, sir, suppose the Army consisted of fifty regiments, as it did a few years ago, would gentlemen stand up here and ask that the Army should be continued at fifty regiments? We have passed laws since the rebellion reducing the Army. Officers have been mustered out and officers must continue to be mustered out if the necessities of the service do not require that they should be kept on duty.

But it is said by gentlemen who have addressed the House that the Army is all needed, I do not believe that, Mr. Speaker; I do not believe it is necessary in this country in time of profound peace to have an army of thirty thousand men. As I have said before, the House and the Senate both have determined at this session that it is not necessary to have an Army of thirty thousand men. They have so voted by the reduction they have made upon the appropriation bill providing that recruiting shall not go on in the future to a greater extent than to recruit the Army to twenty-five thousand men.

It is said that the Army is necessary for the purpose of preserving order throughout the different portions of the country, and particularly in the Indian country. Those gentlemen who come from the West, and particularly my friend from Oregon [Mr. NESMITH] who sits at my side, think an Army of thirty thousand men is necessary to keep peace among the Indians. The Indian commission, in their report made last year, stated that of all the Indians now west of the Mississippi River there are not to exceed twenty-five thousand Indians of the whole number who are not upon Indian reservations. Why, sir, our exploring parties traverse that whole country without difficulty or danger. Major Powell, the great explorer, who was himself before the Military Committee at the present session of Congress in connection with questions touching the reduction of the Army, testified before the committee that he could go anywhere through the Indian country in the United States without the aid of the troops without any sort of danger to himself.

We have adopted what we call the peace policy. We have adopted the policy of feeding the Indians and in pursuance of that policy we have gathered the Indians upon reservations. There we feed them, and for that purpose make large appropriations annually. We provided large appropriations in the Indian appropriation bill at the last session and at the present session of Congress for the purpose of feeding and clothing the Indians instead of fighting them. There are, as we are told, but twenty-five thousand Indians west of the Mississippi River not now upon reservations. These are being gathered upon reservations as rapidly as possible. It is the policy of the Government to gather them upon reservations and feed them there, and so far as possible civilize them.

The gentlemen who have occupied the floor in the course of this discussion gave as the only reason why they considered it was necessary to keep an army of thirty thousand men that the Army now exists at thirty thousand men and it ought not to be reduced. Not one single gentleman who has yet addressed the House has given any good reason why it ought not to be reduced. If the Army be not needed for actual service, why should it be kept up, adding unnecessarily $5,000,000 annually to the expenses of the Government?

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have passed at this session a river and harbor appropriation bill containing less than $5,000,000 for all the rivers and harbors in the whole United States. All the money which Congress could afford to give was something less than $5,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi and the Ohio and all the great streams tributary to the Mississippi, for all the Atlantic sea-board and all the ports upon the great lakes, for all the rivers and artificial highways of the country so far as water communication is concerned. For all this Congress could hardly give something less than $5,000,000, while the people everywhere are calling for appropriations of money to carry on these great works of national improvement. No man who addressed the House to-day or yesterday has said that it is necessary to the wants of the country to keep the Army up to thirty thousand men. The Military Committeee, following in the line of the votes already given by the two Houses, provides for a reduction of the Army by which we can save $5,000,000 to the Treasury. In this bill they show you we can safely reduce the Army and save annually $5,000,000. Is not that worth saving? Is it a matter of no importance to the country that we can save in this one bill $5,000,000 annually, and not only for this but for every year hereafter? Shall we make this unnecessary annual expenditure when we are unable now to give adequate appropriations for great internal improvements and for other purposes?

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois whether we have not already reduced the Army in the appropriation bill by cutting it down five thousand men?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I suppose we have, and this is only carrying out what has already been so well begun. Why did you move to lay the bill upon the table yesterday?

Mr. MACDOUGALL. There are officers who ought to be taken care of.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. This bill provides if they shall be mustered out that they shall be paid a year's salary in every case.

Sir, tell me of a government on all the earth that has dealt more honestly and liberally with its soldiers than ours has. If there be one I have never discovered it, and I should be glad to have some gentleman point it out. Look at the millions of money we have paid and are paying for pensions and bounty. There is now pending before this House a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs to equalize bounties, which will probably require an appropriation of over a hundred million dollars, and Congress has never hesitated to make these expenditures so far as the condition of the Treasury would permit. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. MACDOUGALL,] who is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs and who yesterday moved to lay this bill on the table, says that his only reason for so doing was because there are some officers affected by it. Now, the bill provides that a board of Army officers shall be appointed by the War Department for the purpose of weeding out such officers as may be in the Army who are unfit to remain in the service, and then the bill also provides that any officer who desires to resign his place may do so and receive one year's pay. There will be for a long time to come undoubtedly supernumerary officers, who will be employed by the War Department to any extent to which they can be used, but to tell me that you oppose a bill for the reduction of the Army simply because you are in favor of keeping in the service the officers necessary to officer the five thousand men whom it is proposed to discharge, strikes me as a very strange and remarkable proposition. It is to say that you will keep five thousand men in the service at the expense of $5,000,000 a year for the purpose of continuing in the service the officers necessary to officer these five thousand men. That it will be a saving of $5,000,000 no man will question, and that that saving can be made, and made without detriment to the public service, I have no doubt.

Sir, the people of this country are not in favor of a large standing army. The people of this country are in favor of keeping up so much of an army as is necessary for the purpose of maintaining peace and quiet throughout all sections of the country. I am in favor of that. I would not for a moment consent to reduce the Army to such an extent that any section of the country will suffer thereby. I believe the Army ought to be kept at such a standard as will secure peace and quiet all over the country; but we cannot keep up a large standing army for that purpose, nor is it necessary to keep up a large standing army for any such purpose.

My colleague [Mr. HURLBUT] who addressed the House this morning says that every Army officer who has been consulted on this subject thinks the Army ought not to be reduced. Sir, if the Army numbered fifty thousand men and you were to consult the officers of the Army in regard to its reduction, I have no doubt they would say with one loud acclaim that it ought not to be reduced. It is but natural that they should magnify the importance of their branch of the service. Go to the Navy Department, and you will not find a man in that Department who does not think that the naval force ought to be increased. Go to the Treasury Department, and ask there if you can reduce the force, and they will tell you not a man, and that on the contrary you ought to increase it to the number of five hundred or one thousand men in the different Bureaus of the Department. Sir, this is natural everywhere. We know how hard it is for us who have friends who hold places either in the Army or in the naval service to vote for measures which will turn them out of that service. We know how hard it was to vote for the bill two years ago reducing the number of officials in the revenue service, and yet we had to take the knife and apply it to that service, because the time had come when the public interests could be as well subserved by a reduction of the force as by keeping it as it then stood. And that is just the condition of things here. The time has come in my judgment when the Army may be safely reduced five thousand men, with a corresponding reduction in the number of its officers. This is so clear a proposition that I think we shall fail in our duty if we fail to pass this bill.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to make a verbal correction or two in the bill to prevent any misunderstanding. I move to insert in section 1, after the words "there shall be no new commission," the words "except graduates of the Military Academy;" so that it will read:

That in the cavalry, artillery, and infantry regiments of the Army of the United States there shall be no new commission, except graduates of the Military Academy; no promotion, nor any enlistment until the number of regiments of cavalry shall be reduced to nine, the number of regiments of artillery to four, &c.

There is some question whether the graduates of the Military Academy could be put into the service. It was not intended to exclude them.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The object of the amendment is simply to provide for the graduating class at West Point.

Mr. COBURN. The Department, I understand, have construed it in this way heretofore, but I offer the amendment to save all question.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBURN. I now move to amend section 20 by striking out the word "detailed" in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "having leave of absence;" so that it will read:

That for the purpose of promoting knowledge of military science the President may, upon the application of an established college or university within the United States with sufficient capacity to educate at one time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, give a leave of absence to any officer of the Army to act as president, superintendent, or professor of such college or university; that the number of officers so having leave of absence shall not exceed one to each State at any time, and shall be governed by general rules, to be prescribed from time to time by the President of the United States.

The object of the amendment is to make it correspond with the phraseology of the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBURN. To save all question about whether promotions will be opened by this bill and to show that the bill intends promotion, I offer the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. That section 6, of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1870, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1869, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The first amendment upon which the previous question is operating will be reported, offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] the following:

The headquarters of the Army of the United States shall never be moved from the capital of the United States except in time of war.

Mr. HURLBUT. Is that the first amendment pending?

The SPEAKER. It is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I offered an amendment in regard to the Pay Department.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] who belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out sections 13 and 14 and insert:

That the Pay Department shall hereafter consist of one Paymaster-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry; one Assistant Paymaster-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry; two deputy paymasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry; and fifty paymasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] moves to add to that amendment what has been read by the Clerk.

Mr. HURLBUT. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. It was allowed to be offered.

Mr. COBURN. It was allowed to be offered; that was all, and to be considered as pending if in order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There was no such exception made at the time.

The SPEAKER. If it was allowed to be considered as pending, of course that excludes all points of order now. No point of order was made against it at the time.

Mr. COBURN. Of course not; but it was supposed that whenever the House came to act upon it the point of order could be raised.

The SPEAKER. O, no; not after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I desire to say that I gave close attention yesterday when these various amendments were indicated. I was sitting near the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. COBURN] when the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] was read, and I said to him, "You are not yielding for these amendments?" And he replied, "No; they are only read for information."

Mr. COBURN. And afterwards, by reason of it being the second amendment offered, it was considered as an amendment to an amendment; but I did not see that it had any pertinency whatever.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] was occupying the chair. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] ought to have kept a very close watch upon amendments to his own bill.

Mr. COBURN. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] was not understood to be an amendment to an amendment, but an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not care to which part of the bill it is attached.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am content to have it considered as a separate section.

Mr. COBURN. I will not object to that.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is it too late to raise a point of order now?

The SPEAKER. It is too late.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I want to bring the House to a vote upon the question whether they want the headquarters of the Army taken away from the capital of the nation.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That has no pertinency to the bill.

Mr. COBURN. I will suggest that the two amendments be considered separately.

The SPEAKER. What amendments does the gentleman from Indiana consider as pending to the bill?

Mr. COBURN. These two only; the one offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] and the one offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.] The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DONNAN,] who is on the committee, said that he would offer some amendments when the bill came up, and I told him that I would not object to their being offered at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. No additional amendment is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. COBURN. I hope the House will allow the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DONNAN] to move a pertinent amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I object unless I can offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. DONNAN. It was the agreement when the previous question was seconded that I should have an opportunity to offer amendments.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is it in order to move to lay the bill and pending amendments upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then I make that motion.

The question was taken upon the motion to lay upon the table; and upon a division there were—ayes 68, noes 75.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 140, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buffinton, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Darrall, DeWitt, Dunnell, Farwell, Fort, Giddings, Gooch, Hancock, Hathorn, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hooper, Houghton, Howe, Hurlbut, Kasson, Kellogg, Lansing, Lowe, Luttrell, Lynch, Maynard, MacDougall, McKee, Merriam, Moore, Myers, Nesmith, Page, Perry, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Purman, Rainey, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, Rusk, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sloan, Sloss, George L. Smith, Stanard, Strait, Strawbridge, Todd, Townsend, Wallace, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Whiteley, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, and Willie—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Albright, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Barrere, Barry, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Bundy, Burchard, Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Coburn, Comingo, Conger, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Crittenden, Crossland, Crutchfield, Danford, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Durham, Eames, Eden, Eldredge, Field, Foster, Freeman, Glover, Hagans, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hoskins, Hunter, Hunton, Hyde, Kelley, Knapp, Lamison, Lamport, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McNulta, Milliken, Mitchell, Monroe, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Nunn, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Poland, Pratt, Randall, Ransier, Rapier, Read, Robbins, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Standiford, Starkweather, St. John, Swann, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tremain, Tyner, Vance, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, James Wilson, Wolfe, and John D. Young—140.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Averill, Barber, Bass, Biery, Bromberg Burrows, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, Davis, Duell, Elliott, Frye, Garfield, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hubbell, Hynes, Jewett, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Leach, Lofland, Lowndes, Magee, McJunkin, McLean, Mills, Morey, Negley, Niles, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Phelps, Phillips, William R. Roberts, Ross, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sherwood, Smart, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith

Snyder, Stephens, Stone, Storm, Stowell, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Waddell, Waldron, Wheeler, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, Woodford, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—78.

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. POTTER said: I desire to announce in connection with this and other votes on the pending bill that my colleague, Mr. W. R. ROBERTS, is confined to his house by sickness; and my colleague, Mr. WOOD, is detained at his home by sickness in his family.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ALBRIGHT.] The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The headquarters of the Army of the United States shall never be moved from the capital of the United States except in time of war.

Mr. COBURN. That amendment is not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and should be voted on separately.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I prefer that it should be submitted as an independent proposition.

Mr. COBURN. I hope it will be.

The SPEAKER. Then the question will first be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts was offered as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I insist on its being so submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the somewhat doubtful posture of the question the Chair will allow the gentleman in charge of the bill to indicate his preference as to the manner in which the vote should be taken.

Mr. COBURN. It strikes me that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to be voted on as an independent proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will follow the preference of the chairman of the committee on that point. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out sections 13 and 14, and insert the following:

That the Pay Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Paymaster-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry; one assistant paymaster-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry; two deputy paymasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalary; and fifty paymasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ALBRIGHT, there were—ayes 52, noes 73; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ALBRIGHT and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I will not insist upon a further count if a vote can be taken on striking out the fourteenth section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot now modify his amendment except by unanimous consent.

Objection was made.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 80.

Mr. ALBRIGHT called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 110, not voting 90; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barnum, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Burleigh, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Amos Clark, jr., Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Conger, Crounse, Crutchfield, Darrall, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Garfield, Giddings, Gooch, Hancock, Hathorn, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Kellogg, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lofland, Lowe, Luttrell, Maynard, MacDougall, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Niles, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pendleton, Phelps, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Potter, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Richmond, John G. Schumaker, Isaac W. Scudder, Sloan, Sloss, Small, George L. Smith, Starkweather, Strawbridge, Taylor, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, and Willie—89.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Burchard, Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Coburn, Comingo, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Creamer, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Danford, DeWitt, Donnan, Duell, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Farwell, Fort, Freeman, Glover, Hagans, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, John B. Hawley, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunter, Hunton, Hyde, Kasson, Knapp, Lamison, Lawson, Lewis, Loughridge, Lynch, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McNulta, Merriam, Milliken, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packard, Isaac C. Parker, Pratt, Randall, Read, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Shanks, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stanard, Standiford, St. John, Stone, Swann, Tyner, Vance, Walls, Wheeler, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles G. Williams, James Wilson, Wolfe, Woodworth, and John D. Young—110.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Barry, Bass, Begole, Bowen, Bromberg, Bundy, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, Davis, Dawes, Elliott, Foster, Frye, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Havens, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Hynes, Jewett, Kelley, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Leach, Lowndes, Magee, Martin, McCrary, McJunkin, McKee, McLean, Mills, Morey, Negley, Nesmith, Niblack, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Perry, Phillips, Rice, William R. Roberts, Ross, Rusk, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Smart, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stephens, Storm, Stowell, Strait, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Waddell, Waldron, Jasper D. Ward, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—90.

So the House rejected Mr. ALBRIGHT'S amendment.

The question next recurred on the amendment of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, to add the following:

The headquarters of the Army of the United States shall never be moved from the capital of the United States except in time of war,

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SPEER. I ask unanimous consent to move an amendment to strike out the fourteenth section. That is the section authorizing payment by checks.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. DONNAN. I ask the House to take a vote on the amendment which I left at the Clerk's desk, and which was understood by the Chair to be pending before the previous question was called.

Mr. BLAND. I object.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I ask to have my amendment considered in reference to the Adjutant-General's Department.

Mr. BLAND. I object, unless we can have a vote on my amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. KELLOGG demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 119, nays 103, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Bundy, Burchard, Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Coburn, Comingo, Corwin, Cotton, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Danford, Dawes, Donnan, Duell, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Fort, Freeman, Glover, Hagans, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, John B. Hawley, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunter, Hunton, Hyde, Knapp, Lamport, Lawrence, Lawson, Leach, Lewis, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McNulta, Milliken, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Isaac C. Parker, Phillips, Pratt, Randall, Read, Robbins, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Shanks, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Standiford, Starkweather, St. John, Stone, Swann, Taylor, Tyner, Vance, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Woodworth, and John D. Young—118.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Biery, Buffinton, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Darrall, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Farwell, Field, Foster, Garfield, Giddings, Gooch, Hancock, Hathorn, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamison, Lansing, Lofland, Lowe, Luttrell, Lynch, Maynard, MacDougall, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Nesmith, Niles, O'Neill, Page, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Potter, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, Rusk, John G. Schumaker, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sheats, Sloan, Sloss, George L. Smith, Stanard, Strait, Strawbridge, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Wallace, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, and Woodford—104.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Archer, Bromberg, Burrows, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Cook, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, Davis, DeWitt, Elliott, Frye, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hynes, Jewett, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Lowndes, Magee, McJunkin, McKee, McLean, Mills, Mitchell, Morey, Negley, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Poland, Purman, William R. Roberts, Ross, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sheldon, Sherwood, Small, Smart, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stephens, Storm, Stowell, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Waddell, Waldron, Wheeler, Whiteley, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wood, and Pierce M. B. Young—67.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. COBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask by unanimous consent to have a bill passed now.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask whether the House is not willing to allow the Committee on Appropriations to go on this afternoon with the amendments of the Senate to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill in order to avoid, as a great many members wish to do, an evening session?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not yield for that purpose now. I ask to have put on its passage a bill (H. R. No. 3500) to authorize the importation of certain animals for the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, free of duty.

The bill, which was read, provides that all animals, birds, and reptiles which shall be imported by the Zoological Society of Philadelphia in good faith, for exhibition, and not for sale, at their garden in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; and that in case any animal, bird, or reptile imported under the provisions of this act shall, within three years from the date of its importation be sold, it shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such object under the revenue laws in force at the date of the importation; and in case any animal, bird, or reptile imported under the provisions of this act shall be sold within the said period without payment of duty as required by law, all the penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such article and against the said Zoological Society of Philadelphia.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported bills of the following titles, which were severally read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the committee, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider:

A bill (H. R. No. 3529) to extend the limits as to the cost of certain public buildings and remove certain restrictions in regard to the construction of the same;

A bill (H. R. No. 3530) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report upon the necessity for public buildings at certain places, and the cost of the same; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3531) authorizing the acceptance of certain sites for public buildings.

Mr. SESSIONS, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3532) to aid in the construction of a fire-alarm telegraph in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the committee, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT EVANSVILLE.

Mr. ELDREDGE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3533) to change the time of holding the circuit and district courts at the city of Evansville; which was read a first and second time.

The bill in its first section provides that the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Indiana, which are provided by law to be holden at the city of Evansville, shall hereafter be held at that city on the first Monday of April and October in each year.

The second section provides that all suits which stand for trial at and all writs, processes, and recognizances which are or may be made returnable to the next August term of the said court, shall stand continued and be returnable to the next term thereof provided for in the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELDREDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. PACKARD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, presented a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting in compliance, with the act of July 22, 1859, the report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on land grants, being private land claim No. 87; and the same was recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

SURETIES OF JOHN L. ROBINSON.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary, for passage at this time, the bill (H. R. No. 2069) for the relief of the sureties of John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana.

The bill was read.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. That bill ought to go on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. The bill has been agreed to by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I must insist that it should go to the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. To debate the bill is to object, and the bill is not before the House.

GEORGE CHORPENNING.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3534) to remit the claim of George Chorpenning against the United States to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the committee, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

C. C. SPAIDS.

On motion of Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 1582) for the relief of C. C. Spaids, returned from the Senate with an amendment, was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

It was to strike out the words "the sum of $633, it being pay for his services as second lieutenant of Company A, Fourth Illinois Cavalry Regiment," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The full pay and emoluments of second lieutenant of Company A, Fourth Illinois Cavalry Regiment, from the 3d day of June, 1863, to the 6th day of February, 1864, deducting therefrom any sum received by him for services rendered during said period as sergeant or otherwise of said company.

Mr. ORR. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. ORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWARD JARDINE.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 2356) granting a pension to Edward Jardine, late colonel and brevet brigadier-general United States Volunteers, returned from the Senate with an amendment, was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment of the Senate was read. It was to strike out the following words:

And in the case of the death of the said Edward Jardine, the amount of pension allowed by this act shall be continued to his widow or minor children, under the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BURCHARD. I rise to submit a report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the report of the committee of conference will be considered.

Mr. CONGER. Is not the regular order the unfinished business that comes over from Friday morning last?

The SPEAKER. The report of a committee of conference is of the highest privilege known under the rules.

EXPORTATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. BURCHARD submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2081) to facilitate the exportation of distilled spirits, and amendatory of the acts in relation thereto, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their first amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second, third, and fourth amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

The committee further recommend the following as a substitute for the bill: Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That whenever the owner or owners of distilled spirits shall desire to withdraw the same from any distillery bonded warehouse for exportation, under existing law, such owner or owners may at their option, in lieu of executing an export-bond, as now provided by law, give a transportation bond, with sureties satisfactory to the collector of internal revenue, and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, conditioned for the due delivery thereof on board ship at a port of exportation, to be named therein; and in such case, on arrival of the spirits at the port of export, the exporter or owner at that port shall immediately notify the collector of the port of the fact, setting forth his intention to export the same, and the name of the vessel upon which the same are to be laden, and the port to which they are intended to be exported. He shall, after the quantity of spirits has been determined by the gauger and inspector, file with the collector of the port an export entry, verified by his oath or affirmation. He shall also give bond to the United States, with at least two sureties satisfactory to the collector of customs, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will export the spirits as specified in said entry to the port designated in said entry, or to some other port without the jurisdiction of the United States. And upon the lading of such spirits, the collector of the port, after proper bonds for the exportation of the same have been completed by the exporter or owner at the port of shipment thereof, shall transmit to the collector of internal revenue of the district from which the said spirits were withdrawn for exportation, a clearance certificate and a detailed report of the gauger, which report shall show the capacity of each cask in wine gallons, and the contents thereof in wine gallons, proof gallons, and taxable gallons. Upon receipt of the certificate and report, and upon payment of tax on deficiency, if any, the collector of internal revenue shall cancel the transportation bond. The bonds required to be given for the landing at a foreign port of distilled spirits shall be canceled upon the presentation of satisfactory proof and certificates that said distilled spirits have been landed at the port of destination named in the bill of lading, or any other port without the jurisdiction of the United States, or upon satisfactory proof that after shipment the same were lost at sea, without fault or neglect of the owner or shipper thereof.

SEC. 2. That on and after the 1st day of July, 1874, for the expense of providing and affixing the stamps to each cask containing distilled spirits for exportation, there shall be charged ten cents for each stamp instead of twenty-five cents, as now required by law.

H. C. BURCHARD,
JOHN A. KASSON,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEORGE G. WRIGHT,
JOHN P. STOCKTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. BURCHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at twelve minutes before two o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the House to dispense with the morning hour, and proceed with the consideration of the Senate amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the House will give us the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. There is in the morning hour a private bill from the Committee on Patents. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] desires the House now to proceed with the consideration of the Senate amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which are in the House as in Committee of the Whole. A majority of the House can determine that question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I want to save a night session.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know why every time the business of the House is going on regularly it should be interfered with, and the only day and the last day when we can consider private bills here for some time should be taken away from us. The Committee on Patents can dispose of their business during the morning hour of to-day, and then we can go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and attend to business of importance there. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has the right at any time to call up his matters before the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Eight days have passed since the House has done anything with this appropriation bill, except a short time on one day. If we do not send this bill to the Senate to-day it cannot be put in conference until next week by any possibility. Even if we hold a session to-night to consider the bill, it would not be put into conference this week. If before the Senate adjourn to-day the bill can be sent to them, a conference can be ordered, and the committee of conference can meet to-morrow and consider the bill. I do not think it will take more than an hour and a half to get through the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; and we want but an hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to have this bill go to the Senate as soon as possible.

Mr. SENER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House must proceed to determine the question of order of business, no debate being in order.

Mr. MYERS. I have a right to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no right against the objection of other members.

Mr. MYERS. But other gentlemen have been heard.

The SPEAKER. Precisely, because nobody objected to them.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent to say a few words.

No objection was made.

Mr. MYERS. What I desire to say is this: The House unanimously agreed that Friday of each week should be set apart for the consideration of private bills. The whole matter was discussed and the necessity for attending to public business considered at that time. Friday was fixed for the consideration of private bills, and Saturday taken away for that purpose. A new rule has been adopted this session by which, although committees have been able to present their reports, they have been referred to the Committee of the Whole and placed on the Private Calendar.

There are two objection days every month, and many of these bills are objected to; so that month after month people who have a right to be heard before Congress, who have interests pending here which affect the public as well as private parties, have their cases postponed. Thus the business of the session, which formerly before the new rule was adopted was attended to properly, is now shoved off. If we have public work to do let us wait here and do it, but let us also——

Mr. POTTER. The gentleman will allow me to ask him which is the most important, private or public business?

Mr. MYERS. They are both important, and we are paid a salary to remain here the whole year if necessary and attend to all our business.

Mr. POTTER. But let us do the public business first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must correct the gentleman from Pennsylvania on one point. At no time within the last ten years has private business received so much attention as during this session.

Mr. MYERS. I stand corrected in only one respect. I spoke of bills objected to.

The SPEAKER. At no session during the last fifteen years have so many private bills passed as at this session.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Chair whether under the former rule when committees were called they could not at once proceed with the consideration of their business, which is now impeded under the new rule? I admit that a large number of bills which were not objected to have been passed.

Mr. POTTER. There has never been so much private business done since I have known anything about Congress as at this session.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair the new rule has proved highly favorable to the transaction of private business. The Chair repeats that the record of no session for the last fifteen or twenty years will show so many private bills passed as at this session. The Chair makes this remark because the gentleman from Pennsylvania seemed to reflect on the new rule, which was adopted by a very large majority of the House.

Mr. CONGER. But since the adoption of that new rule, under which business has progressed so rapidly, the House has taken away one private-bill day of each week.

The SPEAKER. Well, Saturday never amounted to much practically as a private-bill day.

Mr. MYERS. I was not reflecting on the new rule; I only want to have the rule enforced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will observe that the rule still declares that Fridays shall be devoted to private business unless the House otherwise determines. The question is left for the House to decide.

Mr. CONGER. Now I ask the House to decide.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all I ask.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. GARFIELD to dispense with the morning hour and proceed to the consideration of the Senate amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, there were—ayes 85, noes 68.

Mr. SLOSS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. It will be remembered that the House was dividing on the thirtieth amendment.

The SPEAKER. The pending amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, after the words "two Assistant Secretaries of State, at $3,500 each," insert "and one additional Assistant Secretary of State, with like compensation, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the Third Assistant Secretary of State."

The SPEAKER. In this amendment the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; concurrence. The Chair will remember——

The SPEAKER. The recommendation of the committee was misprinted.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir. After the committee made their report they changed their mind.

Mr. GARFIELD. We recommended a formal non-concurrence before we had heard the Secretary of State.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say a single word. These amendments relating to the Department of State provide for one new Assistant Secretary of State and twelve additional clerks. In my judgment there is no necessity whatever for this increase. I hope therefore the House will non-concur.

The question being taken on concurring in the thirtieth amendment of the Senate, there were—ayes 61, noes 29.

Mr. HOLMAN. On this proposition, which is to create a new office, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 70, not voting 93; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Barber, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton Burchard, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Corwin, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Danford, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Farwell, Fort, Freeman, Garfield, Gooch, Hagans, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamport, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Lynch, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Niles, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Perry, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Potter, Rainey, Ransier, Ray, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sheats, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Starkweather, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Taylor, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—126.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Caldwell, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Coburn, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Field, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Knapp, Lamison, Luttrell, Marshall, Martin, Milliken, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Packer, Phillips, Randall, Read, Robbins, James C. Robinson, Sessions, Sloss, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Stone, Christopher Y. Thomas, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, Wolfe, and John D. Young—70.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Bromberg, Buckner, Bundy, Burrows, Cain, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Cotton, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Elliott, Foster, Frye, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hunter, Hynes, Jewett, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Lansing, Leach, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Magee, McJunkin, McKee, McLean, McNulta, Mills, Mitchell, Morey, Negley, Nunn, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Pendleton, Phelps, Pratt, Purman, Rapier, Rice, William R. Roberts, Ross, Rusk, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Shanks, Sherwood, Smart, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Standiford, Stephens, St. John, Storm, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Waldron, Wilber, Charles G. Williams, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, Woodford, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—93.

So the amendment was concurred in.

During the roll-call,

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the republican side of the House take the entire responsibility of all this increase of the appropriation, I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Objection was made.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a personal explanation which will not take half a minute. The RECORD the other day, when this amendment was up, reported me as saying that we could not get competent men for Assistant Secretaries of State at the present salary. This is a mistake on the part of the RECORD. What I meant to say was that we had the very best men in the country, and ought to pay a better salary for competent men for that place. I have no doubt we will have a man of like character appointed to this position, but we ought to pay them a better salary than we do now.

The question next recurred on the thirty-first amendment of the Senate, as follows:

Strike out under the head of State Department these words:
Ten clerks of class four; nine clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one.
And in lieu thereof insert the following:
Twelve clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; eleven clerks of class one; and thirteen clerks, each of which thirteen shall receive a compensation at the rate of $900 a year.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. They have changed front on that as they have on the others.

The SPEAKER. In what respect has the committee changed its action in reference to these Senate amendments?

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee now recommend concurrence in the thirty-first, thirty-second, and thirty-third amendments, and in the thirty-fourth with an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The question is now on the thirty-first amendment. It is an increase of twelve clerks.

Mr. GARFIELD. The whole question has been discussed, and the committee recommend concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 40.

Mr. HOLMAN. On this question of increasing salaries $14,000 I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 120, nays 65, not voting 104; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Barber, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Burchard, Burleigh, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Casen, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Cotton, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Foster, Garfield, Gooch, Hagans, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Kasson, Kellogg, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Lynch, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Myers, Niles, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Perry, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Rainey, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sessions, Sheats, Sheldon, Sloan, Small, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, John Q. Smith, Stanard, Stowell, Strait, Taylor, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodworth—120.

NAYS—Messrs. Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buffinton, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Coburn, Cook, Corwin, Crittenden, Crossland, Danford, Darrall, Durham, Fort, Freeman, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Hyde, Knapp, Leach, Marshall, Milliken, Moore, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, O'Brien, Potter, Randall, Read, Robbins, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, John G. Schumaker, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloss, Southard, Speer, Standiford, Starkweather, Stone, Vance, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, Wolfe, and John D. Young—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Averill, Banning, Bromberg, Buckner, Bundy, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Clymer, Comingo, Cox, Creamer, Crocker, Curtis, Davis, Dawes, De Witt, Eden, Eldredge, Elliott, Farwell, Frye, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Hays, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hunter, Hynes, Jewett, Kelley, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Luttrell, Magee, Martin, McCrary, McJunkin, McKee, McLean, McNulta, Mills, Mitchell, Monroe, Morey, Negley, Nesmith, Nunn, O'Neill, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phelps, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Ransier, William R. Roberts, Ross, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Shanks, Sherwood, Smart, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stephens, St. John, Storm, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Waddell, Waldron, Wilber, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—104.

So the amendment was concurred in.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The Clerk read the thirty-fourth amendment, as follows:

Insert "Rolls and Library, Statistics;" so it will read:
For six chiefs of Bureaus, (Consular, Diplomatic, Accounts, Rolls and Library, Statistics, and Indexes and Archives,) at $2,400 each, $14,400.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence by inserting after the word "archives" the words "and chief translator," and striking out "$14,400" and inserting "$16,800."

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment has not been printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. This amendment of the committee is not applicable at all to the pending amendment of the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the original it is for six chiefs of Bureaus, Consular, Diplomatic, Accounts, &c. The Senate amend by inserting "Rolls and Library, Statistics." The amendment of the committee is to add "a chief translator."

Mr. RANDALL. Is that, or is it not, an additional office?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RANDALL. This is one more increase.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The Committee on Appropriations have already increased the number of officers and of men who are to live off the Government; but I insist they have not the right to move to create a new office here. It is not in order, I insist, to amend the Senate amendment in this way. In the bill itself there is no increase. The original text provides for six chiefs of Bureaus, Consular and Diplomatic, Accounts, and Indexes and Archives.

That was the original language. The Senate simply strike out the words "Consular and Diplomatic, Accounts," and substitute the words "Rolls and Library, Statistics."

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is mistaken. The words "Consular and Diplomatic" were not stricken out. They only strike out the word "and" between "Consular" and "Diplomatic."

Mr. HOLMAN. Then it reads:

For six chiefs of Bureaus, Consular, Diplomatic, Accounts, Rolls and Library, Statistics, and Indexes and Archives at $2,400 each, $14,400.

Now, then, the amendment of the Senate does not increase the number of officers, but leaves the number at six. This is a proposition to increase the number to seven, and to add the additional officer after the word "Archives," which is not a part of the Senate amendment, but is a part of the original text. The Senate amendment does not increase the number of officers, while the effect of this amendment is to add one more chief.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say to the gentleman that this does not add a Bureau but it does add a translator. The Committee on Appropriations in the Senate sent word to us that they had omitted it by mistake, and that it was their intention to put it in on the recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WHEELER in the chair.) It is not competent for the House to add this amendment if it is objected to. It is clearly the creation of a new office. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; then we recommend that the amendment be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2538) to legalize and establish a ponton railway-bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3169) changing the time of holding circuit and district courts in Vermont.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MORTON, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. MERRIMON.

The message also communicated the following resolution adopted by the Senate:

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the resolution of the House of Representatives for the suspension of the joint rule of the two Houses, No. 6, so far as it relates to the bills of the House H. R. No. 1215, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; H. R. No. 2879, an act revising and consolidating all the laws authorizing post-roads in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; and H. R. No. 3394, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia, in force on the 1st day of December, 1873.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The thirty-seventh amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July next a fee of five dollars shall be collected for each citizen's passport issued from the Department. An account of these fees shall be kept, and the amount collected shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States at least quarterly.

Provided, That the Secretary of State may make such distribution of the clerks in the Department, and from time to time alter the same, as he may think proper. He may also prescribe duties for the Assistant Secretaries, the Solicitor, and the clerks of Bureaus, as well as for all the other employés in the Department, and may make changes and transfers therein when in his judgment it becomes necessary.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence in the amendment with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out of the proviso the words "make such distribution of the clerks in the Department, and from time to time alter the same, as he may think proper. He may.

Mr. GARFIELD. The House will see that what we propose to strike out is entirely unnecessary. The head of a Department has a right to prescribe special duties to his subordinates and transfer them from one Bureau to another in his own Department as he pleases.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The whole of that proviso ought to be stricken out. The only point in it, so far as I can judge, is that part which applies to the Solicitor. The Secretary of State, like the heads of all the other Departments, does not need any provision of law to give him authority to regulate and prescribe the duties of the clerks and officials under him. He has that authority where the duties of his officials are not otherwise prescribed by law. But as the law now stands the Solicitor of the Department of State is an officer of the Department of Justice. That Department was created in 1870, after careful consideration by that Congress. It had been found prior to that time that the law-officers of each Department who were only subordinate to the heads of the Departments were furnishing in many cases conflicting opinions, and it was deemed advisable to create a Department of Justice, so that all the decisions of the law-officers of any one of the Departments should be examined by the Attorney-General or some one of his assistants. Under that law the examiner of claims, who was the law-officer of the State Department, was made an officer of the Department of Justice and subordinate to it.

Now this proviso is for the purpose of repealing the law creating the Department of Justice so far as the Solicitor of the State Department is concerned. I know it has been said, and I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations thinks so, that the whole law creating the Department of Justice ought to be repealed.

Mr. GARFIELD. No; I do not say that.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I am not prepared to say that if the question were brought before the House they would not decide that the whole law ought to be repealed; but I am decidedly of the opinion that it ought not to be repealed piecemeal in this way. This matter was brought to the attention of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the bill for the reorganization of the State Department, which was made the basis of this amendment. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, without passing on the question whether the Department of Justice was on the whole a proper way of getting law opinions, thought that it was not proper to take out from that Department one officer who now belongs to it. I can understand that the Secretary of the Treasury does not enjoy very much having the Solicitor of the Treasury an officer of the Department of Justice. I presume the Postmaster-General would prefer that the law-adviser of that Department should not belong to the Department of Justice. I hope, therefore, that the whole proviso will be stricken out, unless some reason can be given for retaining it.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the existing law give this control to the Secretary of State over all the officials named in this amendment except the Solicitor?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It does. The Department of Justice now has control of law-officers of every Department, and this proviso proposes to take out of his control only the Solicitor of the State Department.

Mr. MYERS. I simply want to say that the head of the Department of Justice, the Attorney-General, does not desire that these officers shall be charged to him and nominally under his supervision, when really he never sees them. He has said:

> While these officers are nominally subjected to the control of this Department, they are attached to and exclusively perform duties assigned to them by the heads of other Departments. Obviously this is an arrangement which not only creates a divided jurisdiction, but produces confusion in the transaction of the public business.

And he therefore urged the passage of some act to make the change. Now, sir, these officers should be remanded to their respective Departments.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let it all be done at once.

Mr. MYERS. If there is a chance here, and it is asked for by the Department of State as well as by the Department of Justice, there is no reason why it should not be passed now. Certainly as soon as we can we ought to remand them all to their respective Departments, where they perform their duties.

Mr. SPEER. The Attorney-General was before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and his attention was directed to this subject. His statement was taken down and I believe it is now being printed by order of the House with the testimony taken before the committee. He did not say, and I believe at the time he was very careful not to say, that the Solicitors of these several Departments should be taken from under his control.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not understand that he says so.

Mr. SPEER. I say he seemed to be careful not to say so. I inferred from what he said and from his manner of saying it that he thought there was a desire on the part of the heads of the several Departments to control the Solicitors of their respective Departments. He expressed no approval of the present arrangement, but he thought and said that the policy of the Government upon this subject should be specifically declared, well understood, and adhered to. It is certainly an anomalous condition of things to have a Department of Justice with a head to it and yet take away the limbs of the Department and put them in other Departments, away from the head.

I think the recent investigation conducted by the Committee on Ways and Means shows the impolicy and the danger to the Government of any such distribution of its Solicitors. They should be under their legal superior, that is, the head of the Department to which the duties they perform more directly relate. For instance, the Secretary of State or the Secretary of the Treasury pays no attention to the legal matters of his Department. He refers them to the Solicitor of that Department. The Solicitor, however, does not refer them to the Attorney-General, but acts upon his own knowledge, upon his own responsibility, knowing at the time that his action will not be revised by his superior. I say the whole system is wrong. The law should stand as it now is, and Congress should reaffirm it with emphasis, giving to the Attorney-General not only the legal right over these Solicitors, but adding to that an expression of the public sentiment of Congress and of the country that all of these Solicitors should be responsible and subject to the head of the Department of Justice, their conduct and opinions to be revised by him, they submitting their reports to him instead of to the head of the Department for which they are Solicitors.

Mr. ORTH. It strikes me that there is an eminent propriety in the adoption of this provision. It provides that the Secretary of State shall prescribe the duties of the Solicitor of the State Department. It evidently refers to the duties of Solicitor inside of and under the jurisdiction of the State Department. While as a Solicitor he may have certain duties to perform under the direction of the Attorney-General, yet when his duties pertain exclusively to matters within the State Department they should be under the control and direction of that Department.

It has been the policy of this Government to have each one of its Departments separate, distinct, and independent of the others. I doubt the wisdom or the propriety of the law establishing the Department of Justice and authorizing it to send its deputies, its assistants, into the other Departments of the Government, there to perform duties for which the heads of those Departments are responsible, and yet they have no control over the Solicitors sent to their Departments. Who is immediately responsible for the conduct of the Solicitor of the State Department?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Would the gentleman have any objection to agreeing to the proviso with these words inserted after the word "Solicitor:" "not interfering with the subordination of the Solicitor to the head of the Department of Justice?"

Mr. ORTH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GARFIELD. I want to say one thing in regard to this matter. It is simply impossible for the head of the Department of Justice to be reponsible for the legal opinions of six or seven Solicitors in the other Departments. He cannot do it.

Mr. SPEER. Why?

Mr. GARFIELD. It being a physical impossibility, he does not attempt to do it. Here is the Secretary of the Interior who is called upon to settle the meaning of an Indian contract, or the legality of a patent for land, or some one of a dozen questions arising day by day. Now the Secretary of the Interior should be able to say to him: "Look at this question; I must act upon it in an hour; give me your opinion and I will adopt it; I am the head of the Department, and I want you to help me in giving the law;" this is what the Secretary wants to do. Of course it is all subject to appeal and may be carried up to the Department of Justice.

As a matter of fact, there may be five or six different opinions on the same day on different subjects by five or six different men, all given in the name of the Department of Justice, and they may be conflicting opinions, and frequently they are. Now the Attorney-General says that he cannot be responsible for all these opinions; he cannot consider himself in that sense the author of all these opinions and the head of all that kind of business. But he can be made very properly the authority to which all these opinions are appealed whenever any question of appeal arises.

The Secretary of the Interior says, "I want my law officer at my elbow." The Postmaster-General says that he wants his law officer at his elbow; he wants him as the consulting lawyer of his Department. The Secretary of State very properly says, "If I am to have a Solicitor, a law officer, I must have him at my hand to examine such subjects as I may direct him to examine. I do not want to send over to the Attorney-General and get him to direct my Solicitor to examine the question for me. I cannot be bothered in that way." All the heads of Departments agree on this point, and as a matter of fact that part of the law is a dead letter. But I do not want the law repealed. I only want it modified to the extent of remanding each one of these officers to the immediate direction and control of the head of the Department to which he respectively belongs. But all the reports of these officers, everything going to make up the body of judicial statistics, will still go as now to the head of the Department of Justice.

Mr. SPEER. Does not the gentleman think it would be much better for all the Solicitors of these respective Departments to have their offices in the same building with the Attorney-General? Then any question referred to the Department of Justice by any of the Departments could be submitted by the Attorney-General to the Solicitor of that Department, who would submit his decision to the Attorney-General, and the latter would be responsible for its correctness.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will see that that would be simply impossible, with our public buildings scattered as they are through the city. The heads of these Departments have said to the Committee on Appropriations again and again that they must have the law officer at their elbow as their law mind, just as in any great business, that of a railroad company for instance, the solicitor of the company must be at hand at the command of the company to examine questions as they arise. Personally I do not care about this matter, but I hope the last clause of the amendment will be retained.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what is the authority of the Solicitor or law officer of a Department? I merely ask for information.

Mr. GARFIELD. Simply this: he is responsible to the head of the Department for the correctness of his opinions on all law questions. The head of the Department can overrule him if he chooses, or the question can be appealed to the Attorney-General, and the decision overruled by him.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Who has that right of appeal?

Mr. GARFIELD. The Secretary himself.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Has the party against whom the decision is made the right of appeal?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know that he has directly; but whenever the party asks for an appeal it is usually allowed by the Secretary. The right of appeal is in the Secretary himself.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But is it an ordinary practice for the head of a Department to overrule the decision of his Solicitor?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not an ordinary practice, but it is done sometimes.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to insert after the word "Solicitor" in the proviso these words: "not interfering with his duties as an officer of the Department of Justice." This will obviate the objection made by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr. ORTH,] and I think all the other objections that have been made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I move further to amend the amendment by striking out five dollars and inserting three dollars as the tax upon passports. I judge from some things that have been said on this subject that there is more or less misapprehension as to the necessity or utility of this tax. The tax has now been abolished for some time. If it is proposed to restore it, I think it should be put at a lower figure. It appears to be supposed by some gentlemen that nobody goes abroad except wealthy people. That is a mistake, as any one I think will find upon careful observation. Although it is said that those who go abroad are wealthy and can perfectly well afford to pay this five-dollar tax, yet it should be borne in mind that nowadays passports are to a great extent dispensed with in Europe; that is to say Government officers in very few instances stop a man at the frontier and require to see and visé his passport. The wealthy and more intelligent travelers care but little about passports, because they carry with them other means of identification, such as letters of introduction, or they may have personal acquaintance with ministers and consuls. But a passport is very valuable to a naturalized citizen who goes back to his native country on business or for pleasure; such a man desires a passport for the purpose of identifying him and establishing his citizenship in case any question in regard to it should arise. He is more likely to place value on a passport than the wealthy and more intelligent traveler.

Gentlemen speak as if this five-dollar tax were nothing. But at this time when a poor man can take passage across the Atlantic for twenty or thirty dollars, and when he calculates every dime in estimating the expenses of a trip to return to Germany or England, five dollars for a passport tax is quite an item in the estimate. I move my amendment because I think a tax of three dollars is quite enough to be borne by the poorer class of foreigners when leaving this country; and these are the people who most value a passport.

By the amendments to this bill we have added $14,000 to the expenses of the State Department for additional clerks, &c. That is well enough; I voted for those amendments. This passport tax is proposed in order to cover the expense of those additional officers. But at the rate proposed it will much more than do so. It will yield from forty to sixty thousand dollars a year. A tax of three dollars is therefore abundant for this purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. The old tax was five dollars; it was never any less amount; and nobody ever complained of it. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means informs me that there was no request to strike it out when it was struck out. It went because it was in a group of internal-revenue taxes which were repealed as a group. It is manifest of the one hundred thousand people who go abroad only nine thousand annually take passports. None of those from the great countries whence emigrants come to us get passports.

Passports are only needed in Russia and Italy. In no other countries in Europe do they need passports. There are no Russians here except those who are wealthy. There are few Italians. Those who come from the great countries which principally supply us with emigrants need passports.

By the concurrent testimony of the men who have traveled and considered this subject it is only the wealthy classes who get passports. Therefore this five-dollar tax, (the rate at which it always stood,) which will bring $45,000 into the Treasury, is a thing not to be despised just now. I call now for a vote.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, this matter was before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It was not my good fortune to be present when the bills were reported from that committee in relation to this subject, and I rise now merely to say a few words. I am in favor of the imposition of this tax of five dollars on passports. There is no objection in my judgment to it. Inasmuch as it was said, however, that this tax is necessary in order to defray the expenses of the State Department, (and I find such a statement in the RECORD,) I wish to say just this one thing on that subject. These Executive Departments are not intended, as I understand, to be self-sustaining. The price of these passports is not intended to be fixed in order that we may pay the expenses of any Department. If that were so, then in the bill which was recently reported to the House and for which I voted in Committee of the Whole because I could not get anything better, and in reference to which the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee also wanted something better, as he has stated—if that were the rule, that these Departments should be self-sustaining, then the $200,000 we receive through the consular system in the way of fees in excess of expenditures ought to furnish to the men we send abroad a little better pay than they now receive. We should pay to our consuls out of the $200,000 of receipts in excess of expenditures a salary sufficient to enable them to live respectably when they are sent abroad to represent our country.

Therefore when I vote, as I shall vote, for this amendment in reference to imposing a passport tax and putting the price as it should be at five dollars, (because those who go abroad can afford to pay at least that sum for their passports,) I wish to say that it is not upon the principle that this tax is necessary in order to sustain the Government in running the State Department or is requisite for paying the current expenses of that Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out "five" and insert "two," and I do that in order to say a few words, because I am not in favor of imposing any such tax at all. Now, Mr. Speaker, every member knows that the persons going abroad from this country who require these passports are naturalized citizens of the United States who return to the places of their birth in Europe either on business or for pleasure. They require some certificate of their citizenship. Every member who hears me I have no doubt has more than once gone to the Department of State to obtain for some naturalized citizen who lives in his district a passport to be used abroad as evidence of citizenship.

By this bill we have added $14,000 in the way of salaries to the appropriations for the State Department. We have increased the salaries in that Department beyond what they were during the war. It is now proposed in addition that we shall impose a tax of five dollars for a passport upon the poorer class of our people who are compelled to go abroad to visit the homes of their childhood on business or who visit Europe on pleasure, and who very naturally may desire to take their wives and children with them.

Nothing seems to me to be so disingenuous as this legislation. We provide here for this passport tax because the Treasury wants money, and this will give us $45,000 additional, and yet at the same time the Committee on Appropriations have recommended an increase of salaries in this State Department beyond what were deemed sufficient in the most expensive period of our history, during the late war. I think under the circumstances this House would shrink from the idea of imposing such a tax. I am against making it two or three or five dollars. It will be a tax upon a great body of our naturalized citizens who go abroad. It will be greater than they are compelled to pay for similar certificates in other relations of life. It is disingenuous to impose such a tax after we have increased these salaries. While I have moved an amendment, I shall vote against imposing any tax at all upon passports. I am against the whole system.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I should move to raise this passport tax to twenty-five dollars if it were not for one thing, and that is that most of the countries in Europe have abolished the passport system, so that passports are very little needed anywhere. Russia and Italy are the only countries where they are needed. We have very few Russian naturalized citizens, and fewer still Italians, and when they go home they do not take passports. The passport is only for the traveler who goes abroad for the purpose of spending his money abroad. He not only impoverishes his country while he is abroad by what he takes out of it in gold to spend there, but while he is there he buys all his clothes, and his wife's clothes, and his aunt's clothes, and his neice's clothes, and his daughter's clothes, and brings them in free of duty. We not only lose what he otherwise would have spent here, that which he got from the country, but he defrauds the revenue actually when he comes back by filling up his trunks with clothing, which gets in free under our laws.

The difficulty is that we cannot make people take passports. If we could, I should desire to put the fee up to a sum which should render going abroad a little difficult.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Would it not do to prohibit people from going abroad altogether?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That would be quite convenient and proper under some circumstances. I never knew anybody to get any good from going abroad. They generally come home with a lot of notions that are anti-American, and I am more surprised than I can well express that my economical friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] whom I always expect to see on the side of the people, wants to cut down this rich man's pleasure-tax. Of all things in the world that he should do that! I could hardly believe my own ears when I heard him. I expected him to say, "Now, here is a luxury; let us tax that luxury; the money will go into the Treasury, and although we have agreed to pay $14,000 more for salaries, here is a way of getting the amount out of the rich man rather than the poor man." That is the speech I expected to hear from my friend from Indiana, and I was never more surprised than to hear him insist on taking off the tax on the rich man's luxury, who goes abroad to spend his money abroad, to learn foreign fashions, to drink foreign wines, and to come home with foreign monarchical ideas against all granger notions. I was surprised and utterly astonished.

Now, if it had been any of these bloated bondholders that had defended such a thing I should not have wondered, for they are the very class who go abroad; but for my economical friend to do it surprised me indeed. I suppose he was only thinking of the naturalized citizen who goes abroad; but he hardly ever takes a passport, and when he does it does not do him any good. Witness the case of the poor Fenians. They chuck them into prison if they do anything there, passports and all, and pay no attention to the passports.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my amendment and renew it. We so seldom have the pleasure of hearing pleasant words from the gentleman from Massachusetts that one can well afford even a little misrepresentation for the purpose of hearing him talk cheerfully and pleasantly. I regard myself as fortunate in having made a suggestion that called out this exhibition of amiability and good nature. It is a happy quality, it is a good thing to exhibit on the floor of the House. I am a little surprised at his misrepresentation, for he was standing right before me while I was speaking, and I cannot imagine that he would intentionally misrepresent me even in a Pickwickian sense. I suggested, speaking right to the gentleman and pointing my finger at him, which is a bad habit of mine, that people of wealth who spend their money abroad and impoverish their own country should be compelled to take out passports. When the gentleman goes abroad or when persons of his class go abroad I would be in favor of putting a very high tax on them for passports.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But we pay no such tax at all. Passports are furnished to members of Congress and officials free of cost when they go abroad, and they always take them.

Mr. GARFIELD. My friend is mistaken. I had to pay for my passport when I went abroad.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts would go abroad without any passport; his face would be sufficient to carry him. Gentlemen on this floor going to Europe do not propose to take passports. But a naturalized citizen who wants to return to his old home-tree, feeling a pride in his new nationality, would desire to take out a passport. He would send to the gentleman from Massachusetts or some other member to obtain a passport for him as evidence of his right as a freeman in this Republic of ours. It is upon that class of our citizens the gentleman from Massachusetts would impose a tax, while members of Congress would escape scot-free, for he admits they would go abroad without passports. He would impose this tax for the simple purpose of excusing the extravagance and profligacy of expenditure on the part of the Government. In other words, the man who comes from a foreign land to our shores and identifies himself with our fortunes is to be taxed in order that a few more dollars may be added to the amount in the Treasury. I venture to say that putting on this tax is a mere pretense, and that if you reduce it to one dollar you will repeal it before a year is past. I protest against such legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. When the opportunity occurs I shall move to strike out the whole paragraph, because I consider it a miserably small matter for a Government like ours to levy a tax upon the people who want to go abroad. I can say this much, that I have never met a native or adopted citizen of this country who had been abroad who did not come back tenfold more in favor of our institutions and proud of the fact that he was an American citizen. I would facilitate American citizens, native as well as foreign born, going abroad. It has been urged here that the people who go abroad bring back clothing and all that sort of thing for their friends. That objection I think has no force. If there is an abuse in that respect then deal with it, not as you did perhaps with your Sanborn contract, but stop your smuggling in some way through the agency of law. Do not attempt to impose a tax of five dollars on every man who goes abroad, and under that subterfuge increase the number of officers in the State Department.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call the previous question on the Senate amendment with the pending amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN to reduce the fee for passports from three dollars, as proposed by Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, to two dollars.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, to reduce the fee from five dollars, as proposed by the Senate, to three dollars; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would suggest that it would be well to add a provision giving a bounty of five dollars to every man who goes abroad, and take the tax on friction matches to pay it.

The next question was on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to the proviso of the Senate amendment, to amend the proviso to read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of State may prescribe duties for the Assistant Secretaries, the Solicitor, and the clerks of Bureaus, as well as for all the other employés in the Department, and may make changes and transfers therein when in his judgment it becomes necessary.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was agreed to

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in upon a division—ayes 96, noes not counted.

Mr. GARFIELD. The next nine amendments relate to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senate has very considerably increased the force of that office, both in the number of persons employed and the amount of compensation. While the Committee on Appropriations admit that there should be some increase, they recommend non-concurrence in all the nine amendments. If the question can be taken upon all at once it will save time.

The paragraph to which the amendments relate, as passed by the House, was as follows:

Secretary's office:

For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, $8,000; two Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $3,500 each; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the Treasury building, $2,500; five clerks, namely, of Appointments, of Warrants and Appropriations, of Revenue Marine, of Customs, of Navigation, at $2,500 each; five principal clerks, at $2,000 each; twenty-five of class four; two disbursing clerks, at $2,800 each; twenty-six clerks of class three; twenty-one clerks of class two; eighteen clerks of class one; thirty-one female clerks, at $900 each.

The Senate proposes to amend the paragraph so as to read as follows:

Secretary's office:

For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, $8,000; two Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $3,500 each; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the Treasury building, $3,000; ten chiefs of divisions, namely, of Appointments, of Warrants and Appropriations, of Revenue Marine and Life-saving Stations, of Customs, of Navigation, of Internal Revenue, of Sub-treasury, of Stationery, Printing, and Blanks, of Files and Records, and of Mails, at $3,000 each; eight principal clerks of divisions, at $2,000 each; twenty-five of class four; two disbursing clerks, at $2,200 each; twenty-six clerks of class three; twenty-one clerks of class two; eighteen clerks of class one; thirty-one female clerks, at $900 each, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] what is to come; that is, a portion of this increase proposed by the Senate will finally be concurred in. I hope there will be such a vote upon non-concurring in these amendments that the committee of conference to be appointed will regard it as an instruction on the part of the House.

The question being taken, the amendments were not concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that the four amendments in relation to the First Comptroller of the Treasury may be all non-concurred in.

The paragraph as passed by the House was as follows:

First Comptroller of the Treasury:

For First Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,000; nine clerks of class four; ten clerks of class three; ten clerks of class two; five clerks of class one; six copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and two labores; in all, $67,600.

The Senate propose to amend it to read as follows:

First Comptroller of the Treasury:

For First Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,000; ten clerks of class four; twelve clerks of class three; twelve clerks of class two; five clerks of class one; six copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $75,400.

The amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that all the amendments relative to the First Auditor be not concurred in.

The paragraph as passed by the House was as follows:

First Auditor:

For the First Auditor of the Treasury, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class four; eight clerks of class three; eight clerks of class two; ten clerks of class one; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $48,680.

The Senate propose to amend the paragraph to read as follows:

First Auditor:

For the First Auditor of the Treasury, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class four; ten clerks of class three; ten clerks of class two; thirteen clerks of class one; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $58,280.

The amendments of the Senate were not concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask also that the amendments in relation to the Fourth Auditor be not concurred in.

The paragraph as passed by the House was as follows:

Fourth Auditor:

For the Fourth Auditor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class four; seventeen clerks of class three; ten clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; six female clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $73,200.

The Senate propose to amend the paragraph to read as follows:

Fourth Auditor:

For the Fourth Auditor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class four; eighteen clerks of class three; eleven clerks of class two; ten clerks of class one; six female clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $78,600.

Mr. DONNAN. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] will agree with me that probably the Senate have stricken down the appropriations for the Fourth Auditor's office as much as it ought to be. I therefore would like to have the House concur in their amendments as a whole in relation to that office.

Mr. GARFIELD. I agree that in two or three instances the House has cut too deep. I am surprised, however, to find that in the particular office where the House cut the deepest, that of the Second Auditor, the Senate has not seen fit to make any increase at all, while in some of those where we cut less deep they have made an increase. I think that the amendments of the Senate are not properly adjusted with reference to the Treasurer's office and the Register's office. To put up the former and not the latter is manifestly unjust, because those two offices run pari passu; they do parts of the same business. To increase the force in one without increasing it in the other is either wronging one or giving a superfluous force to the other. Whatever increase is made ought to be distributed between those two offices.

As to the Fourth Auditor's office, I am inclined to think that in the House we have cut a little too low; but I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa to let that matter pass, and I believe a compromise between the action of the House and that of the Senate can be reached.

Mr. RANDALL. I have here a paper which has been placed in my hands, bearing exactly on this case. It is quite voluminous; and I do not want to read it or insert it in the RECORD, but I propose to hand it to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that he may consider it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am receiving a great many letters from different sources in regard to these offices, and I am glad to receive them. I will endeavor to give proper consideration to any suggestions.

Mr. RANDALL. I only ask this as a matter of fair play.

The question being taken, the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in lines 567 and 568 by striking out "$1,990,542," and inserting "$2,190,542;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of collectors, $2,190,542.

Mr. GARFIELD. We recommend non-concurrence in this amendment. If the Committee on Ways and Means have any suggestion on the subject to make, I should be glad to hear it. The amendment makes a transfer from one fund to another, for which no sufficient reason has been given thus far. There may be reasons of which we have not been informed.

Mr. RANDALL. From what item is this $200,000 increase transferred?

Mr. GARFIELD. There is a reduction of $200,000 in the appropriation for salaries and expenses of supervisors, store-keepers, &c.; and this amount is added to the salaries and expenses of collectors. I ask that the House may non-concur; but before the bill is finally passed, I will try to get further information.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The Clerk read the following amendment:

Strike out these words:

Hereafter no gauger shall receive a greater compensation than five dollars per day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The House had better divide on this question.

Mr. GARFIELD. We desire a division at least by a rising vote, so that we may know the sentiment of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. If we concur in the Senate amendment the effect as I understand will be to leave the law as it is now in regard to the pay of gaugers. By non-concurring we reduce their pay to five dollars per day.

The question being taken on concurring in the amendment, there were ayes 36, noes not counted.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. MERRIAM. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment, to come in after line 676:

To enable the assistant treasurer in New York to retain the services of experts, $3,000; to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order that the original text is not subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not necessary to raise a point of order. The amendment cannot be offered except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MERRIAM. I consider it only fair that a provision of this kind should be adopted. There are now in the office of the assistant treasurer at New York experts to whom he is obliged to make an extra allowance out of his own salary for the purpose of retaining their services. This House, I think, will not consider it desirable that this burden should be longer imposed on that officer.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are millions of men in this country who are competent for public office and who would be glad to serve the Government without any increase of the salaries now allowed. I must object to the amendment.

The seventy-ninth, eightieth, and eighty-first amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Insert "for stamp clerk, $2,400;" strike out "four watchmen, $4,000;" and in lieu thereof insert "three night watchmen, at $1,500 each; for one day watchman, $960;" so the paragraph will read:

Office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco: For assistant treasurer, $6,000; for cashier, $3,000; for book-keeper, $2,500; for assistant cashier, $2,000; for assistant book-keeper, $2,000; for stamp clerk, $2,400; for one clerk, $1,800; for four watchmen, $4,000, three night watchmen, at $1,500 each; for one day watchman, $960; in all $22,760.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in these amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. We had better have a division.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have a rising vote.

The amendment was non-concurred in, no one rising in the affirmative.

The amendment of the Senate numbered 86 was read, as follows:

Under the heading "office of the Director of the Mint" insert "one clerk of class one."

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. POLAND. This little amendment was put in in the Senate on motion of one of my own senatorial colleagues, and some information was laid before the Senate by Dr. Linderman, Director of the Mint. which had not been communicated to the Committee on Appropriations at the time, but which has been since, and I understand they have no objection to concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate numbered 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, and 97 were read, as follows:

Insert "superintendent, $3,500;" strike out "and melter and refiner," and in lieu thereof insert "who shall perform the duties of melter;" strike out "three" and insert "five," so it will read "five workmen;" strike out "3" and insert "5," so it will read "$5,000;" strike out "each;" strike out "15" and insert "18," so it will read "$18,000," insert "and principal calculator;" strike out "$2,400" and insert "$3,000;" insert "weighing clerk, $3,000; paying clerk, $2,200; bar clerk, $2,000;" and strike out "$36,001" and insert "$43,009," so it will read:

To reopen the branch mint at New Orleans, to be conducted hereafter as a mint, subject to the provisions and restrictions of the coinage act of 1873, the following appropriations are made: For salaries of superintendent $3,500; assayer, who shall perform the duties of melter, $2,500; wages of five workmen, $5,000; for fuel, lights, acids, chemicals, and crucibles, $2,000; and for repairs and apparatus necessary to put the mint in condition, $5,000; in all, $18,000.

Assay office at New York:

For salary of superintendent, $4,500; for assayer, $3,000; for melter and refiner, $3,000; chief clerk and principal calculator, $3,000; weighing clerk, $3,000; paying clerk, $2,200; bar clerk, $2,000; three clerks at $2,000 each; and four clerks at $1,800 each; for assistants to superintendent in assayer's room and weigh-room, $10,000; in all, $43,900.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in all these amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on a quorum on all these questions. The only chance is right here, for whatever report is made by the conference committee will be rushed through without any opportunity for the yeas and nays on any one of these propositions. I wish by our action here to instruct that committee of conference. The Senate has put office after office upon this bill, and I am not willing to run the risk of having a report brought in here agreeing to all of them and rapidly rushed through.

The amendments were all non-concurred in, no one voting in the affirmative.

The amendment numbered 103 was read, as follows:

Under the heading "Quartermaster-General" insert "one female clerk, at $30 per month."

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence, with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out "eight" and insert "six."

The amendment was agreed to; and the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate numbered 106, 107, and 108 were read, as follows:

Strike out "eight" and insert "nine;" strike out "one librarian, at $1,600;" strike out "$88,000" and insert "$87,880," so it will read:

In the office of the Surgeon-General:

One chief clerk, at $2,000; five clerks of class four; three clerks of class three; nine clerks of class two; one hundred and fifteen clerks of class one, (twenty of whom shall be temporary;) one chemist, at $1,800; one anatomist at the Army Medical Museum, at $1,600; one engineer in division of records and museum, at $1,400; one messenger, at $840; twenty-two watchmen and laborers, (six temporary,) at $720 each; in all, $87,880.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence. We stand by that recommendation unless the House shall otherwise order. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service present another view of this case, and I am willing to hear them.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senate made a mistake here. This is different from what they actually intended. A librarian is not wanted, but what is here appropriated is needed for another officer. If it be non-concurred in this can be made right in the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. On this statement I think we had better not concur.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate numbered 112 was read, as follows:

Under the heading of "Pension Office" strike out "30" and insert "45," so it will read:

For contingent expenses of the office, namely: For actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate suspected attempts at fraud, as provided by law, $45,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence, with amendments, as follows:

Strike out said amendment and insert "40;" strike out "12" and insert "10;" strike out "7" and insert "5;" strike out "24" and insert "18."

The committee in the Senate desired to use more of the contingent fund for investigating fraud on the Pension Bureau than the amount we assigned. The committee will remember hitherto this entire contingent fund has been given in a lump. This year we endeavored to separate it into parts, telling what should be used for each particular purpose. The Senate thought that we had appropriated too little for the purpose. We put it at $30,000; they propose to make it $45,000. That would increase the contingent fund. We came to the conclusion perhaps we had not set aside enough for the purpose of detecting frauds on the Pension Office. We now move to make it $40,000; and to do that we propose to cut down in other things. We propose to cut down on stationery, $2,000; on repairs, $2,000; and on other incidental expenses, $6,000, so as to make up this sum.

Mr. RANDALL. The original recommended was $30,000, which was based upon the fact that there were less than $30,000 expended last year. If my memory is correct, the House voted for $30,000. The Senate now demand $45,000, which is $17,000 more than was expended last year for the same purpose. The Committee on Appropriations, it seems, now recommend by way of compromise $40,000. I move that we insist on our former amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee recommended $45,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I know they did; and after discussion the House adhered to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARFIELD. But not by a very large vote. It was only voted down by a small majority, and the Committee on Appropriations therefore came to the conclusion, with all the facts before us, that we had better make the adjustment here.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better clinch the matter by non-concurring in the Senate amendment, so as to let the action of the House, fixing it at $30,000, stand as an instruction to the committee, for the reason that there was not so much money as $30,000 spent for like purposes last year.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in, with the amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations; there being, on a division, ayes 80, noes not counted.

The following amendment was read:

On page 60, line 1476, strike out the word "act," and insert in lieu thereof the word "paragraph;" so that it will read:

And no money appropriated by this paragraph shall be expended for advertising in newspapers published in the city of Washington other than the Patent Office Official Gazette.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment will prevent the application of this proviso to the advertisements of the other Departments.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; it should only relate to the advertisements of the Patent Office.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it would be a wise provision if it applied to all the Departments.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; you do not want the advertising of all the Departments put in the Patent Office Gazette.

Mr. RANDALL. No; I am wrong.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The following amendment was read:

Chief of division of postal stamps, $2,500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not that create a new office?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly it does.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will ask my colleague on the committee from Indiana, [Mr. TYNER,] who had charge of this matter, to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. TYNER. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying that the purpose of this amendment is simply to increase the compensation of a fourth-class clerk from $1,800 to $2,500. It will make a difference in the amount paid of just $700.

Mr. RANDALL. Then why not say what the increase is and appropriate that amount instead of appropriating $2,500?

Mr. TYNER. Because it is necessary that this officer shall be provided for.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not see in the bill any decrease in the number of fourth-class clerks.

Mr. TYNER. I will answer the gentleman from Vermont by stating that there was an omission on the part of the Committee on Appropriations in putting in only fourteen fourth-class clerks instead of fifteen. The only effect of this amendment is to increase the salary of a clerk $700.

The amendment was concurred in.

The following amendment was read:

Under the head of "contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department," strike out "6" and insert "4;" so that it will read "for gas, $4,500."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a reduction; why not concur in it?

Mr. GARFIELD. We recommend non-concurrence for the reason that the Postmaster-General informs us that, having rented an additional building, more gas will be needed, and that the appropriation has been cut down too much. The committee think it has been cut down too much.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better concur.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not care about it. If the committee choose to concur, so much the less work will there be for us in the committee of conference.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

The following amendment was read:

Under the same head insert the following:

For rent of house No. 915 E street northwest, $4,200.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have some explanation of that.

Mr. GARFIELD. It was explained in the deficiency bill. This building was rented before the end of the fiscal year, and we put into the deficiency bill an appropriation to pay the rent for the balance of the fiscal year, and this is a provision for the rent for next year. We propose to concur in it.

The amendment was concurred in.

The following amendment was read:

For chemicals and apparatus for the use of the chemical division, $1,500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say that since the committee has acted on this bill I have become satisfied that we ought to allow something for this purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better have a division on the amendment, and instruct the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to have the question settled now, and I hope the amendment will be concurred in.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not concurred in.

The following amendment was read:

For materials for the use of the microscopist, $300.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a division upon concurring in that amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 54, noes 7.

So (no further count being insisted on) the amendment was concurred in.

The following amendment was read:

Increase the appropriation for official postage-stamps for the Department of Justice from $500 to $15,000.

The committee recommended that the amendment be concurred in, with an amendment, to make it $10,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] in charge of this bill, how the appropriations for the Post-Office Department are regulated in view of this expenditure. The amount appropriated for official postage-stamps is merely so much money given to the Post-Office Department less the actual cost of printing those stamps. In the various appropriation bills we have appropriated about $1,500,000 for that purpose. How is that taken into account?

Mr. GARFIELD. As revenue; so much for the sale of stamps other than official, and so much for the sale of official postage-stamps.

Mr. HOLMAN. That makes the whole revenue of the Post-Office Department $29,000,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. Including all these amounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I admit that the only effect is to swell the appropriation, but it swells it to an extent that makes the appropriations for the Post-Office Department virtually without any limit; that is to say, we appropriated hundreds of thousands of dollars over and above what any gentleman on this floor understands to be the appropriations proper for the Post-Office Department.

Mr. GARFIELD. On the contrary, this system makes the appropriation show its full size. It even makes it show almost twice, because it appears as revenue in the post-office account. If we do not have it here, we should have to put it in a deficiency for the post-office appropriations. It is really nothing but a question of book-keeping. If we leave it out here, we should increase just by the amount we do not put in here the deficiency for the Post-Office Department. If we put it in here, it is added as so much to the revenue of the Post-Office Department. By this means a check is put on the amount of stamps used in the several Departments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know that there is objection to the mode. Of course the House made a mistake in attempting to appropriate simply the cost of making these stamps. But we are not adhering at all to the estimates of the Post-Office Department. Instead of $25,000,000, we have already appropriated nearly $30,000,000, adding in the amounts for stamps for the various Departments.

Mr. GARFIELD. Last year we appropriated very nearly $2,000,000 for official stamps, because the Departments coul'd not tell how many stamps they would use, and made their estimates in the rough and liberally. We have cut down those estimates this year.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it is very manifest that there is a margin of $200,000 or $300,000 without any limitation growing out of this very manner of making appropriations.

The recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the order of the House directing a recess to be taken at half past four be now rescinded, in order that we may finish this bill this afternoon and thus avoid a night session.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

The next amendment read was to section 2 of the bill.

The section was read, as follows

SEC. 2. That every clerk of the circuit or district court of the United States, United States marshal, or United States district attorney, shall reside permanently in the district where his official duties are to be performed, and shall give his personal attention thereto; and in case any such officer shall remove from his district, or shall fail to give personal attention to the duties of his office, except in case of sickness, such office shall de deemed vacant.

The Senate amendment was to add to the section, the following:

Provided, That in the southern district of New York said officers may reside within twenty miles of their districts.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will explain the object of this amendment. It was found that this section of the bill, as passed by the House, would rule out a very important officer in the city of New York, who resided across the river, and an exception was made to save him.

Mr. POTTER. Instead of being twenty miles, it ought to be forty.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment read was to section 3.

The section as passed by the House was as follows:

SEC. 3. That no civil officer of the Government shall hereafter receive any compensation or perquisites, directly or indirectly, from the Treasury or property of the United States beyond his salary or compensation allowed by law, or shall make any private use of such property, or of the services or labor of any person in the employment or service of the United States which service or labor is paid for by the United States: Provided, That this shall not be construed to deprive any officer of the United States of such fees as are or may be expressly provided by law in addition to the salary or compensation of such officer, or of the use of such property as may be expressly by law appropriated to the use of such officer.

The Senate propose to amend the section so that it will read as follows:

SEC. 3. That no civil officer of the Government shall hereafter receive any compensation or perquisites, directly or indirectly, from the Treasury or property of the United States beyond his salary or compensation allowed by law: Provided, That this shall not be construed to prevent the employment and payment by the Department of Justice of district attorneys as now allowed by law for the performance of services not covered by their salaries or fees.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended that so much of the Senate amendment be concurred in as adds to the section, and that the portion striking out be not concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like some explanation about this amendment. It seems to me to give a discretion to the Department of Justice to employ district attorneys and pay them.

Mr. GARFIELD. On motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] a provision was inserted by the House in the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations, which provision the Senate has stricken out. It was to prevent the employment of any person for private use whose services are paid for out of the public Treasury, or the use of any public property for private purposes. That matter was discussed very fully in the Senate, and the provision was stricken out on this ground: for example, it was said—and I refer to the report in the RECORD—that if the House provision was construed strictly, it would make it unlawful for a member of either House or of any committee of either House to use pen and ink and a sheet of paper belonging to the Government for the purpose of writing a letter home to his family, for that would be employing public property for private use. After a great deal of discussion the provision was stricken out, and the Senate has added a clause in regard to the employment of district attorneys by the Department of Justice. The Committee on Appropriations recommend that the amendment of the Senate be non-concurred in so far as it proposes to strike out any portion of the section as passed by the House, and concurred in so far as it adds to the section. For one, I think that the words proposed to be stricken out are perhaps too restrictive. I think it would lead to little sins against the letter of the law. But, on the whole, the committee thought it better not to strike out those words. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] who I am sorry is not here, was very urgent that we should non-concur in all the Senate amendments. I have stated the case to the House, and if they desire to concur in the Senate amendment they can do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the question will be put on concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Our proposition was to disagree to striking out, but to agree to what the Senate had inserted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the proposition will be put in such a form as to enable us to vote on both propositions; that is, against striking out any part of the text, and in favor of retaining the words added by the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Are we to understand that the Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence or non-concurrence?

Mr. GARFIELD. Concurrence in what the Senate added, but non-concurrence in striking out.

Mr. KASSON. I submit that we can only get at the result desired by concurring in the amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is, to restore what the Senate struck out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The Clerk read the following amendment:

Insert in section 4 the following words: "Except the second section of the act approved July 14, 1870, entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;'" so that the first clause of the section will read as follows:

That the act entitled "An act limiting the appropriation of certain moneys for the preparation, issue, and reissue of certain securities of the United States, and for other purposes," approved May 23, 1872, and all other acts and parts of acts making permanent appropriations for the expenses of the national loan, except the second section of the act approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," are hereby repealed, this repeal to take place on the 1st day of July next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to understand the effect of this amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is really no necessity for this clause which the Senate has inserted. There are two statutes, one relating to refunding the national debt, the other referring to the expenses of printing the national bonds and notes. The House in this bill repealed the law making permanent appropriations for the expenses of the national loan; but we said nothing about the law relating to the refunding of the national debt. We did not wish to bring that into the same category. The Senate, fearing that our provision might be construed in some way as repealing the law in relation to refunding the national debt, has out of abundant caution inserted this additional clause.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will allow me to suggest the propriety of non-concurrence for this reason: In the Committee on Ways and Means we have found it necessary to change the form of our bills owing to the revision of the statutes, which has done away with all the old references by chapters or dates. In view of the expected adoption of that revision by both House, we have framed our bills so that they shall stand alone without reference to other acts. I suggest, therefore, that this amendment should be non-concurred in, so that this section may be framed in the manner I have stated.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is a wise suggestion. If there is no objection I will accept it and ask the House to non-concur.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL. There are three amendments relating to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury; and as they make one group I ask that they be voted on together.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the paragraph relating to the office of the Secretary of the Treasury strike out "one clerk of loans and one clerk of currency, at $2,500," and insert "two chiefs of divisions, namely, of loans and currency, $3,000 each."

Strike out "$2,200" as the salary of two clerks and insert "$2,400."

Strike out as the footing of the paragraph "$33,933.50" and insert "$35,333.50."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in these amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say frankly that I think we ought to make some increase in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, but not nearly so much as the Senate proposes. If the currency bill should become a law in any shape it will increase the work in that office.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope then that there will be a vote of the House which shall be in the nature of instructions to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who will of course be at the head of the conference committee on the part of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course the gentleman does not mean to say that any vote of the House must be regarded as imperatively binding upon the conferees in a general conference. The Senate would not agree to a conference in which the House conferees were to be bound up in that way. Conferences must be free. Of course we are glad to have any indication of the sentiment of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have known cases where the House gave a direct instruction by resolution to a committee of conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. That can be done, of course.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the vote be taken separately on the first of these amendments. Here are two heads of divisions in that Department—the only two that are not provided for; and their labors are equal to those of any other chiefs of divisions. They have very important duties to perform, and there is no reason, so far as I know, why they should not receive the same salary and be upon the same footing as other chiefs of divisions. I would like to hear any reason why a distinction should be made against these chiefs of divisions when all the others are provided for in the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will remember that the House, on motion of the Committee on Appropriations, struck out $3,000 as the salary of these chiefs of divisions and inserted $2,500. They are now receiving $3,000 under the law.

Mr. CONGER. Does this amendment leave these two chiefs of divisions upon the same footing as the others?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will see by turning to page 17 of the bill that while the House provided for but seven chiefs of divisions in all, the Senate has increased the number to twelve.

The real issue between the House and Senate is this: Twelve chiefs of divisions at $3,000 say the Senate; seven at $2,500 say the House. We move to non-concur.

Mr. CONGER. If it leaves it as the other chiefs of divisions are, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. They are on the same level and should stand together.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The one hundred and thirtieth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out "seventeen" and insert "twenty-eight;" so it will read, "in the office of the Treasurer, twenty-eight clerks of class four."

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. MERRIAM. I am in favor, Mr. Speaker, of the largest possible reduction in every Department of the Government, whenever it can be done without danger to the interests of the public service, but when as in the present case a wholesale reduction is made, I consider it a dangerous experiment. In reference to the Treasury Department, I have made a careful examination into all of the divisions to ascertain whether it would be possible or not for the Treasurer of the United States to do the work of his office with a reduction of his force of seventy-two as proposed. I understand the committee have been influenced in their conclusions by the force employed in the Treasury Department in 1865. I will say to the House that the work in the Treasury has vastly increased, and in greater proportion than the force has been increased. General Spinner has furnished me with some facts I wish to give to the House.

In the cash division the increase since 1865 has been fourteen persons. One reason for this is the care and redemption of one hundred and twenty-four national banks in voluntary and forced liquidation, which work was not done in 1865, and the counting and redemption of notes of two thousand national banks. In the division of loans there are thirteen additional clerks. Previous to 1868 all coupons were sent to the Auditor. By order of the Secretary of the Treasury, after July, 1869, the Treasurer was directed to make up the accounts of all paid coupons and to show the loan, date, and denomination of each coupon. Then there was the funding of the five-twenties into the new loan with quarterly payment of interest instead of semi-annual as formerly. In regard to the coupons of these bonds the greatest care is necessary to be observed by the clerks in the office for this reason, when we call in bonds, whether held in Europe or here, the interest is stopped. These coupons are sometimes cut off and sent through the bankers all over the United States to the Treasury for payment, and a single mistake would cause the Government to pay that which it is not obliged to pay. Last year there were manipulated 3,772,832 coupons, amounting to $57,912,933.39. The quarterly interest is paid by check. Then the establishment of the sinking fund required additional force. I wish to quote from General Spinner's letter on this subject:

In the division of issues there have been employed six ladies borrowed from the division of printing, and paid on the roll of that division for the last eight months, and yet, with this borrowed help, to-day I am not able to receive the new money as fast as it is printed for the want of sufficient help to do the counting.

Since the great defalcations by disbursing officers a rule has been established to compel all these officers to make weekly reports to their respective chiefs. These returns are all sent to this office, and the accounts of these officers as sent here by the various assistant treasurers, designated depositaries, and of national banks acting as such depositaries, are compared with each other and the amounts and discrepancies noted and certified on each by me. These number several hundred daily, and necessitate, with the large increase of the post-office business, eight additional persons in the division of accounts.

But it is the division of redemptions that demands and has the largest increase. The work of this branch has increased enormously. Formerly there were but four different kinds of fractional currency; now there are twenty-five separate and distinct kinds, each of which requires to be assorted by themselves.

Perhaps nothing will show more conclusively the reason for the increase of employés than the difference in the number of pieces of money redeemed in this division now as compared with the number of pieces redeemed in 1866, the year after the close of the war. In the last named year the number of pieces redeemed was 62,572,820, and in the last year it had risen to the enormous number of 176,089,086; this is nearly 200 per cent. increase, and yet the increase of the female counters has been from eighty to one hundred and fifty, or less than 100 per cent.

This, like bank-work, is work that must be done at once; it cannot lie over. Then, too, it is a work that cannot be hurried. Each individual piece must be critically examined to ascertain its genuineness. If it should be attempted to do the work with less hands, the result would be that the loss by reason of passing counterfeit notes through would probably be ten times the amount saved by the reduction of the force. The result would be that the work could not be done with any kind of safety.

The amendments to your bill, as made by the Senate, cut down my present force by seven persons; your bill cuts it down sixty-nine, exclusive of the six borrowed ones.

It is possible that a man may be found who can take this office and conduct the business pertaining to it successfully with the reduction, but I am positive that it cannot be done by your humble servant,

F. E. SPINNER,
Treasurer of the United States.

If General Spinner's statements are true, and no man ever questioned his word, I should like to know how there can be any reduction of force in his office when he is now obliged, in order to perform the work of that office, to employ men and women borrowed from other Departments. It is more than a dangerous experiment; it is criminal to trifle with a public necessity, and those who do it will be held responsible by the country.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say the House must remember if the Committee on Appropriations shall find it necessary to increase any of the amounts cut down by this bill it will be mainly because the House refused to stand by it in increasing the hours of labor in the Departments. A considerable amount of reduction was made in the hope and upon the faith the House would stand by us in saying it should take at least seven hours to constitute an official day's work in the Departments.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. It is hardly fair for the gentleman to charge that upon the House, when we only recognized that it was not just to compel the women who count the small currency to work seven hours a day. It is well known they cannot continue that kind of work longer in the day than they do now.

Mr. GARFIELD. My friend has used the only argument against the seven-hour plan. The Committee on Appropriations assented to the justice of that, and were willing to put in an amendment excepting those who were employed as counters in these Departments.

I say, therefore, if we find ourselves compelled to put back any part of the force we have taken off by reduction it will be chiefly and solely on that ground; and I want to say now that I hope the House, and particularly those gentlemen who voted to strike out that section, will not come back on the Committee on Appropriations in case in the conference committee we are compelled to admit a part of this increase, and blame us for what has thus been forced upon us.

Now I admit that if the old rule of five hours work a day, for that is really all we get, is to be followed, and the House has so decreed, General Spinner cannot get along with the force as it stands in our bill. But the Senate has put it up to a far greater increase than I, for one, am willing to tolerate. It has put the force in his office up where it was before and asks us to put in almost one hundred more persons than the House provided for.

Now General Spinner, as I have already said, does not need a force greatly larger than that required in the Register's office. The Register's office counts one side of the bills and General Spinner's office the other, and they must therefore work side by side. If you give one a large force without giving the other an equal force you gain nothing by it. You have either in the one case too many or in the other too few.

Now, whatever is done in this matter, this amendment ought to be put in to adjust this force between the Register's office and General Spinner's office. I say, therefore, we ought to non-concur in all these amendments, and whatever is done when we come to conference, we ought to make some adjustment between the two.

Mr. SOUTHARD. If I understand the gentleman's statement it is that the House refused some time ago to insert a provision for seven hours' work a day. I want to know if the statutes as they stand do not fix the hours of work at eight, and whether if we had put them at seven it would not have been a decrease?

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; it is perfectly well understood that the law only requires the offices to be open. The provision as inserted in the bill required seven hours' work of clerks, and that is what the House refused to pass.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Is it under anything more than a custom of the Departments that the hours are six instead of eight?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is true it is a custom of the Departments, but the House by its action has sanctioned that custom.

Mr. SOUTHARD. What I want to know of the gentleman is, if the statute itself does not fix eight hours or ten hours; I am not sure which.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not for work. It simply says that the offices shall be open, and it has never been construed as mandatory upon the head of a Department. No Department has ever obeyed it in that sense. No head of a Department since 1835, the year when the law was passed, has ever construed it to require him to work his clerks eight hours.

Mr. SOUTHARD. It was understood by a large number of members of the House that the statute did require it, and they refused to vote for seven hours because the law fixed eight.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The law fixes eight hours now.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. We are covering a large field of debate. I did not, as the chairman suggests, vote against the seven-hour rule in the nature of instructions, but simply from the fact that a Secretary may now require from his clerks, or any part of them, just so much work as is reasonable and for the dispatch of the public business; and in the State Department they have often in times of pressure been at work until eleven o'clock at night. And so in every other Department; the Secretary in his sound discretion may require of his clerks what work is necessary.

But I rose more particularly to say that, in view of what the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] says of the inexpediency of a reduction of force in the Treasurer's office, and in view of the great confidence I have in that Treasurer, for I have known him a great many years, both officially and personally, I suggest that the Committee on Appropriations shall be left some discretion as to the amount of force that shall be allowed in that department. I therefore suggest that we agree with them in non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, but with the understanding that we do not do it in the nature of instructions against allowing any increase.

Mr. MERRIAM. I would rather test the sense of the House upon it now.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish simply to say this: that I think the only course for the House to take is that suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I will state the reason. This increase is put in the office of the Treasurer, and none is put in the Register's office, and none where the money is counted, in the Secretary's office. Those are three places where this counting has to be done, and to increase the force in only one place would not answer the purpose. This force should be distributed in the three rooms of the Department where this counting is to be done, and the only way to secure that is to non-concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. It gives me pleasure to state that I have never met any officer more faithful, upright, and intelligent than General Spinner. Yet this amendment of the Senate involves nearly sixty employés, and an increase of $63,860. I concur with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] that it ought to go to the conference committee for adjudication.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the vote of non-concurrence will be regarded by the committee of conference as an expression of the will of the House.

Mr. KELLOGG. An expression on the part of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] a question, upon the answer to which will depend my vote, and I presume the votes of many other members of this House. Will the gentleman inform us what is the opinion of the Treasurer himself? Does he desire to have this additional number of clerks or not?

Mr. GARFIELD. He thinks he ought to have them. I will say, however, that nearly all the heads of Departments and Bureaus think that their force, if not increased, at least should not be reduced at all.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say a word in that connection. I protest against the supplemental remarks of my distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] classing the Treasurer with all the other heads of Bureaus. I served in this House before the war for four years with General Spinner; most of that time I sat by his side. He was upon the Committee on Accounts. And I will say that it is utterly impossible, I might say physically impossible, certainly morally impossible, for him to state to the House or to any committee or any member of the House, that he needed a single clerk that in point of fact he did not need to carry on the business of his office economically and promptly and for the best interest of the public service. Now, if he tells us that he needs this increase in the number of clerks it is because he does need them and not because of any mere low ambition to keep up his clerical force. He knows what the public exigencies are, and he would not ask for a single clerk, of the lowest class even, that was not required to meet those exigencies. I think we should give him what he asks for.

Mr. GARFIELD. A single word. A brilliant and philosophical friend near me said, since my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] began to speak, that one of the most unfortunate things that could happen to the Government is to have a luminously honest man holding an office, because he was always sure to get all he wanted.

Mr. MAYNARD. And he ought to have it.

Mr. MERRIAM. And it is equally unfortunate to have elections pending this fall in some of the districts of members here.

Mr. GARFIELD. If anything of that sort is true of anybody it is doubtless true of General Spinner. I concur in all the gentleman has said about his honesty. But because he is honest this House ought not to give up its control over the various offices in the Departments and the number of clerks to be employed in them.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have not said he was only honest. He is also intelligent and well informed, and it is that enlightened judgment that we are bound to respect.

The amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in upon a division, ayes 7, noes not counted.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that all the amendments of the Senate in relation to the Treasurer's office be non-concurred in by a single vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

The amendments of the Senate were accordingly non-concurred in.

The last amendments of the Senate were to section 5 of the bill.

The section as passed by the House was as follows:

SEC. 5. That from and after the passage of this act, and on the 1st day of July of each year hereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to river and harbor appropriations, or light-house appropriations, or public buildings, the appropriations for which shall only lapse according to the provisions of existing laws.

The Senate propose to amend the section to read as follows:

SEC. 5. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1875, and of each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to any unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the act approved December 21, 1871, for expenses that may be incurred under articles 1 to 9 of the treaty with Great Britain concluded May 8, 1871, which balance the act approved March 3, 1873, authorized to be expended to enable the President to fulfill the stipulations contained in the twentieth, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth articles of said treaty: And provided further, That this section shall not operate to prevent the fulfillment of contracts existing at the date of the passage of this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the beginning of each session, report to Congress any balances of appropriations for specific objects affected by this section that may need to be reappropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend that the amendments of the Senate to the first part of the section, before the words "the Secretary of the Treasury," be concurred in with an amendment changing "1875" to "1874;" also that the amendment to the last part of the section be concurred in with an amendment to insert after the words "shall at the beginning of each session report to Congress" the words "in connection with his annual estimates of appropriations."

Mr. BECK. I hope the amendment of the Senate to section 5 of this bill, striking out 1874 and inserting 1875, will not be concurred in by the House. This is the same old matter to which I have called attention time and again, and I want to call the attention of the House to it once more, though I fear it will do no good. There is a large sum of money in the Treasury of unexpended balances of appropriations, amounting at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1871, to over $50,000,000. After I had made a good deal of complaint about it, on the 12th of March last this House passed a resolution which came from the Committee on Appropriations reluctantly, but it had to come.

Mr. GARFIELD. What does the gentleman mean by saying "reluctantly?"

Mr. BECK. I mean that it was withheld for months, and until I had called the matter up in the House three different times.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] said "Committee on Ways and Means."

Mr. GARFIELD. He said "Committee on Appropriations."

Mr. BECK. Yes, I did say "Committee on Appropriations."

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Kentucky was never more mistaken historically than he is about this matter.

Mr. BECK. Well, I will say then that the report came slowly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I appeal to the democratic members of the Committee on Appropriations to say whether that committee behaved either with reluctance or neglect in reporting on this subject. Without knowing at all what my friend from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] may remember about the matter, I appeal to him.

Mr. MARSHALL. I will state, Mr Speaker, that I believe the Committee on Appropriations acted on this subject promptly when it was called to their attention. It was not brought before them immediately; but as soon as their attention was called to it, on my motion, the committee acted promptly.

Mr. HANCOCK. It was acted on at the first meeting of the committee after their attention was called to it.

Mr. BECK. All I have to say is that I introduced this proposition at an early day of the session—as early as January. The records will show that. It was then referred to the Committee on Appropriations and lay there, though it should have been passed promptly, until I made a speech on the 7th of March, in which I showed that the Departments were illegally continuing to draw this money. Even that did not bring the report. Then on the 10th of March, as the RECORD will show, I made another speech, in which I called attention in detail to this matter. It never was reported until after both those speeches had been made, and when after the lapse of two months it had been developed that the Secretary and his associates were still drawing money in this way out of the Treasury. Therefore I say that the action of the Committee on Appropriations came slowly. I do not know which the committee first looked at; of course I could not know that. When I made my speech on the 10th of March, and made the case so plain that action could not be postponed any longer, then the proposition was reported, and reported promptly. The committee in reporting the resolution that the Secretary should state how much had been drawn in this way, added this clause: "and the purposes to which the money so drawn has been applied, so far as the records in his Department exhibit said purposes." That part of the resolution the Secretary of the Treasury has never yet answered; but he has shown this state of facts: that while only $1,030,000 had been drawn from those old balances at the time when I first called attention to the matter, as exhibited in his Book of Estimates, yet by the 1st of April the different Department officials had succeeded in drawing out $4,282,928.23, although we had appropriated $323,000,000 for the service of the current fiscal year; and he never yet has told us for what purposes this money was drawn. How much is gone by this time no man can tell. Now, after the House has inserted a provision requiring those balances to be covered into the Treasury from and after the passage of this act, and regularly each year thereafter, beginning July 1, 1874, the Senate amends by striking out "from and after the passage of this act," and also by striking out "from the 1st day of July, 1874," and they make the provision operate only from and after the 1st day of July, 1875, giving the Department still another year to draw upon those balances; and so far as appears by the printed report, the Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no.

Mr. RANDALL. They recommend non-concurrence in the one hundred and seventy-fifth amendment.

Mr. BECK. It ought to be non-concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will allow me to state briefly the fact in regard to this matter, so that he may not blunder any longer, for it is painful to me, on his account, to see him fall into such inaccuracies.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in striking out the words "the passage of this act and on;" for we are so near the end of the fiscal year that there would be no sense in requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to turn in the balances on the 22d of June next (supposing this bill to become a law about the time we adjourn,) and then again on the 1st of July following. But they also recommend concurrence in the one hundred and forty-sixth amendment, with an amendment striking out "5" and inserting "4," so that it will read "from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, and of each year thereafter." That is what we recommend. There is our "negligence," and there is the gentleman's discovery.

Mr. TREMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this amendment of the Senate will be concurred in. It will be observed that the Senate proposes to strike out the clause inserted by the House in regard to appropriations for public buildings, and for rivers and harbors.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not come to that yet.

Mr. TREMAIN. The gentleman will find that it is a part of this general proposition. The Committee on Appropriations propose to concur in striking out that provision, but they also propose to change the Senate amendment, which postpones the operation of this new section till July 1, 1875. Our committee propose to alter that, so as to make it July 1, 1874. A moment's consideration will, I think, show that this proposed action is wrong. The Senate amendment which the committee propose to adopt provides that "the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the beginning of each session, report to Congress any balances of appropriations for specific objects affected by this section that may need to be reappropriated."

Now that is very well; if you postpone its operation till July 1, 1875, no harm is done. But if you fix July 1, 1874, as the date, the Secretary of the Treasury will have no opportunity to report these necessary appropriations which ought not to lapse. By striking out our own amendment in regard to rivers and harbors and public buildings, and by adopting a portion of the Senate amendment and striking out the balance, you cover these necessary appropriations into the Treasury at the end of two years from the time they were made, without leaving to the Secretary of the Treasury any opportunity to report a recommendation that they be reappropriated. I think we ought to let the Senate amendments stand in full, which will postpone the operation of the section till July 1, 1875.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 60.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The Clerk read the amendment numbered 147, as follows:

Strike out "this provision shall not apply to river and harbor appropriations, or light-house appropriations, or public buildings, the appropriations for which shall only lapse according to the provisions of existing laws," and in lieu thereof insert: This provision shall not apply to any unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the act approved December 21, 1871, for expenses that may be incurred under articles 1 to 9 of the treaty with Great Britain, concluded May 8, 1871, which balance the act approved March 3, 1873, authorized to be expended to enable the President to fulfill the stipulations contained in the twentieth, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth articles of said treaty: And provided further, That this section shall not operate to prevent the fulfillment of contracts existing at the date of the passage of this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the beginning of each session, report to Congress any balances of appropriations for specific objects affected by this section that may need to be re-appropriated.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee recommend concurrence in that amendment, with an amendment to insert after the word "Congress" these words:

In connection with his annual estimates of appropriation.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations inserting the clause they propose, but I do object to striking out what the House, by an almost unanimous vote, put in here, and which every man in this House, representing any interest in his own State wherever there is a river, wherever there is a harbor which is now receiving, or shall receive any appropriation, is interested in preserving. I ask there may be such a division that the clause inserted by the House, which it is proposed to strike out, shall remain in the bill, and the other can then properly come in as an addition by inserting the conjunction "and."

Gentlemen know very well that appropriations made for rivers and harbors, made in the middle of summer as they frequently have been, and as they will be made this year along in June, and as they have been in former years in July, cannot be used for the current year, and if the appropriation cannot go over to the next year, and the unexpended balances of appropriation cannot stand through one, two, or three years, but are covered back into the Treasury, then the work will have to stop. There never has been a provision that appropriations for rivers and harbors and for public buildings shall be covered into the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year, because they have not been made for the fiscal year, but to carry on work independent of time, and to be used while the work is being carried on. They have been appropriated for after careful discussion by every member of the House. They have been passed not only by committees of the House on reports of the engineers, but by the concurrence of the House, and in most cases by a very large majority of the House.

Now, I say to gentlemen of this House if they agree with the Senate in striking out this amendment, it will throw out all the appropriations made for river and harbor improvements in this country. Old members will remember the Senate has year by year, in passing our appropriation bills, inserted a clause requiring all unexpended balances of appropriations to be covered back into the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year, and year by year this House has stricken out that amendment of the Senate, as I trust they will this year and every year so long as the Government shall undertake to make appropriations for works done generally and not for works to be done in a single fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons which I might adduce why this amendment should be retained, but it has been so recently discussed that I shall trench no further upon the time of the House. I move to concur, with the exception of striking out the proviso which was inserted by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. Certainly; I move to amend so as to retain the provision originally inserted by the House.

Mr. TREMAIN. I wish to be heard on that. My friend from Michigan has spoken in regard to rivers and harbors.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman proposes to speak in regard to public buildings.

Mr. TREMAIN. Certainly; I desire particularly to call the attention of the House to the provision in regard to public buildings.

Mr. CONGER. That is in the same clause.

Mr. TREMAIN. I so understand. The House cannot fail to see on an examination the great injury which would result from striking out the clause adopted by this House in regard to our public buildings all over this country, and I know particularly how it is in Albany. Appropriations were made more than two years ago. Every effort has been made that could be in order to have these buildings constructed; but as yet no work has been done. The two years will expire the 1st of July, and they have not been able to comply with the other provision of the section in regard to making contracts.

Now, I received a letter yesterday informing me that on Tuesday next a deed is to be brought to this city from the city of Albany, for the purpose of handing over to the Government the title to a site for which the city of Albany has paid $150,000, and yet there is no valid contract made; there is a mere understanding with the Secretary, and consequently if this provision is not incorporated in the bill, on the 1st of July the whole appropriation will lapse into the Treasury.

Now, is that right? Is there any justice or principle in it? The House, by an overwhelming majority, put this in the bill. You have provided that hereafter at the commencement of the session the Secretary shall recommend what objects are of sufficient importance to require new appropriations. But he has had no chance to make a report in regard to this public building, because your law was not then in operation. The principle on which he has acted, and on which we have acted, is that where any part of an appropriation had been drawn it prevented the lapsing of the appropriation itself, and in this case he had drawn a few thousand dollars to pay the expenses of having a site condemned. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan to the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am sorry to detain the House a moment longer. I was willing to let this matter be voted on, after the speech of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] But I wish to call the attention of the House to the significance of the point made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN.] It is simply this, that we cannot trust Congress; that if money once appropriated, and for two years unused, goes back into the Treasury, we are afraid Congress will not reappropriate it, and therefore we do not want it to lapse. Congress makes an appropriation; two years pass, and it has not been used. Is not that good prima facie evidence that it ought not to be used, that it is not necessary? Is it not good prima facie evidence that it need not have been appropriated for two years, and is it not fair to say that after two years Congress ought to decide the question over again whether the money had better be appropriated or not?

Why, the Constitution of the United States provides that you cannot make an appropriation for the Army beyond two years. Without a word of law every appropriation in relation to the Army must necessarily be limited to two years. Why? Because the framers of the Constitution wanted the public purse in the hands of Congress, and that Congress should act upon appropriations as an original question at least once in two years.

Well, now, as a matter of wisdom it has been determined that we ought not to allow these large accumulations of balances. Why the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] in 1870 found that in a single Bureau of this Government there were about $17,000,000 of unexpended balances that had been accumulating year by year and could be used for any and for all purposes. And now, as a matter of safe, prudent, careful, and business management of the great trust of the public Treasury, we provide here that once in two years the books shall be cleared up, a balance shall be struck, and all the sweepings shall be turned back into the Treasury. And in order to protect just such cases as the gentleman from New York represents we provide that they shall report year by year all the balances that are thus to be covered in.

Mr. TREMAIN. How can he report for this year?

Mr. GARFIELD. He can report next fall.

Mr. TREMAIN. And meanwhile we want to put up our building.

Mr. GARFIELD. The appropriation cannot be used except by a construction that is regarded by many of the best lawyers in the House as utterly strained and twisted. Now we ought not to go upon narrow, ambiguous, and uncertain constructions of law. When we come together next winter we shall add a column to the Book of Estimates; a column which says for this particular purpose there remains a balance, which if you want to reappropriate you can do it, of $100,000 or $50,000 or whatever the sum may be. Now that makes it square work. It is a plain business-like method of doing business and caring for the public money without regard to any local interest. I would be as glad to indulge the gentleman from New York as any other gentleman; but I think it is a matter of good statesmanship to pass this amendment.

[Loud cries of "Vote." "Vote."]

Mr. CONGER rose.

[Renewed cries of "Vote." "Vote."]

Mr. CONGER. When gentlemen get through calling "Vote," "vote,"

I will go on with my remarks. I can wait a reasonable length of time. The remarks of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, are very good. They sound well and read well all over the country, in his own district and everywhere else. His speech was high-toned and beautiful; and we have provided for every single case in this provision, and nobody opposes it. Then what is the use of a great speech on this subject?

Mr. GARFIELD. It never applied to light-houses.

Mr. CONGER. Nobody opposes at all these guards thrown around the Treasury. Why does the gentleman say it is like an army appropriation bill? Is the reason that you cannot appropriate money for the Army, anything connected with its being used, or left in the Treasury? No, sir; a higher and stronger reason exists, that a great fund shall not be accumulated for the Army to be under the control of the President. Does not the gentleman know that?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have heard of it.

Mr. CONGER. Yes; the gentleman must have heard of it. One word more. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I know my friends want to vote, and I have no doubt they will vote on my side and take this way to let me know it. The river and harbor appropriations, the light-house appropriations, the appropriations for public buildings, are not made for the fiscal year.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is mistaken about light-houses. Appropriations for light-houses are always in the miscellaneous appropriation bill, and that is confined to the fiscal year. And the appropriations for public buildings are also confined to the fiscal year, for they are in the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. They have not been so made heretofore. The appropriation for each building has been made in a special bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; only appropriations for rivers and harbors have been made in a special bill.

Mr. CONGER. I want to say this: According to this section, as the Committee on Appropriations propose to amend it, on the 1st of July next, about a month from now, all unexpended balances of appropriations will be covered into the Treasury. Now there are unexpended many appropriations for the improvement of the Ohio, Mississippi, Tennessee, and other rivers, the removal of the Red River raft, and hundreds of harbors and rivers I could speak of. And under this provision, on the 1st of July, all these balances must go into the Treasury.

Mr. MAYNARD. And allow me to suggest that the appropriations for the improvement of the navigation of many rivers can be expended properly only at certain seasons of the year, when the streams are low and the channels are accessible.

The question on the amendment moved by Mr. CONGER was then taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 101, noes 45.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being only 10 in the affirmative.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was then concurred in.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest that the word "and" should be inserted after the words "according to the provisions of existing laws," and before the words "this provision shall not apply to any unexpended balance," &c.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask consent to go back to an amendment of the Senate, No. 116, in relation to the Post-Office Department. I was directed by the Committee on Appropriations to recommend concurrence in that amendment, with an amendment to make it read as follows:

Chief of division of postal stamps and statistician, $2,500 each.

I omitted to move concurrence with that amendment when the Senate amendment No. 116 was reached.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object. I believe the House non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the House request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed the following as the conferees on the part of the House:

Mr. GARFIELD of Ohio, Mr. KELLOGG of Connecticut, and Mr. RANDALL of Pennsylvania.

LEAVES TO PRINT.

Mr. READ asked and obtained consent to have printed in the RECORD as a portion of the debates of the House some remarks he had prepared on the civil-rights bill.

Mr. McCORMICK asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD as a portion of the debates of the House some remarks he had prepared upon the bill for the reduction of the Army.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back some papers improperly referred to that committee, and move that they be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONGER. I shall have to object. I want to begin on my unfinished business in the morning hour. The gentleman has taken all the afternoon with his business, and I cannot yield to him any longer.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I must move that the House now adjourn.

SHOSHONE RESERVATION IN WYOMING TERRITORY.

Mr. SHANKS. I give notice that on Monday next, June 1, 1874, I shall move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of House bill No. 2104, "A bill to confirm an agreement made with the Shoshone Indians (eastern band) for the south part of their reservation in Wyoming Territory," and shall move to suspend the rules and pass the said bill.

MODE OF CALLING THE ROLL.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the rules be so amended that the roll shall be called by States, taking the States alphabetically, and that only the surnames of members shall be called, except in the case of duplicate names, when the Christian name shall be added.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. POLAND. The Senate has declined to concur in the resolution of the House in regard to the enrollment of the several bills relative to the revised statutes. I ask that a committee of conference be requested upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon that subject.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER announced the following members as the conferees on the part of the House: Mr. POLAND of Vermont, Mr. E. R. HOAR of Massachusetts, and Mr. KNAPP of Illinois.

STENOGRAPHERS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to refer the following proposed amendment of the rules to the Committee on Rules:

That the appointment and removal of the stenographers employed for the committees of the House of Representatives shall be vested in the Clerk of the House.

No objection was made.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3535) relating to telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Ann Crane; and

A bill (H. R. No. 735) to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have been totally disabled.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 196) granting a pension to Peter J. Cratzer;

A bill (H. R. No. 240) granting a pension to John C. Farnam;

A bill (H. R. No. 551) granting a pension to Alfred Bolder;

A bill (H. R. No. 1228) granting a pension to Mary Storrs;

A bill (H. R. No. 1335) granting a pension to Gaudaloupe Torres;

A bill (H. R. No. 1414) granting a pension to Susan Bennett;

A bill (H. R. No. 1439) granting a pension to John Folger;

A bill (H. R. No. 1719) granting a pension to Ezra H. Foster;

A bill (H. R. No. 1843) granting a pension to Lucinda Jones, widow of Thompson M. Jones, late a private of Company G, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1832) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hackleman;

A bill (H. R. No. 1866) granting a pension to Dennis McCarthy, a soldier of the Mexican war;

A bill (H. R. No. 1907) granting a pension to Henry B. Havens, late a private of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1949) granting a pension to Ann M. Brackett;

A bill (H. R. No. 2116) granting a pension to Magdalena Docks;

A bill (H. R. No. 2214) granting a pension to Ann Humphreys, of Philadelphia;

A bill (H. R. No. 2217) granting a pension to Henry Buckner, late a private of Company F, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2220) granting a pension to Andrew J. Baldwin;

A bill (H. R. No. 2353) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Cummings;

A bill (H. R. No. 2669) granting a pension to Deborah A. Swan;

A bill (H. R. No. 2672) granting a pension to Mary A. S. Loomis;

A bill (H. R. No. 2676) granting a pension to Thomas McKinster;

A bill (H. R. No. 2678) granting a pension to Charles Herbert;

A bill (H. R. No. 2790) granting a pension to Nancy Abbott;

A bill (H. R. No. 2792) granting a pension to Llewellyn Bell;

A bill (H. R. No. 2899) granting a pension to Harriette A. Woodruff;

A bill (H. R. No. 2925) granting a pension to Dorothea Irons, mother of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2452) to equalize pensions in certain cases.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 533) granting a pension to Uriah W. Briggs;

A bill (S. No. 615) to increase the pension of Mrs. Harriet W. Sum ner, widow of Major-General Edwin V. Sumner, who died March 21, 1863, while in command of the Department of the West;

A bill (S. No. 658) granting a pension to Martin V. Jackson;

A bill (S. No. 690) granting a pension to Thomas Smith;

A bill (S. No. 767) granting a pension to Andrew J. Lasby;

A bill (S. No. 768) granting a pension to John S. Long;

A bill (S. No. 814) granting a pension to Ebenezer W. Brady;

A bill (S. No. 874) granting back pension to John Colahan;

A bill (S. No. 571) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch, and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 763) to exempt military bounty-land warrants and the lands obtained thereby from sale on execution by virtue of any order or decree of courts.

LOUIS C. SARTORI.

Mr. PURMAN. I ask leave to report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for passage now, a bill to restore Commodore Louis C. Sartori to his original position on the Navy Register.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

ROLLIN WHITE.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that on the bill relative to the patent of Rollin White, now pending in the morning hour upon the report of the Committee on Patents, the previous question may be considered as operating.

Mr. RANDALL and others objected.

BENEDICT & BENEDICT.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Appropriations papers in the case of Benedict & Benedict, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

OPPRESSION OF CHINESE EMIGRANTS.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption the following resolution:

Whereas it is alleged that great outrages are perpetrated upon Chinese desiring to leave San Francisco for China by the steamship companies requiring the exhibition of a permit from "The Six Chinese Companies," and for which permit the payment of a toll or tax is charged, and its payment enforced through the agency of said steamship companies: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the truth of the matter so alleged, and to ascertain what remedy, if any, should be provided against such practices, and report to this House by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object. There is so much confusion that we cannot transact business intelligently.

NELSON GREEN.

Mr. BRADLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3536) for the relief of Nelson Green; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE P. GERRISH.

Mr. SMALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Caroline P. Gerrish, asking a pension.

GREAT SALT LAKE AND COLORADO RIVER RAILWAY.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Public Lands a bill (H. R. No. 3537) to incorporate the Great Salt Lake and Colorado River Railway Company, and to grant to said company a right of way through the public lands; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorial was presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. SWANN: The memorial of the mayor and city council of Baltimore, Maryland, with accompanying documents, asking that certain taxes erroneously paid by said city be refunded from the Treasury, to the Committee on Claims.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 1, 1874.

The Senate met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD of Ohio, Mr. STEPHEN W. KELLOGG of Connecticut, and Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution of the House of Representatives in regard to the enrollment of the bills Nos. 1215, 2879, and 3349, relating to the revised statutes, and had appointed Mr. LUKE P. POLAND of Vermont, Mr. E. R. HOAR of Massachusetts, and Mr. ROBERT M. KNAPP of Illinois, managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2546) to provide for the gradual reduction of the Army of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3534) to change the times of holding the circuit and district courts at the city of Evansville.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CLAYTON presented the memorial of the executive committee of the State Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry of the State of Arkansas, praying for an appropriation to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the memorial of the national agricultural congress held at Atlanta, Georgia, on the 13th, 14th, and 15th of May. As it is not very long, I will take the liberty of reading it:

MEMORIAL OF THE NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL CONGRESS.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, appointed a special committee to lay before the Congress of the United States the action had by the national agricultural congress, held at Atlanta, Georgia, on the 13th, 14th, and 15th days of May, 1874, on the subject of transportation, respectfully submit the following as a part of the proceedings of that congress, and earnestly solicit in their behalf your favorable consideration of the views therein set forth.

HENRY E. PEYTON, (Chairman,) of Virginia.
A. W. BISHOP, of Arkansas.
J. R. DODGE, of District of Columbia.
E. W. WEST, of Illinois.
C. W. GREENE, of Indiana.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

Whereas it is evident that cheap transportation of the commodities of a country is a necessity of agricultural prosperity and national development; that the agriculture of the interior of our country is now paralyzed for want of facilities for transportation of its products to the sea-board; that while we recognize the value of railroads and the necessity of further railway extension, we deem the cost of transporting the crude products of the field, the forest, and the mine so disproportionate to the cost of water carriage as to render imperative the duty of Congress to improve the navigation of the rivers of the interior, and connect them with the ocean by artificial water-ways, thus giving to the Mississippi Valley continuous lines of water transit to the sea-board; and that the railway system has engendered monopoly and unjust discrimination, the evils of which can only be corrected by competition of water lines under Government control: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the national agricultural congress. That it is the duty of the national Government, which has so long and so liberally fostered foreign commerce, to enter at once upon the work of constructing a system of water-ways adequate to the present and prospective wants of inland transportation, and to continue it by annual installments of aid to full completion, until unrestricted channels of trade shall be opened, not only through the entire length of the Mississippi, but connecting the great river with the Atlantic Ocean by way of the lakes, by the Ohio, Kanawha, and James, and by the Tennessee and Savannah Rivers.

Resolved, That this convention consider appropriations by Congress for such a system wise national investments, which will at no distant day repay the Government by increased revenues created by enhanced production and developed wealth of the country.

RESOLUTIONS ACCOMPANYING THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

Resolved, That this congress believes it within the power of the people of the United States to reform the corporate transportation systems by the same agencies which created them, i. e., by State legislation, closely and immediately controlled by public opinion, and through the co-operation and joint action of the several commissioners, aided by the enlightened judgment of railway ow ners and operators themselves.

Resolved, That we oppose any legislation under the plea of regulating commerce between the States which shall interfere w ith or abridge the authority heretofore exercised by the States over roads entirely within or passing out of its borders.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA, May 15, 1874

This will certify that the foregoing memorial was favorably reported and adopted at the session of the national agricultural congress held here; and further, that Messrs. Colonel Henry E. Peyton of Virginia, General A. W. Bishop of Arkansas, J. R. Dodge of District of Columbia, E. W. West of Illinois, and Charles W. Greene of Indiana, were appointed a committee to present the same to the Congress of the United States.

By authority:

CHAS. W. GREENE,
Secretary.

This convention was composed of leading agriculturists and others, representing the labor interests of the country from nearly all the States of the Union. I move that the memorial be referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I present the petition of Amos Hunt and other citizens of the District of Columbia, asking for the repeal of certain acts of Congress regulating the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. These petitioners ask that their petition may be referred to the Committee on Investigation into the Affairs of the District; but I do not suppose that committee would probably have jurisdiction to consider the matter. I move, therefore, that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY presented a memorial of Indian delegates from the Indian Territory, protesting against the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senate to House bill No. 2343, providing for the appointment of a superintendent of schools in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LEWIS presented the petition of C. L. Stevenson, a citizen of Virginia, praying the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented two petitions of citizens of the United States, praying the repeal of the charter granted by Congress to the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia, and the enactment of laws making the appointment to office of persons bound by oaths of secret organizations unlawful, and according the right of peremptory challenge of jurors who are members of secret societies, and for a law making a change of venue allowable where the presiding officer of the court is a member of such society; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER LEVEES.

Mr. ALCORN. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill providing for the appointment of a board of engineers to examine and report at the next session of Congress upon the subject of the levees of the Mississippi River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is not yet concluded; and a motion to take up a bill is not now in order.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, suggesting objections to the passage of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 101) construing the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution amendatory of 'joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army, approved July 26, 1866,' approved July 11, 1870;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 820) to establish a Bureau of Internal Commerce, reported it with amendments.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 584) providing for the permanent location of the southern terminus of the Oregon Central Railroad, and to amend the act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville in the State of Oregon," approved May 4, 1870, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1305) granting a pension to E. Caroline Webster, widow of Lucius H. Webster, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2221) granting a pension to Mary B. Triplett, guardian of the minor heirs of John A. Tomlinson, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3005) for the relief of the heirs of Mary B. Belfield, of Virginia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 104) for the relief of James Coats, of Jackson, Mississippi, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2997) for the relief of George A. Schreiner, have had the same under consideration and have directed me to report it back adversely and to recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope that bill will be permitted to go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jearum Atkins, praying to be allowed a reasonable sum for the use of his patent by the Government, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys, praying damages for occupation of and damage to her property in Lexington, Kentucky, by the military authorities of the United States, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 878) for the relief of Rosa Vertner Jeffreys.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3027) to remove the disabilities of Van Ranselear Morgan, Thomas M. Jones, and Charles M. Fauntleroy, of Virginia, and of A. S. Taylor, of Maryland, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3086) to remove the political disabilities of George E. Pickett, of Virginia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3172) to relieve Sardine G. Stone, of Alabama, of political disabilities, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3252) to remove the political disabilities of George N. Hollins, of Maryland, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3253) to remove the political disabilities of Richard T. Allison, of Maryland, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3406) to relieve Joseph Wheeler, of Lawrence County, in the State of Alabama, from all legal and political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3408) to relieve the political disabilities of L. L. Lomax of Virginia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3417) to relieve Thomas Claiborne, of Tennessee, of political disabilities imposed upon him by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 755) to relieve James Jackson, of Georgia, of his political disabilities, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 764) to remove the political disabilities of Henry Heth, of Virginia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 823) to remove the political disabilities of John Forsyth, of Alabama, reported it without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3091) to release J. W. Bennett from political disabilities, to report it favorably with an amendment. I will state that I do not return with this bill a petition for the removal of the disabilities of Mr. Bennett for the reason that the petition has been mislaid; but I am satisfied there was a proper petition, and so I report the bill, without the petition, favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3254) to relieve the persons therein named of their political disabilities, to report it back with an amendment. The bill as it passed the House contained the name, among others, of A. W. Stark. The committee are unable to find that there is any petition by Mr. Stark. We therefore report an amendment striking his name out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 781) for the relief of James M. Pugh, to report it favorably with an amendment. The name should be James L. Pugh, and both the title and body of the bill should be amended in that respect.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2891) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa Eldis, of Sandusky, Ohio, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2349) for the relief of Burke & Kunkel, have directed me to report it back to the Senate without recommendation, and ask that it be placed on the Calendar. They have also directed me to submit a report of the facts of the case for the information of the Senate, which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print five thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections touching an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in regard to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, to report back the motion without amendment, and ask its present consideration. The cost is only $100.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 713) making additions to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," reported it with an amendment.

B. W. HARRIS.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of B. W. Harris, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Massachusetts, to report it back with an amendment, and ask for its present consideration. It is a small matter.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle the accounts of B. W. Harris, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Massachusetts; and, on evidence satisfactory to the Government being produced by him of the loss by the Boston fire of November 9 and 10, 1872, of moneys in his hands, the accounting officers are further directed to audit and allow such sum or sums in the settlement of the collector's accounts.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was to insert in line 11, after the word "sums," the words "not to exceed $346.53."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN BRANCH BRIDGE.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 758) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and of a causeway across the Anacostia, or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge, to report it back and recommend its passage with the amendment proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia. This bill was not referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at any suggestion of mine, and the only inquiry the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have felt it proper to make was in relation to whether there was any necessity for a draw-bridge or a pivot-bridge upon the ground that there might be some commerce above the bridge requiring an open draw; but upon inquiry it is ascertained that the channel is now all filled up above this point so that there is no commerce above the bridge of any sort of consequence, and a draw is entirely unnecessary. Therefore the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds report back the bill and recommend its passage precisely as it was reported in the first place by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LEWIS. I would ask that that bill be put on its passage at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed across the Anacostia River, at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge, in the District of Columbia, a substantial iron and masonry bridge and causeway; and the sum of $146,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of said bridge: Provided, That the said Secretary shall construct a bridge upon such plan as shall cost no more than the amount herein appropriated: And provided also, That the said bridge shall be so constructed as not to interfere with the usual navigation above said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS HUGHES.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Hughes, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report the bill. I propose to appeal to the Senate. This bill passed the Senate at the last session of Congress and was reported favorably in the House of Representatives. It only involves about $200; and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

By unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 875) for the relief of Thomas Hughes was read three times, and passed. It directs the accounting officers of the proper Department to settle and pay to the late Lieutenant Thomas Hughes, regimental quartermaster of the Twenty-eighth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, who was mustered out of service nominally on the 1st day of June, 1865, by General Order No. 82, current series, War Department, and who actually performed service under the order of Colonel Bonneville, commandant at Benton Barracks, until the 8th of July, 1865, his full pay and perquisites for all the time he actually served, whether he was legally bound to perform such service or not.

NAME OF A SCHOONER.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3407) to change the name of the schooner Jacob Faithful to Eyvor, to report it back without amendment; and I ask that it be considered at the present time.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE COPYRIGHT LAW.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The Committee on Patents have instructed me to report a bill; and to ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. No. 876) to amend the law relating to patents, trademarks, and copyrights, was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that no person shall maintain an action for the infringement of his copyright unless he shall give notice thereof by inserting in the several copies of every edition published, on the title-page or the page immediately following if it be a book, or if a map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, drawing, engraving, photograph, chromo, statue, model, or design intended to be perfected and completed as a work of the fine arts, by describing upon some visible portion thereof or of the substance of which the same shall be mounted the following words: "Entered according to act of Congress in the year ——, by A B, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington," or at his option the word "copyright," together with the year the copyright was entered and the name of the party by whom it was taken out.

Section 2 provides that for recording and certifying any instrument of writing for the assignment of copyright, the Librarian of Congress shall receive from the person to whom the service is rendered one dollar, and for every copy of an assignment one dollar, the fee to cover in either case a certificate of the record under the seal of the Librarian of Congress; and all fees so received are to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Section 3 provides that in the construction of the act the words "engraving," "cut," and "print" shall be applied only to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts; but no prints of labels designed to be used for any other article of manufacture shall be entered under the copyright law, but may be registered in the Patent-Office; and the Commissioner of Patents is charged with the supervision and control of the entry or registry of such prints of labels in conformity to the regulations provided by law as to copyrights of prints, except that there shall be paid for recording the title of any print or label not a trade-mark three dollars, which shall cover the expense of furnishing a copy of the records under the seal of the Commissioner of Patents to the party entering the same.

These provisions are to take effect on and after the 1st day of August, 1874.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire what the effect of this law will be upon the editions of works already published and which may not be sold until after this act takes effect and may never again be published by the proprietor?

Mr. WADLEIGH. I will explain in a word the provisions of this bill. I will say to begin with that it is reported by the committee at the request of the Librarian of Congress to obviate some very serious inconveniences affecting the mode in which business has been done in his office.

The first section simply provides that instead of putting upon works copyrighted "entered according to act of Congress in the year —— by A B, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington," the words "copyrighted 18— by A B," may be used. That is to obviate the objection made by parties who procure copyrights for small photographs that the quantity of print which they are obliged to put upon them operates to deface them, and they desire that there may be some provision so that the words to be printed upon the photograph or picture copyrighted may be less in number.

The second section provides that for recording instruments in the Librarian's office there shall be paid one dollar for each instrument so recorded instead of fifteen cents for every hundred words, to obviate the necessity of counting the words in the instruments which are there copied. To this, of course, there can be no objection.

The third section provides that labels of this kind which I show to the Senate, [exhibiting a label,] printed by printers and sold to the trade, which are not trade-marks, shall be sent to the Patent Office and there recorded instead of being sent to the Library of Congress, they having nothing to do with works of art and having no place for them in the Library of Congress.

That is all there is of the bill. The Librarian is very anxious that it should pass at this session, as he has experienced much inconvenience from the present condition of things.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator does not answer the question I put, how the proprietors of works now published are left as to the enforcement of their legal rights.

Mr. WADLEIGH. It has no effect upon them whatever. It only applies to what shall occur hereafter.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to hear that part of the bill again read. I do not so understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What section does the Senator refer to?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The first section.

The Chief Clerk read the first section.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH A. TIMMONS.

Mr. PRATT. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3022) granting a pension to Sarah A. Timmons, have directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Timmons, widow of Stephen D. Timmons, late a private in Company G, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUGUSTUS L. YAEGER.

Mr. PRATT. I notice upon the Calendar this morning two private pension bills that appear not to have been acted upon on Friday. They are marked upon my Calendar of last week as having passed the Senate, and there may be some mistake about it. I will inquire of the Chair whether House bill No. 1791, granting a pension to Augustus L. Yaeger, has passed? It appears on the Calendar this morning. I supposed it was passed on Friday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that that bill did not pass on Friday.

Mr. PRATT. Then I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1791) granting a pension to Augustus L. Yaeger. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Augustus L. Yaeger, late a sergeant in Company H, Two hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, who became blind from exposure and disease contracted in the service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIVANNA INGRAHAM.

Mr. PRATT. I notice that there is one other pension bill that was omitted on Friday last. It is Senate bill No. 536, granting a pension to Livanna Ingraham. I ask the Senate to consider it at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Livanna Ingraham, of Lowell, Kent County, Michigan, mother of Douglass Ingraham, late a private in Company F, Third Regiment of Michigan Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, and to allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from and after the 13th of March, 1871.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment to strike out the words:

And allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from and after the 13th day of March, 1871.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORNELIA A. WASHBURN.

Mr. PRATT. I am reminded by the Senator from Massachusetts that I omitted to have passed on Friday last the bill (H. R. No. 2216) granting a pension to Cornelia A. Washburn. I supposed it was passed. I ask for its consideration now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelia A. Washburn, widow of Alfred Washburn, late acting master in the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. TRUITT.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John W. Truitt, late of Company E, One hundred and forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, praying for a pension, have had the same under consideration and have directed me to report a bill and ask that the bill be passed now, as it will take but a moment.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 877) granting a pension to John W. Truitt was read three times, and passed.

LOUISA H. CANBY.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2209) granting a pension to Louisa H. Canby, widow of the late General E. R. S. Canby, have had the same under consideration and have directed me to report it back and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration, as Mrs. Canby gets no pension until the bill passes.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior by the bill is directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Louisa H. Canby, widow of Edward R. S. Canby, late brigadier-general United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of fifty dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN LAFFLIN.

Mr. OGLESBY. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions, usually so diligent and careful, overlooked still another case on last Friday; and by the indulgence of the Senate, I ask that it may be passed, and that will clean us off the Calendar. It is the bill (H. R. No. 1145) granting a pension to Martin Lafflin.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin Lafflin, late a private in Company B in the Ninetieth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 879) for the relief of missionaries to the Indian tribes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 880) to provide for the payment of bounties to persons entitled thereto, but who have not received them by reason of having been transferred from the military to the naval or marine service; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAGER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 881) fixing the times of holding the circuit court of the United States in the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 882) for the relief of the savings department of the Eagle and Phœnix Manufacturing Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 883) to carry out a resolution of Congress, passed August 5, 1786, to erect a monument to the memory of Nathanael Greene, at the seat of the Federal Government; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to say that my immediate purpose in offering the bill is in the hope that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will report the substance of it as an amendment to one of the appropriation bills now pending. I move that the bill be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS RECOMMITTED.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 809) to incorporate the Island and Sea-board Coasting Company of the District of Columbia was indefinitely postponed a few days ago, that it may be rereferred to the Committee on Commerce.

By unanimous consent, the reconsideration was agreed to; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to recommit to the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. No. 715) to repeal sections 3 and 6 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1873," approved June 1, 1872.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMERCE ON NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

Mr. WRIGHT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Transportation be instructed to inquire whether any legislation is required to regulate commerce passing from one State to another across navigable streams, and to report by bill or otherwise.

THOMAS T. CRITTENDEN.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill (H. R. No. 1297) for the relief of Thomas T. Crittenden, of Missouri, is reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims, and also recommended by the Treasury Department. I ask that it be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pass to the credit of Thomas T. Crittenden, late collector of internal revenue in the fifth collection district of Missouri, $21,641.56, in the adjustment of his revenue accounts, including the accounts of his deputy collector, John Montgomery, during the period that he was acting collector of that district, the records of their office having been destroyed by fire, and it being impracticable under existing laws to equitably adjust those accounts; also, to credit Crittenden in the settlement of his disbursing account $298.50, the amount paid by him to Assistant Assessor John B. Beiderlinden for services rendered during the months of September, October, and November, 1866, and prior to taking the oath required by law.

The Committee on Claims reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 8, after the words "twenty-one thousand six hundred and forty-one dollars and fifty-six cents," to insert "or such part of said amount as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue believes to be just and proper."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is satisfied due diligence was used by Crittenden and the relief ought to be granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM T. CHEATHAM.

Mr. McCREERY. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 844) for the relief of G. B. Tyler and E. H. Luckett, assignees of William T. Cheatham.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to G. B. Tyler and E. H. Luckett, assignees of William T. Cheatham, of $164 in full for moneys wrongfully collected from Cheatham by the internal-revenue collector for the second district of Kentucky in 1870, as a tax for keeper of bonded warehouse in December, 1869, and January, 1870.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL S. MERSHON, JR.

Mr. CONOVER. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 134) for the relief of Daniel S. Mershon, jr.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to Daniel S. Mershon, jr., $46,715.08, in full payment and discharge of his claim for work done and material furnished in the construction of the side-wheel steamer Cimarron.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to inquire what committee that came from?

Mr. CONOVER. There is a report in the case.

Mr. WRIGHT. From what committee?

Mr. CONOVER. The Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to have the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CONOVER on the 8th of April:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 134) for the relief of Daniel S. Mershon, jr., have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The claimant sets forth in his memorial that he is a resident of Bordentown, New Jersey, and claims that he has been greatly injured by the Government, owing to a violation of the terms of a contract entered into with the Navy Department, on the 12th day of October, 1861, for the construction of the side-wheel steamer Cimarron, involving a loss to him of $46,715.08.

It appears from the evidence submitted, that on the 8th day of August, 1861, the Navy Department published proposals for the construction of twelve side-wheel steamers, requiring bidders to furnish their own specifications, and thereupon the claimant made a proposition to the Department to build one of them for $120,000, which bid was rejected by the Department. On the 19th of September, 1861, he received a communication from the Navy Department proposing that he should build a vessel for $100,000, corresponding to the steamer Miami, then being built at the Philadelphia navy-yard, to which he replied as follows:

BORDENTOWN, September 21, 1861.

DEAR SIR: In answer to yours of the 19th instant, I have to say that I will build for the United States Government a side-wheel steamer for the sum of $100,000, to be the same size and dimensions as one you refer me to in Philadelphia navy-yard, to be completed in one hundred and ten days from date of contract. I wish further to state that the material and workmanship shall be equal to that which is being placed on the vessel now being built for the United States Government at the navy-yard in Philadelphia.

Respectfully yours, &c.,

D. S. MERSHON.

JOHN LENTHALL, Esq.,
Chief of the Bureau of Construction.

On the 30th day of September, 1861, as will appear from the following letter, the Navy Department accepted his offer without modification, namely:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION, &C.,
September 30, 1861.

SIR: I am instructed by the Navy Department to notify you that your offer of the 21st for construction of a side-wheel steamer in conformity with the advertisement of the 8th August, for the sum of $100,000, will be accepted, with the understanding that all the conditions of the advertisement are to be included in the contract, and that any deficiency in the specifications as to the material or workmanship for hull, equipment, or machinery shall be made satisfactory to the Department in every respect, and shall be made to conform as far as practicable to the side-wheel steamer building in the yard nearest to you.

The displacement of the vessel to be not less than 30,600 cubic feet; but if you think it should be greater to insure the draught of water to 6 feet 9 inches, you can increase it and your dimensions, but the proportion of the displacement must not, in any case, be more than two-thirds of the circumscribing solid of the length of the water-line, the extreme beadth, and draught of water exclusive of the keel.

The contract will embody clauses for forfeiture for failure to fulfill the conditions of the draught of water, and the forfeiture on completion to be $200 for each twenty-four hours after the expiration of the contract time.

You will reply to this by return of mail, and the date of the contract will be two days after the notification from this Bureau.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN LENTHALL,
Chief of the Bureau.

DANIEL S. MERSHON, Esq.,
Bordentown, New Jersey.

It therefore appears that the contract was to be based upon the proposition as made by the claimant, and the conditions as embraced in the above letter, namely, that the vessel to be built by him was to conform, as far as practicable, with the side-wheel vessel (the Miami) then being built at Philadelphia; that he, the claimant, was to furnish his own specifications, and further to use his own discretion, looking to an increased displacement of the vessel.

Upon the receipt of this acceptance of his offer by the Department, it appears that the claimant at once made his arrangements to construct the vessel, understanding that he was to prepare his own specifications, and incurred great expense in the purchase of material for the construction of the vessel. Upon the receipt of the contract for execution he found that the Department had also forwarded specifications, and from an examination discovered that they were in conflict with the advertisement and letter of acceptance by the Department. For the reasons assigned by the claimant in his memorial, he was induced to sign the contract, which was executed on the 12th of October, 1861.

Your committee, while admitting that the claimant may have been misled by the instructions of the Department, cannot recognize the fact that he has any claim upon the Government for losses sustained by him subsequent to the acceptance of his bid and prior to the signing of the contract. The latter was his voluntary act, and if losses accrued to him in conforming to it he alone is responsible. On the other hand, if there should be a violation of the terms of the contract on the part of the Government in requiring a modification of the plan of the vessel in length, width, or capacity, or increased size and weight of machinery, after the contract was signed and accepted, which resulted in increased cost and consequent heavy loss to the contractor, then the Government is responsible.

It appears from the facts submitted that a short time after said contract was executed the Miami (after which the Cimarron was to be built) was launched, and it was ascertained that she was deficient in strength by reason of too light timbers in the hull, and consequently so weak that she could not bear the machinery. The bottom of the Cimarron had to be built nearly anew of heavier timber, double the quantity, the floors closely laid, the stanchions supported by knee-timber both top and bottom, and many other alterations and additions from the original plans and specifications were ordered by the Department, causing not only delay in the completion, but subjecting the claimant to great expense and pecuniary hardships.

The hull by contract was to correspond in size to that of the Miami, but the plans were so changed, after the contract was made, as to increase the length of the Cimarron 16 feet 6 inches, her breadth 2 feet 10 inches, and 8 inches increased depth, as also an increase of 130 tons in capacity over that of the Miami, and which changes were made by the Department after the contract was entered into by the claimant. By the change of the dimensions of the vessel, as stated, the increased tonnage at $125 per ton, (a low price for the hull of a ship built during the war, when labor and material were at an advanced price and our national currency depreciated,) it subjected the claimant to an increased cost of $16,250.

The alterations on the hull, including the floors, the extra amount of timber necessary to strengthen the bottom, amount to $4,204.58.

The extra labor for pattern-makers, boiler-makers, machinists, and blacksmiths, at $3.25 per day for 2,131 days, the time necessarily employed as shown by the time-book to make these alterations, amounts to $6,924.42.

As the Miami was the model in the construction of the Cimarron, the following statement will show the difference in weight of machinery, with cost of the same at the time it was used and the vessel completed:

Parts.	Cimarron.	Miami.	Difference.	Cost.	Total.
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
Boilers	123,280	100,780	22,500	$0 15	$3,375 00
Smoke-stack	8,487	6,237	2,250	12	270 00
Coal-bunkers	34,792	24,422	10,550	10	1,055 00
Water-wheels	41,968	39,978	1,990	16	318 00
Iron castings	182,788	117,838	64,950	04	2,598 00
Brass castings	38,684	16,744	21,940	38	8,337 20
Forgings	70,355	47,805	22,550	15	3,382 50

Making a cost on machinery over and above that of the Miami of $19,336.10, and a total cost over and above that of the Miami of $64,715.10.

In support of the foregoing facts as to the increased length, breadth, tonnage, and weight of machinery of the Cimarron, and consequent violation of the terms of the contract by the Government, reference is made to the following letters from the Navy Department:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, February 11, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your request to be furnished with the dimensions of the United States steamer Miami and the United States steamer Cimarron, the former built at the United States navy-yard, Philadelphia, and the latter by D. S. Mershon, jr., of New Jersey, for the Government, I have to state that the following are the dimensions of the Miami:

Length between perpendiculars, 202 feet 6 inches; greatest breadth, 33 feet 2 inches; depth, 11 feet 2 inches.

Dimensions of the Cimarron are:

Length between perpendiculars, 219 feet; greatest breadth, 36 feet; depth, 11 feet 10 inches. Tonnage of Miami, 730 tons. Tonnage of Cimarron, 860 tons.

The Cimarron is consequently one hundred and thirty tons larger than the Miami. It seems that the plans as well as the specifications were furnished by the Department, and that the size of the Cimarron was increased, after the contract was made, to the dimensions stated.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

I. HANSCOM,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. JOHN H. BURLEIGH,
House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1874.

SIR: It appears by the records of this Bureau that under date of October 12, 1861, Daniel S. Mershon, jr., contracted to build for the Government a double-ender gunboat, the workmanship and material to be equal to the Miami, then building in the Philadelphia navy-yard; that specifications were furnished the contractor which gave dimensions somewhat larger than the Miami, and that after the contract was made those dimensions were increased to the size named in Mr. Mershon's claim, and that the size of materials used was also increased.

In building a larger vessel, necessarily increasing the cost above that contracted for, the claimant is entitled to the difference of cost.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

I. HANSCOM,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. JOHN H. BURLEIGH,
House of Representatives.

It appears that upon the completion of the vessel, and its acceptance by the Government, the claimant made continuous applications for relief, and was precluded from appearing before a board of officers organized by the Navy Department pursuant to the resolution of the Senate of March 9, 1865, to determine the increased cost of vessels which were contracted to be built in the years 1862 and 1863, from the fact that his contract was made in October, 1861, and consequently not considered.

After the passage of the act of March 2, 1867, entitled "An act for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery," the claimant presented his claim for the consideration of the board organized by the Navy Department, in pursuance thereto, and as appears from the findings of said board, his claim was not "considered within the province of the board," and for which he was not responsible.

The claim in this case was not for additional compensation based upon the advance in price of material and labor after the date of his contract, as was the case with a large number of contractors who obtained relief through the action of the board of officers referred to, but for violation of contract, and which fact he has satisfactorily established.

From the evidence submitted, and after a careful examination of the whole matter, the committee are impressed with the justice of the claim and recommend its payment; they therefore report the accompanying bill, and ask its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN CRAWFORD.

Mr. BOREMAN. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2800) for the relief of Benjamin Crawford.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Benjamin Crawford $5,000, in full compensation for the use by the Government of Crawford's patent steam-blower.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL MONUMENT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 711) providing for the completion and location of the naval monument, for action.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The preamble recites that the officers of the Navy propose to procure a fitting monument to the memory of the officers, seamen, and marines of the Navy who gave up their lives in the defense of their country during the late civil war, and for this purpose have raised by voluntary subscription a sum sufficient to pay Franklin Simmons, the sculptor, therefor; and that it appears, from a communication from Admiral Porter, that the officers of the Navy would be willing that the monument referred to should be placed on some suitable part of the public grounds in Washington, provided the Government will assume the cost of the steps, platform, base, and shaft, or all that portion of the monument not included in the figures; and the bill therefore appropriates $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the purpose of completing the steps, platform, base, and shaft of the naval monument, contracted for by the officers of the Navy with Franklin Simmons, and placing the same on some appropriate part of the public grounds in Washington. The Secretary of the Navy, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, and Fred. Law Olmsted are appointed as a committee to select and designate such place upon the public grounds as in their judgment will be most appropriate, where the monument shall be erected.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to offer a slight amendment, as I understand from the existing law this money will not be available after the 30th of June. It would be impossible that this could be completed before that time. I move to amend by inserting after the word "expended," in line 6, the words "at any time prior to June 30, 1875."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I call for the regular order, which is the appropriation bill for the Military Academy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Maine was good enough to say last week that he would indicate some time when he would be willing that I should call up the bill providing for the publishing of public documents for sale and regulating the distribution of official copies thereof. If it is a convenient time for him now, I should like to have him indicate; if not, I will await his pleasure.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I would rather the Senator would allow me to decline that at this time. I wish to pass this appropriation bill now. He will have an opportunity.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the appropriation bill is proceeded with, the Chair will, with the indulgence of the Senate, lay before the Senate the business on his table.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 3534) to change the times of holding the circuit and district courts in the city of Evansville, Indiana—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 2546) to provide for the gradual reduction of the Army of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 1507) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Colorado—to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 3500) to authorize the importation of certain animals for the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, free of duty—to the Committee on Finance.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolution of the House of Representatives insisting upon their former resolution in regard to the suspension of the joint rule No. 6, in regard to the enrollment of the three bills revising the statutes, and asking for a committee of conference thereon.

Mr. CONKLING. I see the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills present on my left. This matter pertains to that committee more especially than to any other in this body. Perhaps the Senator from Arkansas as chairman of the committee will make some motion about this matter.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate insist on its action and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, Messrs. CLAYTON, CONKLING, and BAYARD were appointed.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask to be excused from serving upon the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Unless the Senator has some personal point about it, I do not see why that should be done. I am sure he is the very man who ought to serve on the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there anything before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks to be excused from service on the committee of conference.

Mr. CONKLING. And the Senate had voted to excuse me, and thereupon the Senator from Vermont indulged the Senate in hearing some remarks from him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had not declared the result, and the Senator from Vermont rose to his feet perhaps to state an objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think the Senator ought to be excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question.

Mr. CONKLING was excused.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

On motion by Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, Mr. SARGENT, and Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have the House amendments printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now, I insist on the regular order.

Mr. JOHNSTON. There are some bills on the Calendar for the removal of political disabilities, six or seven of them, and I should be obliged to the Senator from Maine if he would allow us to pass them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will have an opportunity hereafter.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It will only take ten minutes, I think, to dispose of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are a good many bills on the Calendar that are quite as deserving of consideration as bills to remove political disabilities for people who are entitled to some consideration at the hands of the Government; and yet as we pass bills every morning on reports now and never go to the Calendar, I do not think the Senator from Virginia ought to insist upon the Senator from Maine giving way on an appropriation bill to take up that particular class. If the Senator from Maine is willing to lay aside the appropriation bill altogether and take up the Calendar in its order, that is another thing; but to make a special exception for that particular class of bills would be a very extraordinary proposition.

Mr. JOHNSTON. We could have passed two bills while the Senator from Vermont was making his objection. It is very seldom that I ask anything of this body. I trust that even he will make no further objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to any Senator's asking anything from this body; and I hope the Senator from Virginia has been here long enough, as I have no doubt he has been, to know that his right to pass his bills is not a question of personal favor. He has no right to ask it as a personal favor, and the Senate has no right to grant it as a personal favor. The question is not one between us and the Senator from Virginia; it is a question between us and the public business in its regular and orderly administration. Therefore I hope the Senator from Virginia will not undertake to take those bills out of their place on the Calendar with the idea that it is due to him as a matter of personal courtesy or that we are guilty of a discourtesy to him if we do not take them up out of their place on the Calendar to the exclusion of everything else. I hope the Senator will not understand if I ask the Senate, in case we are to go to the Calendar at all, to go at it regularly and go through with it in order, that I am doing anything discourteous to him. That is the farthest thing from my intention.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I must insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Military Academy appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

The bill (H. R. No. 2545) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Appropriations reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 91, to insert the following proviso at the end of the clause making an appropriation for text-books and stationery and books of reference for the use of instructors for the department of law and ethics:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may assign one of the judge advocates of the Army to be professor of law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 126 and 127 to strike out the following clause:

For renewing furniture for academic section-rooms and offices, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 132, to increase the appropriation for the continuation of the superstructure of the new hospital for cadets from $15,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2343, being the bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, &c.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The bill will be read at length.

Mr. WINDOM. Before entering upon the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill I ask the indulgence of the Senate to say that when this bill is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to consider the reports from the Select Committee on Transportation, and shall endeavor to secure a hearing on that subject as early as possible.

I desire to say that the bill now reported by the Committee on Appropriations appropriates $5,570,705.05, being an increase over the bill as sent to us from the House of Representatives of $504,943.55. The increase recommended by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is composed mainly of the following items: For the Apache Indians, $250,000; for the Arapahoes and Cheyennes, $50,000; for the Crows, $50,000; incidental Indian expenses in Arizona, $25,000, and in California, $40,000; making $415,000, leaving $89,000 which is made up of various small items in the bill. The revised estimates for 1875 were $6,165,000; so that the bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations is $594,295 less than the revised estimates of the department. The appropriations in 1873 for the Indian service, including the deficiencies for that year, amounted to $7,021,177.16. The present bill as recommended by the committee is therefore $1,440,452.16 less than the actual expenditures for the year 1873. The expenditures in 1874, the current fiscal year, including the regular bill and the deficiencies, amount to $6,515,162.49. The present bill is therefore $934,457.44 less than the amount actually expended in 1874.

To recapitulate again, this bill is $1,440,452 less than the appropriations for 1873, and $934,457.44 less than the amount expended in 1874.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it be the pleasure of the Senate, the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 10, to increase the number of agents of Indian affairs from sixty-seven to sixty-nine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 16, to increase the Indian agents for the tribes in Washington Territory from "four" to "five," and to insert after the word "Colvil," in the seventeenth line, the words "Nisqually, Puyallup, and other tribes;" so that the clause will read:

Five for the tribes in Washington Territory, namely, Neah Bay, Yakama, Colvil, Nisqually, Puyallup, and other tribes, and S'Kokomish agencies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 31 and 32, to strike out the words "and Bannack agencies," and to insert the word "agency;" so that the clause will read:

One for the tribes in Wyoming, namely, Shoshone agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 34, to change the name "Albiquin" to "Abiquiu."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 3, line 43, to strike out the words "and Kickapoo" and at the end of the clause to strike out the words "and the duties to be performed by the agent of the Cherokees;" so that the clause will read:

Eight for the tribes in the Indian Territory, namely, Kaw or Kansas, Sac and Fox, Quapaw, Neosho, Kiowa and Comanche, Upper Arkansas, and Wichita agencies; and one for the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws and Chickasaws, and Seminoles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 48 and 49, to strike out the word "Chippewa," and in lieu thereof to insert the words "White Earth;" so that the clause will read:

One for the tribes in Minnesota, namely, at the White Earth agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 51, in the clause making an appropriation for one agent for the Sac and Fox of Iowa agency, to strike out the following words:

And $1,200 to build a school-house: Provided, That no salary be paid to the agent unless he lives near enough to the agency to teach and care for the tribe every day.

Mr. WRIGHT. With the consent of the Senator from Minnesota having the bill in charge, I ask that that amendment be passed over for the present. I should like to have an opportunity of conferring with my colleague on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, if there be no objection.

The next amendment was in line 63, to increase the aggregate appropriation for Indian agents from $96,000 to $102,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 69, before the word "for" to insert the word "one;" in line 70 after the word "Lake" to insert the words "one for the Pillagers at Leach Lake;" in line 71 to strike out the word "and" before the word "one;" and after the word "Montana" in line 72 to insert the words "one for the tribes in Oregon, namely, Alsea; and two for the tribes in Washington Territory, namely, Tulalip and Qui-nai-elt;" and to strike out at the end of line 75 the word "four" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause from lines 69 to 76 read:

For pay of special agents, one for the Chippewas at Red Lake, one for the Pillagers at Leach Lake, Minnesota; one for the Mission Indians in California; one for the Assinaboines and Gros Ventres at Fort Belknap, Montana; one for the tribes in Oregon, namely, Alsea; and two for the tribes in Washington Territory, namely, Tulalip and Qui-nai-elt, at $1,500 each, $10,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 4, to strike out the following clause, commencing in line 77:

For three subagents, one for the tribes in Oregon, namely, Alsea subagency; and two for the tribes in Washington Territory, namely, Tulalip and Qui-nai-elt subagencies, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 87, to increase the number of interpreters from seventy-three to seventy-seven.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 91, to increase the appropriation for the pay of interpreters for the Klamath, Grande Ronde, Siletz, Umatilla, Warm Spring agencies, and Malheur and Alsea subagencies, in Oregon, from $400 to $500 per annum each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 92, to increase the number of interpreters for the tribes in Washington Territory, to be assigned to such agencies as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, from six to seven, and in line 94 to increase the appropriation for their compensation from $400 to $500 per annum each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 97, to increase the appropriation for the compensation of two interpreters at the Nez Perce and Fort Hall agencies in Idaho from $400 to $500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 99, to increase the appropriation for pay of three interpreters for the tribes in Nevada from $400 to $500 per annum each.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire, if I shall not disturb the solemn order of procedure here in this full Senate, why this change is made? Four hundred dollars each for interpreters in those wild regions I should suppose ought to be enough; but I see there is a difference. In some places the committee make it $500 for some tribes and leave it at $400 for the others. Very likely there is very good reason for it, if the Senator having the bill in charge would be kind enough to tell us what it is.

Mr. WINDOM. The reason for it is that the law in certain cases fixes the compensation at $500 and in certain others at $400, and the Committee on Appropriations simply complied with the law. They declined to make this change from $400 to $500 until they were shown the law fixing the pay at $500. I cannot refer to it at present, but I have sent for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any real ground for the distinction here between $400 and $500 on the merit of the thing, aside from the law?

Mr. WINDOM. It is so understood by the Commissioner that certain places are more expensive and more difficult, and we simply complied with the law. The Senate may change it, but the committee felt constrained to appropriate as the law provided for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see the law.

Mr. WINDOM. I have sent for it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 111, to increase the appropriation for an interpreter for the tribes in Wyoming at the Shoshone agency from $400 to $500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not satisfied with the explanation of this increase. I think we ought to see the law before we agree to these amendments. There certainly cannot be any ground for having $400 in one place and $500 in another, seesawing here from one tribe to another; and I do not see any very good ground on the merit of the case, as it has been stated, for increasing the sum named in the House bill. If the law fixes the salary of these interpreters at these various agencies and for these tribes, then it would be much easier to change the law than it would be to increase the appropriation, I should suppose, unless it is really proper to pay $500 to an Indian for acting as an interpreter, which is about three times as much as he could earn in any other business; but perhaps this is professional. I must ask the Senate to take a vote on this amendment as a test.

Mr. WINDOM. I can only say that the committee declined to make this addition until the law was shown them in the committee-room. I have not the reference to it here now, but will have it before the bill is completed. These amendments were reported solely because the committee understood that the law provided for $500 salary for interpreters at these agencies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Change the law then.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no doubt of the power of the Senate to change the law; but without reason for it I think it is hardly a proper thing to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee in line 111.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have a division in order that we may see how the Senate stands on the subject.

The question being put, there were 12 ayes.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (to Mr. WINDOM.) I suppose you give it up.

Mr. WINDOM. No, I do not give it up. We may as well break up for want of a quorum now as at any other time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those opposed to the amendment will rise.

Eight Senators rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr, SARGENT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogy, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Johnston, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Stockton, Tipton, and Windom—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Edmunds, Ingalls, Robertson, and Washburn—5.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Patterson, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Thurman, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—37.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. CARPENTER entered the Chamber and said: Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote has been announced.

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose the only way we can obtain a quorum is by a call of the Senate or by a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to adjourn would be in order.

Mr. SARGENT. I prefer a call of the Senate, and I make that motion. I do not know that any remarks would be in order; but I think we ought to proceed with the appropriation bills if we expect to adjourn on the 22d of June.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate be called.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call will proceed.

The Chief Clerk called the list of Senators; and the following answered to their names:

PRESENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Boreman, Buckingham, Carpenter, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stockton, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, Windom, and Wright—42.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call discloses the presence of a quorum. The Chair will therefore again put the vote on the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no need of having the yeas and nays again. It is evident the Senate wishes to pay these Indian interpreters $500 a year apiece, judging from the vote, and I hope there may be unanimous consent to dispense with the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to dispensing with the call for the yeas and nays? The Chair hears none; and the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 112 to increase the appropriation for the interpreter for the tribes in Utah from $400 to $500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 114 to strike out the word "six" and insert "seven;" at the end of the same line to strike out "one" and insert "two;" at the end of line 115 to strike out the word "Albiquin" and insert "Abiquiu;" in line 117 to strike out the word "four" and insert "five" and in line 118 to strike out the word "Albiquin" and insert "Abiquiu;" so that the clause will read:

Seven for the tribes in New Mexico, namely, two for the Navajo agency, and one each for the Abiquiu, Cimarron, Mescalero Apache, Southern Apache, and Pueblo agencies, at $500 each per annum: Provided, That the Abiquiu agency shall be abolished after December, 1874.

Mr. WINDOM. I have before me now the law that was referred to a moment ago, to be found in the ninth volume of statutes, page 587:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June next, the salaries of interpreters lawfully employed in the service of the United States, in California, Oregon, Utah, and New Mexico, shall be $500 per annum, and of all so employed elsewhere, $400.

It was upon that statute that we increased these from $400 to $500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When the matter comes into the Senate, if I am here, I shall ask to have these amendments reserved, and propose to put them all on a footing, by inserting in lieu of these amendments a provision repealing that statute and fixing the salary at $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 122, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the interpreters for the Los Pinos and White River agencies from $400 to $500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on line 129, to reduce the number of interpreters for the tribes in the Indian Territory from "twelve" to "eight," and at the end of the clause to insert the following:

And $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to supply temporary interpreters for the semi-civilized tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 135, to reduce the number of interpreters for the tribes in Wisconsin from "four" to "three," and in line 136 to strike out the name "Lac Flambeau;" so that the clause will read:

Three for the tribes in Wisconsin, namely, Green Bay, Lac Court Oreilles, and La Pointe agencies, at $400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 138, to strike out "three" and insert "four;" after the word "namely," in the same line, to insert "Boise Forte;" and in line 139 to add the letter "s" to the word "Chippewa;" in the same line, after the word "Chippewa," to strike out the words "agency and;" in the same line, before the words "Red Lake," to insert the words "White Earth;" and in line 140 to strike out the words "and Lake Winnebagoshish special;" so that the clause as amended will read:

Four for the tribes in Minnesota, namely, Boise Forte, Chippewas, White Earth, Red Lake and Pillager agencies, at $400 each:

Mr. WINDOM. Before that clause is passed the punctuation should be changed. The comma after Boise Forte should be stricken, out as there is but one tribe meant, "Boise Forte Chippewas."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 142, to reduce the number of interpreters of the Mackinac agency in Michigan from "three" to "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 145 and 146, after the word "Chiracahui," to strike out the words "Camp Verde" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "San Carlos;" in line 146, after the word "at," to strike out the word "four" and to insert "five;" in line 147, after the word "making," to strike out the words "seventy-three" and to insert "forty-one;" in line 148, after the word "each" to insert the words "thirty-six interpreters at $500 each, and $600 for temporary interpreters;" and in lines 150 and 151, after the word "all," to strike out the words "$29,200" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "$35,000;" so that the clause will read:

Six for the tribes in Arizona, namely, Colorada River, Pima and Maricopa, Moquis Pueblo, Chiracahui, San Carlos, and Camp Apache agencies, at $500 each; making forty-one interpreters, at $400 each; thirty-six interpreters, at $500 each; and $600 for temporary interpreters; in all, $35,000.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the law which the Senator from Minnesota just read apply to the interpreters in Arizona?

Mr. WINDOM. It does not.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I move that the Senate do not agree to the amendment. I see no reason why a change should be made in favor of these interpreters.

Mr. WINDOM. There may be some other law; but the law before me does not cover them. I have no objection to an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment striking out "four" and inserting "five."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the other amendments to the paragraph.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 192 to increase the appropriation for goods, provisions, &c., for the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans from $75,000 to $85,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. WINDOM. The only explanation is that the amount in the House bill is not considered sufficient to take care of these Indians as the policy adopted by the Government requires. Last year there was $75,000 appropriated by the regular bill, and by the deficiency bill which passed both Houses recently $25,000 more, making $100,000 as the amount expended for the current fiscal year. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars was the amount asked for. There are about twenty-one hundred of these Indians situated in the neighborhood of the Sioux. They are friendly Indians, and stood as our aids and allies against the warlike Sioux. They make great complaint that liberal appropriations are made for the Sioux Indians who fight us, and that they are starved because they are our friends. The committee believe that $85,000 is not sufficient; but we felt that was all we could appropriate, and we therefore increased the appropriation of the House $10,000, making it still $15,000 less than the amount actually expended this year, and less than the amount ought to be, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the Senator expects another deficiency.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope not. We provide in this bill against a deficiency; but certainly if we cut down these appropriations without reason, if we expect to keep the Indians peaceable by feeding them and do not give them money enough for them, we must expect either a deficiency or a war. I think a deficiency bill is cheaper than a war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 198 to increase the appropriation for the Apache Indians "who have been or may be collected on reservations," for those in Arizona, from $350,000 to $550,000; in line 200 to increase the appropriation for those in New Mexico from $100,000 to $150,000, and in line 200 to increase the total appropriation for the Apaches from $450,000 to $700,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained, if I am not impertinent in my questions.

Mr. WINDOM. We appropriated last year $250,000 for the Indians included in the first of these amendments, the Apaches in Arizona.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator state what the deficiency appropriation bill of this year has been?

Mr. WINDOM. I was just about to state it. The deficiency bill appropriates $500,000, making $750,000 expended during this fiscal year for the Indians in Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For the Apaches alone?

Mr. WINDOM. For the Apaches in Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is confined to the Apaches. How many are there?

Mr. WINDOM. About seventy-three hundred of those appropriated for in this item of the bill. The amount estimated for was $750,000 for the next year, being the same amount that has been expended during the present fiscal year. The committee have increased the House bill to a total of $700,000, being $50,000 for next year less than the appropriations made for the current fiscal year.

There is no way of ascertaining exactly what amount should be appropriated under these circumstances. It is a question merely, as we have often heard in the Senate, of feeding or fighting Indians. These Indians are very bad, perhaps none worse in the country. There are none others that will compare with them, I think, unless it be the Sioux Indians up on the Missouri River. As we have adopted the policy of gathering them on reservations and of shooting them if they go off the reservations, it seems but just that some reasonable appropriation should be made, if we expect to carry out that policy, for feeding them. The amount appropriated is believed by the committee to be as small as will possibly answer the purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many of those are there?

Mr. WINDOM. Seventy-three hundred. It is about $100 per Indian for the year.

Mr. INGALLS. Including women and children.

Mr. WINDOM. Yes, sir, and $50,000 less than was appropriated for this year. It is a question whether we shall carry out the peace policy we have inaugurated, and which I believe has saved many millions of dollars to the Government as against war with these Indians whether we shall act on our best judgment and appropriate such a sum as is necessary to keep them quiet and do something toward their civilization and improving their condition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many reservations are there upon which these Indians are gathered?

Mr. WINDOM. Four or five.

Mr. INGALLS. Four. I think the amendment reported by the committee ought not to be adopted. Since this matter was before the Senate on the deficiency appropriation bill, I have been at the trouble to investigate the expenditure for these Indians in Arizona and New Mexico during the past two years, and I will trouble the Senate with the items. The deficiency of 1872 was $185,000; salary for two superintendents for the two years, $9,500; ten Indian agents, $24,000; ten interpreters, $10,000; appropriations for 1872 and 1873, $500,000; incidental expenses of 1872, $125,000; the deficiency of 1873, $150,000; and an additional deficiency for 1873 and 1874 in the bill lately passed, $969,000. To this must be added the expense of four regiments of troops, two of cavalry and two of infantry, that have been maintained in that country at an expense we are assured of not less than $1,000,000 per annum for each regiment; and these expenditures, added to the appropriations, make the entire amount expended for these Indians for these two years $9,970,000, the Indians themselves not numbering to exceed seventy-three hundred, including women, and children; and of this number, as it appears by the reports of the Commissioner, not more than three thousand or thirty-five hundred at the outside have ever been on any of the reservations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Seven thousand includes all the Indians?

Mr. INGALLS. All the Indians in these two Territories for which this appropriation is made, and I say that by the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs contained in the volume for 1873, made up from the statements of the commissioners and Indian agents in that Territory, not more than three thousand or thirty-five hundred at the outside have ever been on the reservations. Beyond that it appears from the testimony of these agents that the supplies which have been furnished them have been limited to half a pound of beef and one pound of shorts per day. Unless the Senator having this bill in charge can give some satisfactory explanation of these enormous and indefensible expenditures, I think the appropriation ought not to be increased.

Mr. SARGANT. Unquestionably the report of the Commissioner, which was submitted in 1873 before this system of appropriations had had any opportunity to work, before General Crook had had his severe fight with the Indians and compelled them to go on these reservations, did state approximatively the number of Indians then on the reservations; but the report of the Commissioner made since that time, and the latest accounts we have, and the accounts also from General Crook in command of the Army there, show that there are now about nine thousand Indians on these reservations, and altogether there are between ten and twelve thousand of them. The appropriations we have made were designed to be applied to those on the reservations now, and to those being removed there or who may be induced to go there, so that the amount is somewhat flexible; and the expenditure per Indian per day is about twenty cents.

The condition which the Territory has been rescued from under this policy, which combines force and humanity with the sword in the hands of General Crook and his soldiers and the means of subsistence of these Indians through the peace policy of the Government through its civil service, has shown a great improvement. I have in my hand a document which was printed by the Legislature of Arizona in 1871, relating to Indian murders and outrages which were committed in 1869 and 1870; and all through the numerous pages of this book they go on to give abstracts of the testimony of persons who were called in to testify who had suffered either by depredations on their property or by the death of some members of their families, farmers and others scattered through the Territory; and the account is certainly most harrowing to the feelings of any one who knows that the life of a wife or child on the frontier is as dear to the husband or father as it is in Kansas or any other State of the Union. I will call the attention of the Senate to one or two extracts from this report. It is sufficient to say that the papers in Arizona which fiercely denounced this policy at the time it was put in operation, which said that the only possible cure for the evils under which Arizona was suffering was by war, by extermination, that the Indians must be exterminated, that any reservation system could not possibly bring peace—these same papers now declare (and I have extracts from them on my desk) that the condition of peace in the Territory during the last year has been most gratifying, that the outrages and depredations have ceased, and that the policy of the Government is a success. I will quote from this report:

W. A. Smith, sworn:

He is a farmer, and resides at the Cienega, in Pima County, Arizona; has resided there for three years; that the Apache Indians have committed depredations at and near his farm.

In his testimony he further says:

In January, 1869, the mail carrier's horse was shot from under him, and the United States mail taken and destroyed by the Indians.

In the spring of 1870 a United States soldier named Bernard Hogan was shot dead in the door of the house in which a picket guard was quartered.

In August, 1870, his house was attacked and two of the three inmates murdered, the witness only escaping by concealment; all the crops and everything destroyed about the premises.

WILLIAM MORGAN was sworn:

He is a farmer, and resides at Sonoita Valley, Pima County, Arizona, and is a member of the present Legislature.

He says further:

In May, 1869, E. G. and G. Pennington (father and son) were killed while plowing in their field, and all of the horses, mules, and other movable property belonging to the farm were taken.

In November, 1869, Benjamin Aikin and a Mexican (name unknown) were murdered while harvesting corn, and all their property taken.

The same year Joaquin Tapia and James Catterson were murdered while traveling on the road. Joseph Goldtree, who was traveling with them, escaped with his clothing riddled with bullet and arrow holes.

In the same year Thomas Vonday was murdered while standing in the door of his house, and the house robbed.

So he goes on enumerating in all some ten instances that came under his observation; and different witnesses, farmers and merchants, proceed to relate the murders and depredations by the Indians, showing the fearful condition of the Territory in 1869, 1870, and 1871. The Territory from end to end seemed open to the barbarous hostility of these enterprising, devilish bands, or rather numerous bands, of Indians; they carried murder and conflagration and destruction into every part of the Territory, so much so that the population of the Territory began rapidly to diminish.

The Government after having brought the Sioux to terms, after having shown by the success of an apparently unpromising experiment that twenty thousand Sioux, now claimed to be thirty thousand, could be treated with and induced to cease plundering and murdering on the frontiers, tried the same experiment upon the wild devils of Arizona, and the success has been, as I say, so great that during the past year there has been peace in Arizona. I believe there has been no murder in that time committed by these Indians. Cochise, contrary to all expectations and all previous experience of him, he who is the leader of the principal band of Apaches and has a species of patriarchal control over all of them, has kept his word, has kept his Indians upon the reservations, has prevented their raiding either in Arizona or across the line into the Mexican States; and the result is the Territory is really becoming prosperous; the miners are going in to develop the mines; grain is being grown, so that barley, which the Government three or four years ago paid nine cents a pound for as Army supplies, is now sold for a cent and a quarter a pound, and there is a promise of continued improvement in the Territory, and of continued subjection on the part of the Indians.

This policy has been brought about in two methods. First, by capturing the Indians as if they were individually felons at large, and carrying them upon four districts of land, separate from each other, which were set apart as Indian reservations, lands comparatively barren, where very little can be raised, for there is very little good land in the Territory, and what there is the people do not want to give up to the Indians. The Indians are stationed within these lines and told to keep there. The military promise them, and carry out the promise, that if they are found outside of those lines they will be shot like wild beasts. That the military does. On the other hand, they being kept within these lines where there is no possibility of hunting or subsistence of any kind, the Government feeds them; and it costs something about three-quarters of a million dollars per annum and will cost for several years to come three-quarters of a million dollars per annum to feed the nine or ten thousand Apache Indians. I am not speaking of the Mescaleros or Navajos or Pimas, but simply of the Apaches. It will cost that to feed them in Arizona and New Mexico, provided you want to continue this policy and this state of peace. But, on the contrary, if you think it is not economical, that these amounts ought not to be expended in this way, that it is better to have your cavalry there, then you will not make these appropriations; you will not make them in this bill; you will cut them down so that they will not be adequate; you will reverse the system; you will send more companies of cavalry there, where it costs this amount to keep one company nine months. The result will be more affidavits, more books, more murders, bloodshed, and destruction in this Territory.

Setting aside the question of national faith, the keeping of your promise with these Indians, setting aside any question of humanity; that they are human beings and have souls, although barbarous and merciless; forgetting that they have a sense of honor on their own part in that during the past two years, when it seemed that the Government was willing to keep its promises to them, they have kept their promises to the Government; setting aside considerations of that kind and coming down to the question simply whether more or less money shall go out of the Treasury, then I say this is the cheapest method you can pursue. It is cheaper, as all your military officers from Sherman down insist and as all experience shows, to feed them than to fight them. I need not allude again to the Modoc war which closed but a few months ago, where some of the best men, one of your best and noblest generals, and my friend Professor Thomas, a man of most exalted merits, were assassinated, and where three soldiers for one Indian were killed or wounded, where it cost $6,000,000 to subdue one hundred and forty Indians. We did not keep our promises to those Indians. We had told them if they would do certain things the Government would do certain things for them. They did the things which were required of them, and the Government, from some spasm of economy or some carelessness, neglected to keep its promises to them, and the result was they became restive, they began to raid on the neighboring settlers; that of course made difficulty; Government troops were sent to chastise them; and then came the war which cost us $6,000,000. That is the way these things grow up regularly.

During 1865 and 1866 we had an Indian war with the Sioux which cost over $45,000,000 by the official reports, and the list of casualties on the part of the Indian showed that there were forty-five of them killed—$1,000,000 to an Indian; and after it was all over we had to resort to the system of feeding them. We had to say it is cheaper to feed them rather than to spend $45,000,000 to fight them, where we incur not only enormous expenses, but the other necessary penalty of fighting them—the ravishment of our borders. It may be humiliating to us, a great nation as we are, to be compelled to feed our foes, to bribe them to keep the peace; but we protect our people by doing it, and Indians are not bound by the rules which we would apply to a civilized nation. They are savages. They simply understand that once they owned all this land, and now the Government makes certain promises that they shall own certain portions, and if they will relinquish the rest they shall be paid in certain proportions annually; but our miners seeking after mines invade their reservations, like the expeditions which went across lately; our farmers, thinking that there are perhaps more fertile valleys in these reservations than those they occupy, press on with an enterprising and careless spirit into the reservations, and then troubles come with the Indians; somebody is killed. You cut down your appropriations instead of making them adequate as the Indian office and the Interior Department and the Indian commission and the President tell you they ought to be, in order to maintain peace with the Indians and fulfill our obligations, but you cut them down below the figure by one-half or two-thirds. Then, I ask, if we do not look on with stupid wonder when some infuriated band of Indians plunges along one of your fertile valleys and kills men, women, and children, as the Indians generally formerly did, and as the Apaches did recently for years? Taught by costly experience, we came back to the policy of endeavoring to feed instead of fight the savages. It is just to make them some compensation for their yielding up the whole territory and taking a small part of it by giving them the subsistence which they cannot possibly get for themselves within the confines we assign to them.

Humanity, public faith, economy, all require that we shall make these appropriations; and the experience of the past justifies it, and Congress ought not to halt in the duty. Suppose that your Indian system does cost you seven millions per annum. If you want it to cost you forty millions per annum, fight all the Indians. Seven millions per annum, if it were entirely a benefaction given to the Indians, compares by no means in value to the thousands of millions of productive property now in the hands of the United States and citizens of the United States which we have acquired by various treaties from Indians.

What is the value of this talk about the Indian service costing $7,000,000? If you go through this bill you will find three or four millions that we do not appropriate of our money at all; that do not belong to us. It is interest on money which belongs to Indians, which is in the Treasury of the United States, and on which we pay them 5 per cent., the lowest interest we pay to anybody—their money which we sold their land for to settlers, put it into the Treasury, and agreed to pay them 5 per cent. on the principal. Go through this bill, and you will find those items will reduce your bill by one-half. I say there are two sides to this question, the Indian's side as well as the white man's side, and I trust we shall pursue the path not merely of humanity but of economy.

Mr. BOGY. I think that the amendment of the committee should be adopted. The policy of the Government has been since we acquired that Territory to take all these Indians upon the reservations. The Apaches are known to be very mischievous, wild, warlike Indians. Their number in Arizona is not less than ten thousand, and perhaps will reach twelve or fifteen thousand; certainly I think twelve thousand——

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator refer to the Apache Indians alone?

Mr. BOGY. The Apache Indians alone. The number of Apache Indians in Arizona will amount to twelve thousand, if not more. In that I include the Wallipies and other bands that separated many years ago from the main tribe which we denominate the Apache tribe, but they are Indians of the same warlike body who roam the country. The bill does not make any provision for these little tribes that have seceded from the main nation of Apaches, and yet the intention of the Government is to take all these Indians upon reservations. That is its policy; and in carrying out that policy troops have been sent to that country. The policy is in a manner a success, at all events approaching to a success. Arizona a few years ago and until very recently was so infested with these marauding Indians that no white man felt safe in any part of that Territory. Peace, I may say, now reigns throughout Arizona, and immigration is beginning to pour into that country. Although not rich in lands, it is an extremely rich Territory in minerals, and it is of the very greatest consequence to the nation at large that the Territory should be settled by a white population. White people will not go there as long as these Indians are permitted to roam at large in the country. Hence the policy of the Government has been to drive these Indians on to reservations. Seventy-three hundred, according to the reports, are now upon the reservations. That statement is correct, but only to a certain extent. That is the minimum. In addition to that there is a little tribe of Indians called the Wallipies. They are Apache Indians, but are not under the same tribal organization. They are there on a reservation, and it is known that they amount to between one thousand and twelve hundred, making upward of eight thousand or eighty-five hundred on the reservations now. There are many of these Indians yet roving through the country. The policy of the Government is to drive them on to these reservations, and the object of the appropriation is not only to feed the Indians that are now upon the reservations but to feed those that may be compelled to go on to the reservations during the coming year, and the number of Indians will be not less than nine thousand perhaps before the next meeting of Congress.

I am very well satisfied that even the augmented appropriation is not sufficient to carry out the policy of the Government as it should be. It is not sufficient to bring about proper economy, because if the Indians are not fed they are compelled to rob and to steal and to murder. They have a right, in a certain sense, to do it. It is only according to a law of nature. We have driven them upon reservations; we have taken away from them the means of subsistence, that they inherited from their forefathers, by hunting and fishing; and if we do not subsist them they have the right to use such means as God and nature have put in their hands to subsist, which is by marauding and murdering and robbing and killing throughout the country.

It is therefore the policy of the Government and the economy of the Government to provide them with sufficient subsistence. If the appropriation should exceed the amount needed, I cannot doubt that the executive department of the Government would do its duty and not expend it. But if it be true, as I have no doubt the truth is, that there will be not less than nine thousand Indians on the reservations before the year is out, there being now upward of eight thousand, the appropriation of $550,000 is not sufficient. It is only from sixty to seventy dollars a head, not merely for subsistence but for all the means of living.

At this time the troops that are in Arizona have nothing to do. The policy of the Government is a success; but it will not remain a success unless these Indians are fed. The reservations on which they have been compelled to go are known to be unproductive, and I think in that there has been a great mistake committed, because if it is the intention of the Government to advance them in civilization, to enable them to earn a living by the cultivation of the soil, good soil should have been given to them; but where they are sent to nothing on earth will grow; they are totally dependent upon the small rations which they get from day to day. I say the appropriation of $550,000 for some eighty-five hundred or even for seven thousand Indians is entirely too small.

Mr. INGALLS. The appropriation is $700,000.

Mr. BOGY. The appropriation is $550,000 for the Indians in Arizona and $150,000 for the Indians in New Mexico, which is a great distance off. I am speaking of the Indians in Arizona. On the Indians in New Mexico another argument could be made, and I say the appropriation for the Indians of New Mexico is at least $100,000 too small to subsist those Indians, because in the Apache Indians are included four or five little tribes that were formerly Apaches of New Mexico that have separated from those Indians and are not included; and yet the policy of the Government is to drive them all upon reservations. I think it of the very greatest importance that the larger appropriation should be made. In my estimation the larger appropriation is even too small to carry out the policy of the Government as it should be. It is too small upon the score of economy, because if you are compelled to augment the number of troops there now, it will cost you ten times more.

It is said by the Senator from Kansas that there are four regiments there. There are not two complete regiments in Arizona. There are four parts of regiments in Arizona; but there are not two complete regiments in Arizona, there are not two thousand troops in Arizona to-day, although the number on paper is so. I am in correspondence with General Carr, who is an officer in that country, and the fact is, as he tells me, that there are not two thousand effective troops in Arizona to-day.

Mr. SARGENT. Ten thousand men cannot maintain as perfect peace in that Territory to-day as is done with those two thousand under this policy. There is better peace kept, with the expenditure of three quarters of a million dollars in this humane way, than there could be by maintaining on a war footing ten thousand troops.

Mr. BOGY. No question about it. On the score of economy the larger amount should be appropriated. As I have said once or twice during the few remarks I have made to the Senate, the policy inaugurated by the Government and carried out by General Crook is a success. Now, why not give it the fairest opportunity of making it a complete success? Certainly a few hundred thousand dollars is of no consequence; and if the Indians are not maintained on their reservations the result will inevitably be that you will have to send more troops there and fight and kill them. View it in any way, as a question of humanity, as a question of justice, as a question of high duty, as a matter of economy, as a matter of enlightened policy to induce the white people to go to that country, rich in minerals, it is the true course for this Government to make liberal appropriations, so that the object we set out to accomplish a few years ago when we acquired the Territory may be carried out, which is peace with these Indians. We fight them sometimes because it cannot be avoided; but the object is not to kill the Indians, but to maintain them at peace. A regiment will cost for a year more than this whole appropriation. At this moment I am informed by letters from the officers of the Army there that there is perfect peace throughout all Arizona. The policy is a success; and it would be a great misfortune really if the commanding officer of that department were not enabled to carry on the policy to a complete success.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, we are all impressed with the importance of the Indian question. I rise simply to dissent from some of the views which have been expressed by the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] especially in regard to the declaration which he makes that the policy of the Government with reference to the Indian tribes has been a success. It may have been temporarily successful, but that it will continue to do so I have not only doubts but convictions that it will all prove abortive in the end. How can it be a success? You speak of the civilization of the Indian, when the policy of the Government is to remove the Indian from the presence of civilization and corral him in the far West where there is no possibility for the cultivation of the soil, and where there is no possible hope of his ever changing the nature of the savage for that of the man of civilization. You put him there and surround him in his corral by soldiers, where his person, his property, his wife, his daughter, are held subject to the will of the soldier, away from the presence of civilization, and then come here and speak of the progress of the Government in civilizing the Indian.

The Indian, Mr. President, has moved from the presence of the white man from the day of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth Rock to the distance of twenty-five miles on a base of three thousand miles. We have gone to the shores of the Pacific; and now he stands corralled upon the desert plains of the far West. The army around him will by friction wear his tribe away till there will be none of them left; but as long as there is an Indian there and the policy of the Government is kept up, just so long will murders and outrages be here recorded as against the Indian tribes in the West. It cannot be otherwise. If the Government instead of having corralled the Indians would to-day give the Indian his land, his quarter-section or his eighty acres, in a district of country where he could cultivate it, and make that title inalienable for a period of twenty years, place him there in the presence of civilization, the white race would go there, the Indian would become civilized, and the question of the Indian tribes would be settled by and by.

In the State in which I live there are Indian tribes. Several hundred Indians reside in the State of Mississippi who refused to go west. They are not paupers there. They have not reached a high point of civilization; but they are peaceable citizens, not an outrage in all the land being perpetrated by an Indian.

Mr. SARGENT. What tribe?

Mr. ALCORN. The Choctaws. They have shown that the Indian is susceptible of civilization, not of being elevated to that high point of civilization that the Caucasian race obtains, but a civilization that will at least strip him of the habiliments of the savage; that he can be tamed in the presence of civilization. He is kept a savage where you place him back and surround him with soldiery.

But, Mr. President, I only rose to say that as far as the policy of the Government is concerned, it is not a success in my humble judgment. While it may have been temporarily successful, it will prove abortive in the end. I am here to vote appropriations. I think the policy is a bad one; nevertheless it seems to be the best we can do now. Therefore I will vote appropriations where they are necessary in the estimation of those who are better acquainted with the subject than myself. I come here to do whatever I can do in the cause of humanity and as a duty which the Government owes to these people, the traces of whose blood occupy every foot of ground we tread. The fate of the poor Indian is fixed as is the fate of all other nations that have stood in the face of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has opened a new field for discussion. The object of this bill is not to appropriate money for the civilization of the Indians at all. We are carrying out what he may well call a temporary policy. The object of the Government at this time is to take up the Indians as roving animals in Arizona and put them on reservations so that the country may be opened for the settlement of the white race. That is the only object; and to carry out that object it is necessary that we should provide him with the means of existence, which is food. That this is the proper way to civilize the Indians I do not see, and I myself do not believe it. I had the honor once of having charge of the Indian Bureau, and indeed I remained there as long as the Senate allowed me to remain, and when I was rejected I left. I made the subject a study. It occupied much of my attention, and my views are in print on that subject. They are fixed. They are fixed from the observation of a life-time in the West, having been much among the Indians and knowing them well. It is not in accordance with my policy that the Indians of Arizona should be driven to a small reservation where the land is poor, where it is impossible for them to make their subsistence by their own labor. It is not in accordance with my views at all; but that is an utterly different question from the one that is presented by the bill. The object here is merely to provide food to carry out the object of the Government, which may be temporary.

We talk of civilizing the Indians. It has been a matter talked about for many years, and gentlemen of intelligence speak of it without having much reflected upon what civilization is. The civilization of the white race has been extremely slow. That appears to be the law of humanity. We are progressing and civilizing ourselves now from day to day. How long after Cæsar landed upon the shores of Britain before the inhabitants of the British islands were civilized? For hundreds of years—a longer period of time than we have known the Indians—all those people remained in perfect barbarism. Civilization is of slow growth; it is the perfection of humanity; it necessarily must be slow. My idea of civilizing the Indian is to put him on large reservations of productive lands and give him the means of becoming a shepherd, of raising stock. For the first few years the stock that you will give him to raise he will destroy; he will not take care of them. But he will gradually learn the value of that stock as the white race learned their value, and he will begin to raise food for the stock; and raise one cow, and then two, and then three, and so on, until he will become a great stock-raiser, which is the first step in civilization. Then put a hoe in his hand, put an ax in his hand; keep away the schoolmaster; do not build academies; he is not prepared for them; and no race on earth is prepared to be educated until that nation is localized, until it begins to live in houses, until it ceases to be a nomadic people. You must localize it, teach it how to work, give it habits of industry, before you can educate it. We have been attempting for many years and have spent vast sums of money to educate Indians. It is nonsense; it has not been a success. What can an educated Indian do among Indians? Suppose you took one of these Apache Indians and had him educated at Yale College, what could he do after he got his education? Going back to the Apache Indians, what could he do there? He would have lost the manly habits of his forefathers; he could no longer be a warrior. What would his knowledge of Latin and Greek and the sciences avail him among the Apaches, or Cheyennes, or Arapahos, or Snakes, or Diggers, or any of those tribes? He would be a lost Indian. I have known many such, and an educated Indian is ex necessitate a thief and a robber. There is no opening to him; no avenue. He is no longer a hunter, he is no longer a warrior; he is an educated Indian. He has no use for education; he cannot be a lawyer, or a doctor, or a merchant, or a member of Congress, or anything else. He is just a perfectly useless man among his own people. You must elevate the entire tribe, which is a slow work.

I make these desultory remarks in answer to the argument advanced by the Senator from Mississippi. The object of this bill is not to civilize Indians. That is not what we aim to accomplish by it. If that were the object, we are not using the proper means. I do not believe the Apache Indians are on the proper reservations in Arizona to-day. I think there location is a mistake. Time may correct it. Their reservations should be selected of fruitful land. Such I understand is not the character of their present reservations. Therefore I do not think they are on proper reservations; but they are there; they are at peace; and while they are there, having been brought there by the power of this Government, they must be fed, so that that country may be at peace and be opened to settlement by the white race. That is the extent of this bill, the extent of what we aim to accomplish, and nothing more.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, when the deficiency bill was before the Senate I did what I could in a reasonable way to prevent what I thought was an extravagant appropriation. I do not desire to prevent the expenditure of a single dollar that may be necessary to collect the Indians on reservations for the purpose of peace and for the purpose of their civilization. I believe in their capacity to receive instruction, elevation, civilization, and American citizenship; and I intend to vote at this session of Congress, if we shall succeed in getting it before the Senate, for the bill now on the Calendar admitting Indians, under certain conditions provided in the bill, to American citizenship.

I have been much pleased with the character of the remarks of the Senator from Missouri. They are very liberal in a general sense. I think he is something of a disbeliever in the capacity of the Indians for civilization and citizenship. I have adopted the other theory of belief. I think the only solution for the difficulty of the American Indian tribes to-day is to lift them up, as we have lifted up the colored race, to American citizenship, or extermination. There is not so much as the breadth of one hair of middle ground left between the two destinies for them.

Sir, I have not only sympathy for the colored race, but I have sympathy for the Indian race—true American sympathy; and I believe that they are now on the road to elevation and to citizenship. In the State of New York, in the State of Kansas, in the Indian Territory, in the State of Indiana, in the State of Michigan, in the State of Mississippi, in ten or twelve States in this Union, we have abundant proof of their desire for information and of their ability to receive civilization and the necessary instruction to become American citizens.

[At this point a delegation of Indians entered the gallery.]

Mr. BOGY. Here they are now; you had better be careful of what you say. [Laughter.]

Mr. OGLESBY. I welcome them with all my heart to the embrace of the Senators who oppose the doctrine I advocate. [Laughter.]

It does not follow, however, Mr. President, because the sentiment of our country is now in this direction, because we are adopting a peace policy and an elevating policy toward the Indian, that we should make extravagant appropriations for that purpose. I ask you, sir, what is the difference to-day between the wild, roving Apache Indian in Arizona Territory and the civilized Indian in the Indian Territory? Take the Creeks, the Seminoles, the Cherokees, the Choctaws, the Osages, who have gone lately from Kansas to the Indian Territory; the Seneca tribe of Indians in New York; the Mission Indians of South California, and many others that I could name who have been elevated and advanced, and they are altogether a different race from the Apache Indians of New Mexico. But it does not follow because we have adopted the policy of feeding these Indians and putting them on reservations that therefore money is to be voted out of the national Treasury at the mere beck, will, and request of men who spend it right and left without accountability. Nine hundred and fifty or nine hundred and sixty thousand dollars have already been voted at this session for a deficiency for that little band of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico. I believe to-day, on any just count that can possibly be made, there are not seven thousand men, women, and children of the Apache tribes and all the branches of the tribes, the bands, and subdivisions of them, in New Mexico and Arizona. What are the evidences to-day from Major Powell and from Mr. INGALLS in making searching investigations into the tribes of Indians in Colorado, Nevada, and Utah? It was supposed there were thirty-five or forty thousand Indians there, and yet an absolute count brings them down to eleven thousand, and that is all they could find alive on the top of the earth.

Mr. SARGENT. Where was that?

Mr. OGLESBY. In the western portion of Colorado and in the eastern portion of Nevada and Utah Territory. The report of Major Powell has been printed and is before us.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think anybody ever put the number higher than that.

Mr. OGLESBY. They were put at from thirty-five to forty thousand.

Mr. SARGENT. Not by the census. I should think it rather an exaggeration.

Mr. OGLESBY. When the count came to be made, and the report has been made and published, it turned out that there were less than eleven thousand of them. We are guessing about the number of these Indians in Arizona Territory. We are guessing about the number of them in New Mexico. What does the Delegate from the Territory of New Mexico tell you now? That there is perfect peace in all the Territory of New Mexico; that the Apaches give them no trouble. Nearly all the Apaches in Arizona Territory are now on reservations. They are not such bad reservations as I had been led to suppose up to two or three days ago. The reservations they are on, as I am told by the Delegate from Arizona, are capable in some sense of supporting the Indians if they will work.

Mr. President, when these Apache Indians are got together in Arizona or New Mexico, or any other tribe of Indians are gathered together in the far western Territories or in the interior Territories of the Union and brought upon reservations, it is not expected that they are to sit down in laziness and idleness and do nothing. It is their duty to get to work the first day they arrive on the reservation. These Apache Indians have been in a civilized country all their lives. They have been upon the border of Mexico, and there are a great many white people scattered all over Arizona. It is a genial climate. It requires but little industry to cultivate the soil and the simplest and crudest agriculture. Are they to lay off in the shade and to be fed with a spoon by the Indian agent with this corn meal and bran flour and oatmeal flour, and beef, and do nothing? Are the Indians to be taught that they are to lie there in idleness from year to year and receive $750,000 a year simply for feeding them? How much do they require to be clothed? How have they been clothed heretofore when roaming over the Territory? When they have had to depend upon their own exertions you can imagine very well what their raiment has been and what their food has been. They had no such sustenance afforded to them ever before as the Government has given them during the last three years. There is not a buffalo in the country; there is scarcely any game except a big rabbit or so, a few horn-toads, lizards, snakes, and now and then a fat grasshopper, and that has been the diet of these Apache Indians. They are now taken care of by the Government and fed on beef that is easily obtained from New Mexico and Texas at a cheap rate. With an appropriation of $500,000, instead of $750,000, every Apache on the reservations can have a pound of beef every day, and a pound of flour and the necessary salt, vinegar, pepper, and other Indian condiments that go to make their diet agreeable and digestible. [Laughter.]

We are making liberal appropriations for these Indians; I think too liberal. The House sent this bill here containing an appropriation of $350,000 for the Apaches in Arizona. The Senate Committee on Appropriations think they ought to raise it $200,000 more for those Indians. The House of Representatives sent us an appropriation of $100,000 for the Apaches in New Mexico. Our committee think they ought to raise it to $150,000. Instead of taking the appropriation of $450,000, as provided in the House bill, we propose to add on $250,000 more, making $700,000 for the next fiscal year. We have just appropriated $960,000 to pay back bills contracted by these agents. The supplies had all been furnished and those were accounts against the Government.

Now, sir, I do not intend or desire to interrupt the policy of the President and the policy of the American people, the policy which the Senator from Missouri wisely and forcibly approves, for that is the line which I intend to travel in, the pacific line, the line which will take the Indians from the Territories, break up the different tribes, put them on reservations, give them good homes, and start them on the road of American civilization. That is my policy with regard to the Indians. I have faith in their elevation. I believe they will not be exterminated. I believe the race will thrive and grow and become a part of American society and of the American people. That is the destiny that I prefer for them.

But, sir, it does not follow that we are to make these extravagant appropriations. I should like to have these Indian agents understand that for once they must keep within the appropriations made by Congress. Let them try to get along this year with the sum the House propose, and see whether we shall have a war or not. I predict that there will be no war and no trouble; the Indian will be fed and taken care of on the reservations as I believe. I am not capable of proving this; I cannot demonstrate it; but I reason about it, and I believe it is the correct course to pursue with regard to them.

These Indian agents and the managers of these Indian tribes in Arizona and New Mexico should be taught that, while the Government is willing to pursue the policy that we are advancing upon, we intend to pursue it economically, in the interest of the Indian alone, and not in the interest of anybody else. We do our duty if we give him coarse food, cheap food, but enough to keep him from running off the reservation. Abundance of food is not what keeps an Indian on the reservation. His natural disposition to hunt, his natural disposition to roam, will take him off the reservation, because that feeling that was born in him cannot be entirely eradicated in an hour, or a month, or a year, and I fear not for years to come. It is owing to his disposition to roam. It is not because he is not fed and kindly treated. Where is there an Indian reservation in the United States to-day on which the Indians have not been kindly treated, and yet how many Indians go off the reservations every year?

You have reports here now from the Indian Territory in regard to the Osage Indians or the Blanket Indians, asking you to make some further appropriation to them out of the trust fund that we hold to their credit, that they may be kept there, kept from their disposition to wander. It is not because they are not fed, not because they are not clothed, but because they have a disposition to wander on the plains when the hunting season comes. It is just so with the Apache Indians in Arizona, just so with the Apaches in New Mexico.

I should like very much to see this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations rejected. I should like to stand for this year on the House appropriation and see if we cannot get along on that. Let these Indian agents understand that we intend to keep a check upon them; that they must make cheap and reasonable contracts, and I venture the assertion that the Indians will be all kept on the reservations, and you will find more of them there than are there now.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not desire to prolong the general discussion of this subject, but only to refer to one or two matters of fact stated by the honorable Senator from Illinois. His statement is that we appropriated in the deficiency bill $950,000 for these Indians. If that were a correct statement of the facts it would be the strongest possible argument in favor of the larger amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations in this bill, for if it required that much last year, certainly $700,000 cannot be an excess this year. The Senator, however, is mistaken in his figures. The total amount of deficiencies appropriated in that bill was somewhere near $950,000, $500,000 of which was for 1874, and $420,000 for 1873. The $950,000, therefore, spoken of includes the deficiencies for two years.

One other fact in reference to our expenditures for these particular tribes. In 1873——

Mr. OGLESBY. I beg the Senator's pardon; when I said that over $950,000 had been appropriated by the deficiency bill, I meant for the years 1873 and 1874.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not know that the Senator so understood it.

Mr. OGLESBY. O, yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. In 1873 we appropriated for these same Indians $824,000; for 1874, the present fiscal year, $750,000; and for the next fiscal year, under the bill as recommended by the Senate committee, we propose $700,000; so that the Senate will see we are decreasing as rapidly as we can.

When I first took the floor in answer to objections to this amendment I stated that there were seventy-three hundred of these Indians on the reservation. That statement was made from my memory of information received from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and from the reports of the Department; but I find upon a careful inquiry and revision of the estimate that there are over ninety-five hundred of these Indians as shown by the report. The Senator from Illinois thinks we are very much mistaken in the number, because the Indians of Colorado, I believe it was, were once very much overestimated. There never was any censustaken of the Indians in Colorado; they were guessed at; and these Indians in Arizona, as I am informed, were formerly guessed at at sixteen thousand, but their numbers are now actually known. They receive their rations upon roll-call. The officers in charge call the roll and the Indians appear and receive their rations; so that it is very easy to ascertain what the actual number is, and it is stated to be ninety-five hundred.

Mr. President, an appropriation of $700,000 for that number of Indians will give about seventy-four dollars per annum for each Indian, or at the rate of twenty cents per day. My honorable friend from Illinois, whose sympathies gush not only for the negro, but for the red man, certainly will not argue before the Senate that twenty cents a day to feed Indians in that distant country, where everything is expensive, where transportation costs so immensely, is a very exaggerated sum. I do not believe we can possibly get along for a less sum.

I believe also, as has been stated by others, that the amount we appropriate for these Indians is an economical appropriation. I believe it is a just appropriation. The policy of this Government hitherto has been to make treaties with the Indians, and this bill, as stated by the Senator from California, is full of appropriations under treaties, to pay interest on moneys belonging to Indians, to pay amounts stipulated under treaties; but in this case in Arizona we took possession of the whole of that Territory and made no contracts or agreements or treaties whatever with the Indian tribes. We simply took forcible possession, and now dole out to them this pittance at the rate of twenty cents per day to keep them from starvation. At no time has any treaty been made with the Apaches.

I have nothing further to say on this amendment.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I do not know that there is any part of the Indian service more expensive than that connected with the removal of the Apache Indians; but it appears to me there are very good reasons for it. The transportation is farther than that of almost any other tribe or nation. They are situated on the borders of Mexico; they wander into Mexico; and if the agents attempt to bring them together for the purpose of removing them to their reservations, they are often obliged to go hundreds of miles into Mexico for the purpose of securing ten or twenty of the Indians. As a matter of course, that is a very expensive operation.

Again, the citizens of Mexico who live on the borders make raids within the territories of the United States; and they like to have the Indians there to charge these raids upon them. They are opposed to the removal of the Indians, and that obstacle is very much in the way and increases the expense of removing these Indians.

Mr. INGALLS. Is not the Senator aware that the entire expense of collecting and removing these Indians is incurred under the military authorities of the country, and is not chargeable to this appropriation bill at all?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. No; I was not aware that it was altogether under the military appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. It is entirely under the control of the military authorities.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I was not aware of that. Is that a fact that they are gathering them in?

Mr. INGALLS. And for that purpose, as I have before stated this morning, there are four regiments of troops stationed in those two Territories, two of cavalry and two of infantry.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Do not the agents labor to bring the Indians together in certain places of rendezvous, for the purpose of transporting them?

Mr. INGALLS. The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows that that entire duty is discharged by the military authorities, that the Indians are collected and placed on reservations by troops stationed there for that purpose.

Mr. SARGENT. If my honorable friend from Connecticut will allow me, that is absolutely necessary where you are dealing with savages. In Arizona you are dealing with a very peculiar class. The Senator himself would not find his scalp safe an hour if he started out with civilians simply to bring in wild Apaches. The military are those who hunt them up and put them on reservations, and then they are turned over to the civil officers, and this expenditure commences.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will pardon me, I was not doubting the wisdom or feasibility of that method of taking care of the Indians. I was merely making a suggestion in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut, that the expense of removing and collecting Indians was included in the appropriation bill we are now considering.

Mr. SARGENT. I was simply remarking that you cannot handle that dangerous element except with the mailed hand; you must use force.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I merely wished to justify the appropriation which is made in this bill by the committee, on the ground that it is a more expensive operation to collect and transport the Apache Indians to their reservations than any others. It is a more expensive service, and being a more expensive service, it must as a matter of course fail unless we make a larger appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I listened to the remarks of the honorable Senator from Kansas, and am not at all surprised at the view he takes of the general expensiveness of this Indian service. It has nearly doubled since 1867. In order to understand whether it is reasonable or unreasonable you need to consider what has taken place in regard to the Indian service since that period. We are very much in the habit of dealing with the Indians as it is said some people do with their poor relations—regard everything done for them as so much thrown away.

But, Mr. President, this bill appropriates about $6,000,000. Four millions of it is not an appropriation in any sense of the word except in the sense of paying our obligations to the Indians. I ask Senators to set that down as one prominent feature in this appropriation bill. We are simply appropriating what we owe to the Indians to that amount. Prior to the year 1860, when the war broke out, that was about the amount we appropriated for the Indian service. Before that time our arrangements with the Indians had been principally through treaty stipulations, and an Indian appropriation bill was simply to provide for the treaty stipulations, and therefore the Appropriation Committee had simply the moderate service on its hand of ascertaining what the treaty stipulations were. But during the late civil war great disturbances arose in the Indian country. We had wars—very expensive wars. During that period our population penetrated every nook and corner of the continent. There was no reservation that they did not go to; there was no unexplored territory that was not explored. Mean time, it will be recollected, we had chartered three or four—three certainly—transcontinental railways, and the prospectors and explorers and surveyors of those roads with their parties were out in that country. We had no treaty stipulations with those Indians, and in 1867 the whole Indian country west of the Missouri River was in arms, and we were in danger of a universal Indian war.

Now, let it be understood that we own all those possessions. We have dispossessed the Indian everywhere on this continent except as to certain reservations on which we have driven him. We have repudiated the idea of further treaties with him. We have said to him, "You must go on certain reservations that we indicate and you must stay there," and if he does not remain there we hold that he is an outlaw and may be shot. It will be seen, then, that without treaty stipulations and without bargain we had taken the whole domain west of the Missouri River, except the reservations which have been temporarily set aside for the residence of the Indian, pledging ourselves to feed him and aid him in supporting himself on those limited reservations.

Now comes in this new feature of the bill, appropriations such as we have here, to feed the Indians. It is an indefinite, uncertain service. We cannot tell precisely the amount it will take in a given year. Take the Apaches, the case before us. Last year there were very few of these Indians comparatively on the reservations. This year I am told we have between six and seven thousand, with the prospect of many more.

Mr. SARGENT. Nine thousand.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Nine thousand on the reservations, and they are all at peace. Does anybody doubt that it costs us less to take care of them on the reservations at peace and feed them than it would to hunt them? Nobody will deny that. My honorable friend from Kansas states a fact which furnishes the contrast to this peace policy, and explains a great deal of what is apparently in controversy here. For several years we have had four regiments of troops in Arizona and New Mexico. I do not suppose there are much more than half that number there now; but for many years, to protect the few white people in those Territories, we have had stationed there three or four regiments, costing for their maintenance from a million to a million and a quarter a regiment. They have done nothing but hunt these Indians, the Indians constantly growing worse, of course, as they were hunted, committing murders and depredations of all kinds.

Now, we have changed that. These Indians have gone upon certain reservations, and we have agreed to feed them there, to take care of them. I agree with my honorable friend from Illinois that we ought to practice the utmost economy in regard to it, but we must do enough to encourage these people to stay upon the reservations. In other words, we must take care to feed them so that they will not have an excuse or an incentive to go abroad to hunt. So in this change of policy it is easy to account for the increase in this appropriation bill from four millions to six or seven millions; and it is easy to account for it without supposing we are making any sacrifice at all. We hardly stop to consider whether there is any Indian side to this question, as some Senator has very aptly said. There is an Indian side to it, and that Indian side is this: that in the last six or eight years we have dispossessed the Indian everywhere on this continent; we have forced him on to small reservations, and there we oblige him to stay and receive precisely what we choose to dole out to him. Under those circumstances it does not become us to be very grudging, nor does it become us to be stinted in the means we appropriate. We should make them ample to the end that the Indians may be kept quietly on the reservations.

I make these general observations not more in application to this particular item than to the whole range of the increase of this bill. It grows out of the general fact in the change of our policy that we have ceased to make treaty stipulations, that we have now required the Indian to abandon his hunting grounds everywhere, to go upon limited reservations and there to accept the peace policy, to undertake to provide for himself, we on our side pledging that we will do what we can to aid him in the way of civilizing himself and becoming self-supporting.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish to prolong the debate; but I should like to have the Clerk read an extract from the Arizona Citizen of April 11, 1874, which I have here, for the purpose of showing that there is peace in Arizona, that the Indians are keeping their word, and that there is encouragement for Congress to continue to carry out the system which we have adopted during the past two or three years. I will state that this paper was one of the most malignant opponents of this system, but seems now to be thoroughly converted.

The Chief Clerk read the following from the Arizona Citizen of April 11, 1874:

The prospect for peace seems now quite encouraging. The Hualpais, from whom a long and protracted war was feared by many, have nearly or quite all surrendered; some of the San Carlos Apaches have been killed and captured, and a good many have surrendered, and we have not heard of any depredations having been committed by them for several weeks. Lieutenants Schuyler, Bache, Reilly, London, and Captain Hamilton were still after those that are out, at last accounts, and the Indians are doubtless kept quite busy eluding their pursuers. If it had not been for the prompt and efficient action of General Crook we should no doubt have had a protracted Indian war. We have received no complaints from Sonora, for some time of Indian depredations in that section, and we hope the Cochise Apaches will continue to keep on this side of the line and behave as well as they now appear to be doing. The Territory is rapidly filling up with horses, cattle, and sheep, and if the Apaches are kept in subjection it will not be long before our plains will be covered with domestic animals. It used to be charged by those who did not know or who wished to misrepresent us that we did not want peace, but one year of peace will add more substantial wealth to Arizona than twenty years of war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BOREMAN in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. WINDOM. We may as well have the yeas and nays in order to obtain a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it ought to be stated in justice to absent Senators that the reason why we have been without a quorum several times to-day is that Senators are absent in the service of the Senate and by order of the Senate. There are committees of conference and several other committees holding sessions during the session of the Senate by order of the Senate, and there are three Senators at least absent in the service of the Senate at West Point.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bogy, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Saulsbury, Tipton, Washburn, and Windom—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Conover, Edmunds, Hager, Harvey, Ingalls, Oglesby, Robertson, Sherman, Wadleigh, and Wright—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Brownlow, Cameron, Clayton, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Pease, Ransom, Schurz, Scott, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and West—34.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that debate on amendments to this bill be confined to five minutes, under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can be agreed to by unanimous consent if there is no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it necessary to give notice that I desire to reserve the amendment just adopted?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; you can reserve it when it comes into the Senate by stating it then.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we ought to have a short executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to give notice while the doors are being closed that I shall ask the Senate to resume the consideration of this bill to-day. I understand the executive session is for but a very few moments.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to amend the motion by adding "and daily thereafter until otherwise ordered."

The amendment was agreed to.

The motion, as amended, was agreed to.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 288) in reference to the carrying of freight and passengers on the Union Pacific Railroad and its branches, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 559) to enable the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to submit its claims against the United States under existing laws to the decision of the Supreme Court, reported adversely thereon, and moved the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I gave notice the other day that when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] called up the report of the Judiciary Committee on that subject I should move to substitute this bill for the bill proposed by the committee, and if the Senator from New York will permit me I should like this bill to go upon the Calendar that I may make that motion when the bill of the committee comes up for consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no objection, but I suggest to the Senator that this will have no influence whatever on his right in the other respect. There has been a report made on this subject, and therefore the committee ask to be discharged from this bill. The other bill relates to a subject on which the committee reported this morning; but this would not affect the Senator's right to offer an amendment when the other bill shall come up.

Mr. INGALLS. If I am not precluded from offering it as an amendment, I have no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all; if the Senator desires to move this as an amendment to any other bill at any other time, he can do so.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I withdraw the request that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. ANTHONY a member of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses in the concurrent resolution relative to dispensing with the enrollment on parchment of the bills revising the statutes, in the place of Mr. CONKLING, excused.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideratoin of the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the clause appropriating for the subsistence of the Arapaho, Cheyenne, Apache, Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita Indians, in line 210, to insert after the word "occupation" the words "in the Indian Territory;" in line 211 to increase the total from $250,000 to $300,000; so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence of the Arapaho, Cheyenne, Apache, Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita Indians, (and transportation of the same,) who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in the Indian Territory, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 10, to strike out the following proviso, commencing with line 215:

And provided further, That no troops shall be kept stationed on the reservation on which said Indians are located, but the northern line of Texas shall be guarded, so far as possible, so as to prevent the Indians from roaming into that State or the whites from intruding on the Indian reservations, except such troops as may be necessary to preserve order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 20, line 470, to increase the appropriation "for transportation of annuity goods and provisions, and iron and steel for blacksmiths, for the Chippewas of Red Lake and Pembina tribe" from $1,500 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Creeks, to insert after line 535 the following clause:

For educational purposes, per fifth article treaty of February 14, 1833, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 606, to increase the appropriation for furnishing flour and meat for the Crows from $50,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for completing the removal of the remaining Kickapoo and other American Indian tribes roving on the borders of Texas and Mexico, to reservations within the Indian Territory, to strike out the word "sixty" and to insert "seventy five" in line 740; so as to read, "that the expense of removing said Indians shall not exceed seventy-five dollars for each Indian removed to the reservation," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Navajos to increase from $20,000 to $34,470 in lines 861 and 862 the item for the fifth of ten installments, to be used in the purchase of such articles as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper, the sum of ten dollars to each person who engages in farming or mechanical pursuits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 886, in the appropriations for the Nez Percé Indians, in the item "for fifteenth of twenty installments for the employment of one superintendent of farming and two farmers, two millers, two blacksmiths, one tinner, one gunsmith, one carpenter, and one wagon and plow maker, per fifth article treaty of June 11, 1855," in line 886, from $7,000 to $9,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 889, in the appropriation for fifteenth of twenty installments for pay of physician for the Nez Percé Indians, to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 944, to increase from $12,000 to $20,000 the appropriation to the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahos, "for sixth of ten installments, to be expended, by the Secretary of the Interior, ten dollars for each Indian roaming, (estimated at eighteen hundred souls,) in the purchase of such articles as, from time to time, the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 947, in the appropriations for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahos, to reduce the amount of appropriations for the "pay of physician, teacher, carpenter, miller, farmer, blacksmith, and engineer," from $7,700 to $6,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 949, in the appropriations for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahos, to strike out the words "for last of four installments;" in lines 950 and 951, to strike out the words "per sixth article of treaty of May 10, 1868," and in line 951 to strike out "$36,000" and insert "$60,000;" so that the clause will read:

To furnish said Indians with flour and meat, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Osages, to insert after line 992 the following additional item:

For interest on $720,749, at 5 per cent. per annum, to be used for such objects as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, as per act of July 15, 1870, $36,037.45: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend, from the proceeds of the sale of lands of the Great and Little Osage Indians provided to be sold by section 12 of said act of July 15, 1870, the sum of $200,000 per annum for two years, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of stock and agricultural implements, opening farms, erection of houses, and for the civilization and support of the Osages and of their tribal government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1040, in the appropriations for the Pawnees, to increase the amount "for the employment of one matron, three teachers, and two assistant teachers, and providing the schools with fuel, books, and stationery" from $3,000 to $4,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso to the appropriations for the Pottawatomies, commencing in line 1111:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed and required, in paying out the several foregoing annuities, to pay to the Prairie band of said Pottawatomies that proportion of money which they are and were entitled to under the terms and stipulations of said several treaties and the settlement and agreement had and entered into by and between said Prairie band and the Citizens band of said Pottawatomies, entered into on the 18th of July, 1873, and the accounts of said bands shall be so adjusted as to give effect to said agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1183, in the appropriations for the Sacs and Foxes on the Mississippi, to insert at the end of the clause "for interest on $800,000 at 5 per cent., per second article treaty of October 11, 1842, $40,000, of which sum $1,200 shall be paid for a physician for the agency" the following words:

Who shall furnish the necessary medicines: Provided, That so much of the appropriation herein made for the Sacs and Foxes on the Mississippi as shall be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding 50 per cent, thereof, may be used under his direction for the purposes of education and civilization.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1204 to insert at the end of the appropriations for the Sacs and Foxes of Missouri the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of the appropriation herein made for the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri as shall be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior not exceeding 50 per cent. thereof, may be used under his direction for the purposes of education and civilization.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1331, in the appropriations for the Shoshones, to increase the amount of appropriation for the purchase of such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior for eighteen hundred persons at ten dollars each, and six hundred persons engaged in agriculture at twenty dollars each, from $25,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1335 and 1336, in the appropriations for the Shoshones, to increase the amount "for pay of physician, teacher, carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith" from $3,000 to $6,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1339, in the appropriations for the Shoshones, to increase the amount "for the purchase of seeds and farming implements" from $1,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1418, in the appropriations for the "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux in the State of Nebraska," to increase the amount "to purchase such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior for persons roaming and for persons engaged in agriculture" from $100,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1427, to reduce the amount appropriated "for the purchase of beef, flour, bacon, and sugar, in proportionate quantities for thirty thousand persons; and for subsistence of the Yankton Sioux and Poncas; and for purposes of civilization" from $1,200,000 to $1,100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1468, to increase the appropriation for the Sioux, Sisseton and Wahpeton, and Santee Sioux of Lake Traverse and Devil's Lake" from $75,000 to $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations "for colonizing and supporting the Wichitas and other affiliated bands," in line 1590, after the word "physician" to insert the words "and clerk;" in line 1591, after the word "dollars" to insert the word "each;" in the same line, after the word "blacksmith" to strike out the word "plasterer;" in line 1596, after the word "seamstress" to insert the word "two;" in the same line, to add to the word "cook" the letter "s;" and in the same line, after the word "cook" to insert "and one laundress;" so that the clause will read:

For this amount, to be expended in such goods, provisions, and other articles as the President may from time to time determine, including transportation thereof, in instructing in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, in providing employés, educating children, procuring medicine and medical attendance, care for and support of the aged, sick, and infirm, for the helpless orphans of said Indians, and in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement, (including pay of physician and clerk, $1,200 each; blacksmith, carpenter, sawyer, and head farmer, at $900 each per annum; and two assistant farmers, one matron, one mason, two teachers, at $600 each per annum; one engineer, $660; and one seamstress, two cooks, and one laundress, $600 each per annum,) $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1687 to increase from $50,000 to $75,000 the appropriation "for the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Arizona, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1698 to increase the appropriation "for the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, pay of employés, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior," from $40,000 to $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1699 to strike out the two following clauses:

That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to set aside a reservation for the Indians roaming in Northern California, upon which they may establish their homes and retain the same.

For agricultural purposes, an additional sum of $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1705, to insert the following:

Colorado Territory:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Colorado Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. We have followed the lead of the Senator from Minnesota now for about four hours on this bill, and as the hour of five o'clock has arrived, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WINDOM. I know it is out of order to discuss this motion; but if the Senator will permit us to sit ten or fifteen minutes longer we shall get through with the reading of the bill and the amendments of the committee. The rest of it is almost entirely formal. I hope he will withdraw his motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MERRIMON in the chair.) Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his motion?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not think it possible to get through with the bill in ten or fifteen minutes; but I withdraw the motion at the request of the Senator.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1743 to increase the appropriation "for the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior," from $15,000 to $25,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the committee to ask to withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

The next amendment was in line 1766 to reduce the appropriation for the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington Territory from $3,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1767 to strike out the word "Choholas" before "agencies," and to insert "Chehalis."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1788 to strike out the words "insurance and;" and in line 1791 to strike out the word "four" and to insert the word "five;" so as to make the clause read:

For transportation of annuities, and the necessary expenses of the delivery of the annuities and provisions to the Indian tribes in Minnesota and Michigan, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1791 to strike out the following clause:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of Indian delegations who may visit Washington on business connected with their respective tribes, $5,000: Provided, That no money shall be paid from any other fund for expenses of Indian delegations visiting Washington except from the contingent fund of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on line 1809, to increase the appropriations for the "civilization and subsistence of Indians on the Malheur reservation," in Oregon, from $20,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1862, to increase the appropriation "for subsisting and establishing the Otter-Tail Pillager band upon the White Earth reservation, Minnesota, in accordance with the act approved March 3, 1873, by which the right of said Indians has been secured to one township of land for reservation purposes," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1870, to insert at the end of the clause appropriating $15,000 "for the removal and establishment of the Pembina band of Chippewa Indians upon the White Earth reservation, Minnesota, in accordance with the act approved March 3, 1873," the words "to be available immediately."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the next clause of the bill, commencing with line 1872, as follows:

Pay and expenses of three commissioners to make appraisements: For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a commission provided for by section 2 of the act approved March 3, 1873, to make an examination of the country proposed for the location of the Round Valley reservation, and to make an appraisement of all improvements of white persons north of said boundary of the reservation, $4,000.

Mr. SARGENT. I must confess to my friend who has charge of this bill that I had not noticed that item in the bill when the bill was before the committee. It must have come up in my absence. I should like to hear an explanation of it. If that means for another commission to be sent there, then I object. If it simply means to pay the expenses of the commission that went there and performed the work, I do not object.

Mr. WINDOM. That is what it does mean.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well. In that case I withdraw the objection.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1885, to insert before the word "necessary" the words "actual and;" so that the clause will read:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the actual and necessary traveling expenses of five Indian inspectors provided for by section 6 of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for the fiscal year 1874, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause from line 1916 to 1956:

For this amount, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the children of the Delaware Indians who became citizens of the United States under the provisions of the ninth article of the Delaware treaty of July 4, 1866, and the children of Betsey Zeigler, who died before completing her citizenship under the provisions of said article, their proportionate share of the money and stocks held in trust by the United States for the Delaware tribe of Indians, $54,514.23, of which $21,448.07 shall be deducted from the money credits of said tribe, and $33,066.16, to be taken equitably from their several kinds of stock, shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury and become the property of the United States: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall so determine, the whole amount hereby appropriated shall be taken from the money-credits of the tribe, the Secretary of the Interior to designate the funds from which said amounts shall be taken: Provided, That in the case of deceased persons, the Secretary of the Interior shall make payment to their legal representatives; and said Delaware children are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause patents to issue in fee-simple to said persons for the lands allotted to them; and in case of the decease of any of said persons, the said patents shall issue in the names of such deceased persons, including the said Betsey Zeigler, and the title to the lands designated in such patents shall inure to and become vested in the heirs, devisees, or assignees of said deceased patentees, as if the patent had issued to the deceased person during life; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to be issued in fee-simple in the names of Barbara Zeigler, Martha Zeigler, Samuel Ketchum, Nathan S. Tublow, and Francis H. Ginter, who belonged to the families of the citizen class, and who died prior to the census of said Indians made by the agent under the provisions of the treaty of July 4, 1866, for the lands allotted to them; and the lands designated in such patents shall inure to and become vested in the heirs, devisees, or assignees of said deceased patentees, as if the patent had issued to the deceased person during life.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that that amendment be passed over for the present. I have some explanation to make that I think will convince the Senate that that provision should be retained in the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to the Senator to allow it to be adopted now and then reserve it and take a separate vote upon it in the Senate, and then we could receive any information the Senator may desire to impart to us on the subject. That will give an opportunity to have a vote of the Senate upon it.

Mr. INGALLS. It is immaterial to me how it is disposed of if I have an opportunity of presenting my views to the Senate to show that the proviso should be retained, as I think it ought to be.

Mr. SARGENT. Let it be stricken out now, and then it can be acted upon again in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I object to its being agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The suggestion of the Senator from California is that we allow it to pass——

Mr. INGALLS. That is what I suggested, to allow it to pass for the present.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The suggestion of the Senator from California is to allow it to be adopted now, and the Senator from Kansas can reserve the right in the Senate to make his explanation and then have a vote of the Senate upon it, the object being to get the bill out of committee into the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no preference as to what disposition is made of it, provided I have the right to explain this provision to the Senate and can have a vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the Senator can express his views on the motion to concur in the amendment when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator can reserve this amendment in the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well, then; I give notice that I shall reserve this amendment in the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following proviso after line 1970, at the end of the clause appropriating $3,350 for interest on the Pottawatomies' educational fund:

Provided, That the sum of $1,500 may be expended, with the consent of said Indians, for a physician, who shall furnish medicines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2 to strike out the word "such" in line 9; in the same line, after the word "examinations," to strike out the words "and duties" and to insert the words "of vouchers and accounts;" and in lines 11, 12, 13, and 14 to strike out the words "except that when said board shall deem it necessary, for the more prompt examination of said vouchers, they may direct their executive committee to hold its sessions for such purpose in the cities of Philadelphia or New York;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, is hereby appropriated; and said board of Indian commissioners is hereby continued with all the powers and duties conferred and imposed by existing laws. And all examinations of vouchers and accounts shall hereafter be performed in the city of Washington. But nothing herein provided shall be construed to supersede or interfere with the duty heretofore imposed upon said board of commissioners to visit Indian agencies and inspect the vouchers, books, and papers thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, line 13, after the words "provided that" to strike out the following words:

If there are any tribes or parts of tribes so wild and ungovernable as that such policy cannot be enforced, the Secretary of the Interior may, by written order, except such Indians; and.

So that the section will read:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of inducing Indians to labor and become self-supporting, it is hereby provided that in distributing the supplies to the Indians for whom the same are appropriated, the agent distributing the same shall require all able-bodied male Indians, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, to perform service upon the reservation, for the benefit of themselves or of the tribe, at a reasonable rate, to be fixed by the agent in charge, and to an amount equal in value to the supplies to be delivered. And the allowances provided for such Indians shall be distributed to them only upon condition of the performance of such labor, under such rules and regulations as the agent may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, by written order, except any particular tribe from the operation of this provision where he deems it proper and expedient.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following additional proviso at the end of section 3:

Provided also, That a sum not exceeding 33 per cent. of the cash annuities herein appropriated may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be expended for the purposes of educating and civilizing the tribes to which the funds belong: And provided further, That this discretion in the use of funds shall not apply to the national funds of the Cherokee, Creek, Seminole, Choctaw, and Chickasaw Nations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 4 to insert after the word "dollars," in line 6, the words "unless expressly authorized by the Secretary of the Interior;" and in line 11, after the word "their," to strike out the words "annual or;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 4. That none of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used to pay salaries or allowances of any kind to employés at agencies except where it is expressly appropriated for such purpose; excepting the contingent fund and the incidental fund, and except in cases herein otherwise provided, not more than $6,000, unless expressly authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid for the salaries of employés at any one agency, in addition to the salary of the agent and interpreter, and not more at any agency than is absolutely necessary; and Indian agents shall be required to state, under oath, upon rendering their quarterly accounts, that the number of employés claimed for were actually and bona fide employed at the agency and at the salary claimed; and that such agent does not directly or indirectly, receive any part of the compensation claimed for any other employé, or any pecuniary benefit therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section 4 the following proviso:

Provided, That where there is no officer in the vicinity of an agency who is authorized to administer oaths, the Secretary of the Interior may direct such returns to be made under the certificate of the agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 2, to strike out the words "any portion of;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 5. That none of the appropriations herein made shall be paid to any band of Indians while such band is at war with the United States or with the white citizens of any of the States or Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following proviso at the end of section 6:

Provided, That hereafter all bidders under any advertisement published by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for proposals for goods, supplies, transportation, and so forth, for and on account of the Indian service, whenever the value of the goods, supplies, and so forth to be furnished, or the transportation to be performed, shall exceed the sum of $5,000, shall accompany their bids with a certified check or draft, payable to the order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon some United States depository or solvent national bank, which check or draft shall be 5 per cent. on the amount of the goods, supplies, transportation, and so forth, as aforesaid; and in case any such bidder, on being awarded a contract, shall fail to execute the same with good and sufficient sureties according to the terms on which such bid was made and accepted, such bidder shall forfeit the amount so deposited to the United States, and the same shall forthwith be paid into the Treasury of the United States; but if such contract shall be duly executed as aforesaid, such draft or check so deposited shall be returned to the bidder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section 7 the words "except by written permission of the Secretary of the Interior;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 7. That for the purpose of properly distributing the supplies appropriated for in this act, it is hereby made the duty of each agent in charge of Indians and having supplies to distribute to make out rolls of the Indians entitled to supplies at the agency, with the names of the Indians and of the heads of families or lodges, with the number in each family or lodge, and to give out supplies to the heads of families, and not to the heads of tribes or bands, and not to give out supplies for a greater length of time than one week in advance, except by written permission of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was section 8, line 8, after the words "named," to insert "and shall be available immediately;" in line 9 to strike out the words "provided that" and to insert in lieu the word "and;" in line 10, after the word "dollars," to strike out the word "he" and to insert in lieu the word "is;" and in lines 11 and 12 to strike out the words "and provided further," so that the section will read:

SEC. 8. That the sum of $24,480.86, being the unexpended balance of an appropriation of "$40,000 to carry on the work of aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization with a view to their self-support," made by act of March 3, 1871, is hereby reappropriated and may be expended for the purpose named, and shall be available immediately; and the sum of $10,000 is appropriated for the support of schools in the central superintendency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to change the second proviso of the eighth section into an additional section, as follows:

SEC. 9. That the several appropriations here made for teachers, millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulations, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of various Indian tribes, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress at the next session thereafter of his action under this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest that section [9,] 10, line 4, would read better if the word "present" were stricken out and the word "near" inserted; so as to read:

That no agent or employé of the United States Government, or of any of the Departments thereof, while in the service of the Government, shall have any interest, directly or indirectly, contingent or absolute, near or remote, in any contract made, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the amendment at this time if there be no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section [10,] 11, line 4, to insert after the word "Indians" the words "to be available immediately;" so as to read:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,000 for the support and relief of the Otoe and Missouri tribe of Indians, to be available immediately; this amount to be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in rebuilding agency buildings in place of those recently destroyed by fire, and for the support of the destitute Indians of said tribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [11,] 12, line 3, to strike out the word "September" and insert in lieu thereof the word "November;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior cause to be prepared and delivered to the Public Printer by the 1st day of November, 1874, a tabular statement of the items paid out of the appropriations made for the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1874, each item being placed under the appropriation from which it was paid in such manner as to show the disposition made of each appropriation and the amount unexpended of each, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 1, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing. The morning hour begins at fifteen minutes after eleven o'clock.

EDGAR BRODHEAD.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3538) to provide for the appointment of Edgar Brodhead on the active list of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF TARIFF LAWS.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3539) to admit free of duty merchandise sunk for two years and afterward recovered; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGET T. HOPPER.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3540) granting a pension to Bridget T. Hopper; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY SCHINLEY.

Mr. MYERS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3541) granting a pension to Mary Schinley, widow of Michael Schinley, Company E, First Pennsylvania Volunteers, Mexican war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MOSES LACEY.

Mr. WHITEHEAD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3542) for the relief of Moses Lacey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN S. CHAPMAN.

Mr. DARRALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3543) for the relief of John S. Chapman, late collector of internal revenue, second district State of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEADS IN ALABAMA, LOUISIANA, ETC.

Mr. DARRALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3544) to amend an act entitled "An act for the disposal of public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida," approved June 21, 1866; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LAWRENCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3545) concerning the District of Columbia and to provide for the future government thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Joint Select Committee on Affairs in the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I introduce this bill by request of a gentleman of the District, who prepared it. He is a gentleman of talents and of large experience in the affairs of the District.

Mr. BECK. I call for the reading of the bill in full.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is very long.

Mr. BECK. Then it will do very well to consume the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I will make a proposition which, if adopted, will save time. I move that as soon as the States have been called through for bills and joint resolutions motions to suspend the rules shall immediately be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent that instead of the morning hour being consumed by dilatory motions, motions to suspend the rules shall be in order as soon as the States are called through for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions. This proposition, if adopted, will save probably forty-five minutes.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

SCIENTIFIC BOOKS AND APPARATUS FREE OF DUTY.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3546) to admit free of duty photographic and lithographic prints and philosophical apparatus, and books and instruments of scientific research imported for educational and scientific purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN SNOW.

Mr. BANNING also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3547) granting a pension to John Snow; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY E. MELINE.

Mr. BANNING also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3548) granting a pension to Mary E. Meline, widow of James F. Meline, late major and additional aid-de-camp United States Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3549) to declare the true intent and meaning of an act approved March 2, 1869, entitled "An act to provide a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. MORRISON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3550) amendatory of an act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MAJOR J. W. NICHOLS.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3551) for the relief of Major J. W. Nichols, paymaster United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 106) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for election of Senators by the people of the several States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AUGUSTUS JONES.

Mr. HERNDON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3552) for the relief of Augustus Jones, of Colorado County, Texas, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

V. I. STIRMAN.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3553) for the relief of V. I. Stirman, postmaster at Kaufman, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

INTERCHANGE OF TRAFFIC.

Mr. NESMITH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3554) to regulate interchange of traffic between connecting railroads in the Territories of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

APPROVAL OF ACT OF COLORADO.

Mr. CHAFFEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3555) approving an act of the Legislative Assembly of Colorado Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM NO. 45.

Mr. CHAFFEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3556) to confirm private land claim No. 45 in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM NO. 39.

Mr. CHAFFEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3557) to confirm private land claim No. 39, in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMANTS.

Mr. CHAFFEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3558) for the relief of private land claimants in New Mexico, as to survey and plat and confirmed grant; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. CHAFFEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3559) for the relief of certain persons in New Mexico for depredations committed by Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3560) for the relief of certain persons in New Mexico for depredations committed by Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3561) for the relief of certain persons in New Mexico for depredations committed by Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now entertain motions for reference of bills by gentlemen who were not present when their States were called.

WARRIOR AND TENNESSEE RIVERS RAILROAD.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3562) to grant public lands to the State of Alabama to aid in the construction of the Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. BUCKNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3563) to amend an act "to appropriate lands for the support of schools in certain townships and fractional townships not before provided for," approved May 20, 1826; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ANN E. MILLER.

Mr. McNULTA introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3564) to grant a pension to Ann E. Miller; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM SIGLER.

Mr. LOWNDES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3565) for the relief of William Sigler, of Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES MILLENGER.

Mr. RANDALL (on behalf of Mr. O'NEILL) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3566) for the relief of James Millenger, of New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY H. KAISER.

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3567) granting a pension to Henry H. Kaiser; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RUFUS ROSS.

Mr. PHILLIPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3568) for the relief of Rufus Ross; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS TO VOTE.

Mr. STOWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3569) to amend an act approved February 28, 1871, entitled "An act to amend an act approved May 31, 1870, entitled 'An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union, and for other purposes;'" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF CANE RIVER.

Mr. SMITH, of Louisiana, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3570) making an appropriation for the improvement of Cane River, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION OF RED RIVER.

Mr. SMITH, of Louisiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. No. 3571) making an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Red River, below Shreveport, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY WARREN.

Mr. GIDDINGS, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Texas, instructing and requesting the congressional delegation from that State to urge upon Congress the speedy reimbursement of Henry Warren for losses incurred by reason of the destruction of a wagon train and other property by the Comanche, Kiowa, and Cheyenne Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and orered to be printed.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. TREMAIN. I desire that the House shall order a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 792) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereto. I move that the rules be suspended for that purpose.

Mr. POLAND. I suppose the first question would be on concurring in the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. It would be.

Mr. POLAND. I do not believe that the House could do better than concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. TREMAIN. I disagree with the gentleman entirely. I think we can do better by amending the Senate amendments than by concurring in them.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not think there have been any conversions here since the bill was before the House in the first instance, when the House expressed its opinion by a vote.

Mr. POLAND. It strikes me that the House is not in a condition to ask a committee of conference until the amendments of the Senate shall be considered in the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TREMAIN. I object to any discussion of the merits. I insist on the rule.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from New York, if he desires to call up the question to-day, will allow debate on it.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read.

The amendments were read.

Mr. TREMAIN. I withdraw the motion to suspend the rules, and as I have a right to report at any time upon this bill, I move the previous question upon the question of concurring in the amendments of the Senate. Several gentlemen have asked me to explain the report.

Mr. POLAND. I have no objection to the gentleman from New York making an explanation if I can be heard upon the other side.

Mr. TREMAIN. I do not want to debate the merits of the bill at all.

Mr. POLAND. Will the gentleman allow me to move to concur in the amendments of the Senate with an amendment?

Mr. TREMAIN. O, no; not at all.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I wish to know whether this matter has been considered at all by the Committee on the Judiciary, and whether this is the recommendation of the committee?

Mr. TREMAIN. The recommendation of the committee is that we shall stand by the original position of the House in favor of the repeal of the law. The committee had several sessions for the consideration of these amendments, and took action perfecting the amendments of the Senate and changing them in some respects very radically. They went through the amendments until they had considered about half of them, and then they concluded that they would bring the question before the House of non-concurrence in the Senate amendments so as to retain the original feature of the House bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Then these amendments were really not considered by the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. TREMAIN. They have been considered by the committee, and a majority of the committee adhered to the original position of the House to repeal the law.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] shakes his head, and therefore I infer that they were not considered by the committee.

Mr. POLAND. I do not desire any controversy with the gentleman from New York. It is true that the Committee on the Judiciary took up these amendments and considered them in part; but before we got half through the committee decided that they would not go any further with them, but would report in favor of non-concurrence.

Mr. TREMAIN. So far as the committee went did they not agree to quite a number o the amendments to the amendments of the Senate?

Mr. POLAND. Certainly they did; but they did not go through with all the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. TREMAIN. I object to any argument upon this question. We are now in the best condition in the world to ask a conference. We want to make an earnest and honest effort in accordance with the demands of the country to repeal this law.

Mr. SENER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose the House should refuse to concur in the amendments of the Senate, in what attitude would the bill be?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuses to concur in the amendments of the Senate and desires further legislation upon this subject, the bill must be sent to a committee of conference. If the House concurs in the amendments of the Senate, that is an end of the matter. The choice is between concurring and non-concurring and asking a conference.

Mr. POLAND. At this stage of the question I think it right to state——

Mr. TREMAIN. I object to any debate.

Mr. POTTER. I hope the gentleman will allow me a single word. I wish the House to understand the situation of this matter. The Committee on the Judiciary, representing in this respect the views of the House, were in favor of the repeal of the bankrupt law; but they felt that with the feeling of the Senate on this subject it would be impossible to secure such repeal, and therefore while they asked a non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate they have also directed my colleague to ask that there might be a conference between the two Houses on the question. They indeed reluctantly asked a conference, and only after being convinced that otherwise no legislation on the subject would result. I am one of those who think that the bankrupt law ought to be repealed; but I agree that at this late day it may be impossible to induce the Senate to pass the bill for the repeal, and therefore I favor a committee of conference. The committee on the part of the House will of course insist on the repeal of the law if they can induce the Senate conferees to agree to it. But failing in this, they will, I trust, do what may be done to make that law, if it is to remain on the statute-book, less objectionable, onerous, and offensive than now.

Mr. TREMAIN. I do not want any argument on this question. I ask for a vote.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and on a division there were ayes 79, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered, being upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. POLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that question.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 18 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

Mr. TREMAIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TREMAIN. I now move that a conference be asked upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the rules be so suspended as to take from the Speaker's table and concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1394, in relation to the centennial exhibition.

The amendment of the Senate was to add to the bill of the House the following:

Provided, however, That the United States shall not be liable, directly or indirectly, for any expenses attending such exposition or by reason of the same.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Would it be in order to move to refer this amendment of the Senate to the Select Committee on the Centennial Exhibition?

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order. Should the House refuse to agree to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] that motion will then be in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to be understood, in voting to concur in the amendment of the Senate, as debarring myself in the future from advocating and voting for, and from asking others to advocate and vote for, such an appropriation as may be necessary to make the exposition a success.

Mr. MYERS. And it does not bind me.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe that to be the view of the entire Pennsylvania delegation.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the amendment of the Senate concurred in.

CUSTOMS AND INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. DAWES. By instruction of the Committee on Ways and Means I ask permission of the House to make a statement for a few minutes preparatory to a motion.

No objection was made; and leave was accordingly granted.

Mr. DAWES. Some time since the Committee on Ways and Means reported a bill to correct some errors in the customs and internal-revenue laws. At the time the bill was taken up for consideration I stated to the House the reasons which governed the committee in framing that bill. It was calculated and founded solely upon the principle of correcting errors in the existing tariff and internal-revenue laws, without any attempt at remodeling the law in either branch of the internal-revenue service. I stated to the House that in the opinion of the Department and also of the Committee on Ways and Means the correction of evasions of the law in two particulars would save to the Government some $2,500,000. The committee felt it very important that at least such legislation should be had by this Congress.

We were aware of a difference of opinion in this House upon certain features of the tariff law as well as of the internal-revenue law. There were those in the House who believed that the 10 per cent. reduction of the tariff made by the last Congress should be restored. There were others who believed that instead of restoring that duty, Congress should make still further reductions. And there were those who felt that it was the duty of the Committee on Ways and Means to bring in a general bill. But upon a review of the whole field, the improved condition of the Treasury was so gratifying to us that it was the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Ways and Means that it was not wise to go beyond the two points I have stated. We brought in a bill for that purpose, changing a few duties from ad valorem to specific, and changing what we thought to be erroneous constructions of the revenue laws by the Treasury Department. And in the internal-revenue portion of the bill we added one feature which changed the present law, for the purpose of enabling those who raised leaf-tobacco to sell $100 worth of it to other than licensed dealers. In all other respects we were firmly of the conviction that it was not wise at this time to change the tariff and internal-revenue laws.

The bill of the committee has been before the House one day and two evenings. It is apparent to the committee that it is impossible to carry that bill through in the manner in which it has been considered by the House. They have, therefore, instructed me to bring before the House for consideration to-day the same bill with all the amendments that were adopted in Committee of the Whole up to the adjournment on Thursday night last, striking out of the internal-revenue portion two or three sections and reducing the bill to bare poles, if I may be allowed to use the expression, preserving those features which corrected mistakes and misconstructions of the law, preserving in the internal-revenue part only those features which were necessary for carrying out the law, without changing its purpose or its effect, and preserving that feature of the law which the tobacco-growers felt to be such a necessity, and adding simply one single section to the bill. That section is one extending for one year the time for redeeming lands sold in the Southern States for non-payment of taxes. Two years ago a bill was passed by Congress giving two years' time for that purpose, which time expires the present month. It is proposed in this additional section of the bill to extend the time for one year.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. In one moment.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Right here, if you please.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Will the gentleman agree that I shall have an opportunity to offer as an amendment a bill introduced by me and ordered to be printed a short time since, House bill No. 3055, taxing the sale of stocks, bonds, gold, bullion, promissory notes, and other securities $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent., out of which we can realize a revenue of ten or twelve million dollars without endangering anybody or oppressing any interest?

Mr. DAWES. I will allude to that feature in a moment. I want the House to understand exactly what I hold in my hand, which is the tariff part of the bill considered in Committee of the Whole, with every amendment to it adopted by that committee. The Committee on Ways and Means do not propose to ask a vote to-day upon anything which will avoid any amendment that has already been adopted by the Committee of the Whole. In other respects they have changed merely the phraseology for the purpose of carrying out the same end. They have not made a particle of change, so far as I know, in any other respect in that part of the bill. They have stricken out of the internal-revenue part of the bill section 17, which was put there by mistake, and section 18, which was in reference to friction matches. There seemed to be so much "friction" about this section of the bill that it was thought best, as it did not materially affect the revenue, to strike it out.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Does this bill retain the section allowing a collector to appoint as many deputies as he pleases?

Mr. DAWES. That is the present law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Section 10 is the section I refer to.

Mr. DAWES. That section does not change the law by giving any new authority for the appointment of deputies; but it authorizes the collector to take a bond from each deputy, so that that bond shall be legal. Heretofore the collector has not been authorized to take any bond to protect himself in reference to acts of the deputy for which he was liable.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It appeared before the Committee on Civil Service Reform that there had been a practice on the part of collectors of appointing such deputies as they pleased, and then making a special allowance to pay them.

Mr. DAWES. In reference to the special allowance clause in the internal-revenue law this bill at some point—in the eleventh section, I believe—provides that such special allowances shall hereafter have the joint approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. So they have now.

Mr. DAWES. No; they have not by law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They have in fact.

Mr. DAWES. Such approval is not required by law; and I understand that of late it has not been had in fact. The effect of this bill is to make the head of the Department, the Secretary of the Treasury himself, responsible in law for the proper administration of the law in that respect. I am aware that this system of special allowances is a bad feature in some respects. There ought to be some way by which an allowance should be made. The difficulty is in allowing discretion. If we do not allow a discretion, we are unable here in this House to fix the compensation in many cases just as it ought to be. If we allow a discretion, there is a liability to abuse.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman will allow me to say that there were some startling cases of abuse presented before our committee; and it was also in evidence that in those cases the allowance had the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Civil Service Reform, if they have this subject before them, will probably devise a remedy. This bill does not make the law any worse in that respect; it makes it a little better. Therefore I trust my colleague will not make any objection to it.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I wish to put an inquiry to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] On a rising vote of the Committee of the Whole the majority was in favor of putting salt on the free list. I want to know whether the gentleman will allow an amendment of that kind?

Mr. DAWES. Before I get through, if the gentleman will remind me of it, I will answer his suggestion. I wish first to reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. STARKWEATHER.] That gentleman desires to embrace in the internal-revenue system a new subject of taxation—a tax on sales of gold, bonds, stocks, &c., at the brokers' boards in our cities. For many years this has been a subject of consideration on the part of both the Treasury Department and the Committee on Ways and Means. When Mr. Wells was Special Commissioner of Internal Revenue he made the subject a study, and believed at one time that he had devised a plan that was practicable. He however found out very soon that that plan at least would not work; and although he believed that he could devise some method which would be practicable, he never did so. At the beginning of the present session the Committee on Ways and Means took up the same subject and enlisted the services of experts in the Treasuary Department, who went to New York and other places for the purpose of ascertaining (although they did not disclose the purpose to those with whom they communicated) whether any method of carrying out the plan suggested in the gentleman's bill was practicable. It is enough for the present purpose to say that the Committee on Ways and Means have not as yet perfected a plan of operations in that direction. The gentleman's bill merely proposes to levy the tax, it stops there; but without some further provision it would be utterly impossible to enforce the collection of the tax.

Mr. STARKWEATHER rose.

Mr. DAWES. Of course I cannot at this time enter into a debate on that question.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. This bill of mine, which is No. 3139, levies a tax of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. on these sales. In regard to the collection of this tax the execution of a law of this kind has never for any length of time been attempted. Just at the close of Mr. Johnson's administration, when the tax on whisky, which in 1864 had been collected on 85,000,000 gallons, had run down to a collection on 6,700,000, we collected from this tax on bonds, stocks, &c., at that time a larger proportion of tax than we did on whisky; and recently the whisky tax has been collected on 77,000,000 gallons as the result of proper organization and good administration, showing that success in the collection of a tax depends on efficiency in the administration of the law.

All that is needed now is to use the machinery we have. By conversation with gentlemen best posted on this subject—I did not go to clerks of the Departments—with gentlemen who have studied this subject for years, I find that the Department can execute this law without any additional machinery; that is, by adopting the bill in the form in which I have put it—that the law can be executed and the tax collected as well as the whisky or any other tax, if they will only take hold of the subject in good earnest. It was as well executed as the whisky tax and realized a larger proportion. Neither were well executed, because the Internal Revenue Bureau was thrown into confusion by changes and removals at the very time the law should have been well executed. Without additional officers you can realize this tax without the least trouble at all.

It will besides have a wholesome influence upon the country in checking the abnormal condition of things in New York and other cities where gold and bond sales are going on. The repeal of this law was brought about by pressure of the lobby.

I wish simply to say to the House if this amendment should be adopted it will bring into the Treasury twelve or thirteen million dollars without additional expense to the Treasury, and we shall need it to pay our honest debts and to apply to the sinking fund. I now give notice that I shall endeavor to move that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I noticed in the original bill as brought in by the Committee on Ways and Means a section that from and after the passage of this act any farmer or planter may sell, at the place of production, tobacco of his own growth and raising at retail directly to the consumer to an amount not exceeding $100 annually. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means whether that section is still preserved in the bill brought in to-day?

Mr. DAWES. It is with this addition: that it is to be subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. That section as there drawn, with this addition of providing it shall be under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner, was passed by the House last year.

Mr. POLAND. I know there is very serious apprehension felt by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and other gentlemen of that department as to the effect of this—that it will have the effect to make a serious inroad upon the tax on tobacco. I would like to have the gentleman's own view in reference to that.

Mr. DAWES. In answer to the gentleman from Vermont I will say that the Committee on Ways and Means has heard the Commissioner and has heard the tobacco-growers on that point. They did two years ago. They incorporated this section in their bill two years ago. They have again reheard the tobacco-growers, as represented in Congress and by delegations, and also the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on that point. It was put on by the Committee on Ways and Means during the last Congress as it is proposed to be put on the bill now.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. The question I desire to propound is this: whether, in the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, if this bill before the House should fail, any amendment either of the tariff or the internal-revenue law can be passed at this session?

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed, Mr. Speaker, after I have fully explained this bill to submit it to the House under a suspension of the rules. If the House adopt this bill it will save to the revenue without any material change, as I have said, $2,500,000. If they do not desire to adopt this, I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means not to press any further the bill in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX. If I understood the gentleman he intends to offer this as a substitute for the other bill. This substitute is about what the bill was when it left the Committee on Ways and Means originally.

Mr. DAWES. I intend to offer this, and if adopted by the House of course there will be in the opinion of the Committee on Ways and Means no necessity for any other bill. If this fail the Committee on Ways and Means will take the instruction of the vote to pursue the subject no further.

Mr. COX. I have not got through what I wish to say. I do not defer to the Committee on Ways and Means, though I should like to do it. I come from a city where 67 per cent. of all the customs is collected. This bill or any other bill of the same sort strikes at some interest there in some way or other, or rather raises the hope or fear there will be an increase or reduction of revenue on something or other. Now, the gentleman says he did not propose to raise any revenue by this bill of any consequence. Why, then, are we to go into this peculiar abnormal kind of legislation, the Committee on Ways and Means fixing up a partial bill, rushing it through the House without further amendment and without debate? I say it is not the kind of legislation we ought to agree to, and for one I will oppose and vote against any suspension of the rules by a two-third vote to pass the bill.

The gentleman says moreover that this bill is only intended to correct misapprehensions and errors in administration of past years. Why, sir, this bill changes radically many of the items on the tariff list, and in regard to a number of them, as I know from my recent visit home and from the information I then received, changes them very wrongfully without being likely to get any additional revenue. I will vote against the suspension of the rules.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman forgets that he rose to address an interrogatory to me.

Mr. COX. I do not think the Committee on Ways and Means should have the monopoly of the floor all the time.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. On the 7th of May the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means represented to us that the country was quite seriously discredited by its failure to meet all its lawful and honorable obligations during the current fiscal year. In introducing this bill last week he spoke in more hopeful tones, and said that the surplus for the current year would be about $7,000,000, which would nevertheless leave $22,000,000 due sinking fund not provided for. In introducing this bill he also said he was quite satisfied with the condition of things for the future; but he did not say what in his opinion and in that of the Committee on Ways and Means would be the surplus for the next year. If I understood the matter correctly, the surplus for the next fiscal year should be enough to pay the $22,000,000 deficit this year and the $29,000,000 of sinking fund next year, which we pledged to pay every year. In order to do this we should have a surplus revenue of $51,000,000 in the next fiscal year. I wish to ask the gentleman if he is satisfied that we will have that without more taxation?

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I wish to know from the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, as the Committee of the Whole by a vote agreed to put salt on the free list, whether he will allow a motion to put that amendment on this bill?

Mr. DAWES. I stated the other evening when the question of salt was up the reasons why the Committee on Ways and Means were not willing to reconsider that question. There is $1,000,000 of revenue involved in it. The question has not been heard before the Committee on Ways and Means. Not a solitary person has appeared before the present committee to ask legislation upon that subject, and for that reason the committee decline to have it made a part of this bill.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] I have this to say. The gentleman has been pleased to allude to some remarks of mine made on the 7th of May, the tendency and purpose of which were to so curtail and hold in check the appropriations of this Congress that no additional taxation should be necessary. I stated the exact condition of the Treasury. I stated that up to that time the receipts did not meet the expenditures; that every return that had been made led us to hope that the receipts might meet the expenditures before the year was out; but that beyond that there was the obligation to meet the sinking fund. I stated, at the opening of the debate on this bill, that the last month showed a gratifying increase in the receipts on the one hand and an equally gratifying disposition on the part of the House to keep the expenditures at the lowest point; so that we had not only brought the receipts up to the expenditures, but that we had a little surplus; that the revival of business, the encouragement of the country through the belief that there was to be some stability in our policy, and other reasons, manifold and various, that are elements in the prosperity of industry in this land, encourage us to hope that at the close of the fiscal year there would be a larger margin on the side of receipts than there was even now—to the amount of five or six million dollars; and that this might go on we had every reason to hope during the coming year. So that while we could not meet, at the end of this fiscal year, the whole of our obligations in reference to the sinking fund, we might be able not only to meet them in the coming year, but to do something toward supplying the deficit in the sinking fund this year. But whether we will entirely meet it or not depends very much on circumstances and contingencies over which we have no control; while the condition of things is such as to urge upon us at every step increased solicitude and care and anxiety that every dollar shall be saved for that purpose that economy and a proper and wise administration of the expenditures of this Government will permit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House pass this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Will the gentlemen finish his answer to the question I addressed to him? Is he sure of his $29,000,000 next year?

Mr. DAWES. I am not; I hope so.

Mr. PENDLETON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Several members demanded the regular order.

Mr. VANCE. The gentleman from Massachusetts yields to me to make a statement in which I have no doubt he will agree with me. It is in regard to how the vote stood——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. VANCE. The gentleman yields to me to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot yield when the regular order is demanded.

Mr. PENDLETON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the date of the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed on the importation of the goods, wares, and merchandise hereinafter specified, the following rates of duty shall be exacted, namely: On spun silk, for filling, in skeins or cops, 35 per cent. ad valorem; on silk in the gum, not more advanced than singles, tram, and thrown or organzine, 35 per cent. ad valorem; on floss silks, 35 per cent. ad valorem; on sewing-silk, in the gum or purified, 40 per cent. ad valorem; on lastings, mohair cloth, silk twist, or other manufactures of cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, or form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for buttons exclusively, 10 per cent. ad valorem; on all goods, wares, and merchandise not otherwise herein provided for, made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, irrespective of the classification thereof for duty by or under previous laws, or of their commercial designation, 60 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That this act shall not apply to goods, wares, or merchandise which have, as a component material thereof, 25 per cent. or over of cotton, flax, wool, or worsted.

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the merchandise hereinafter enumerated, imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties; that is to say:

On all still wines imported in casks, 50 cents per gallon.

On all still wines imported in bottles, $2 per case of one dozen bottles, containing each not more than one quart and more than one pint, or twenty-four bottles, containing each not more than one pint; and any excess beyond those quantities, found in such bottles, shall be subject to a duty of 5 cents per pint or fractional part thereof, but no separate or additional duty shall be collected on the bottles: Provided, That any wines imported containing more than 24 per cent. of alcohol shall be forfeited to the United States: Provided also, That there shall be an allowance of 2 per cent. for leakage on the quantity which shall appear by the gauge to be contained in any cask of wines, and 5 per cent. on all wines, liquors, cordials, and distilled spirits in bottles, to be deducted from the invoice quantity, in lieu of breakage.

SEC. 3. That all imported wines of the character provided for in the preceding section which may remain in public store or bonded warehouse on the day this act shall take effect shall be subject to no other duty upon the withdrawal thereof for consumption than if the same were imported after that day: Provided, That any such wines remaining on shipboard within the limits of any port of entry in the United States on the day aforesaid, duties unpaid, shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered as constructively in public store or bonded warehouse.

SEC. 4. That on and after the date of the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties imposed by law on the articles in this section enumerated, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise in this section enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duties; that is to say:

On hops, 10 cents per pound.

On chromate and bichromate of potassa, 4½ cents per pound.

On macaroni and vermicelli, 3 cents per pound. On preparations similar thereto, 5 cents per pound.

On nitro-benzole, or oil of mirbane, 10 cents per pound.

On tin in plates or sheets and on terne and tagger's tin, 1½ cents per pound.

On anchovies and sardines, packed in oil or otherwise, in tin boxes; 15 cents per whole box, measuring not more than five inches long, four inches wide, and three and one-half inches deep; 7½ cents for each half-box, measuring not more than five inches long, four inches wide, and one and one-half inches deep; and 4 cents for each quarter-box, measuring not more than four inches and three-quarters long, three and one-half inches wide, and one and one-eighth inches deep; when imported in any other form, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

SEC. 5. That yellow sheating-metal and yellow-metal bolts of which the component part of chief value is copper shall be deemed manufactures of copper, and shall be entitled to the drawback allowed by law to copper and composition metal whenever the same shall be used in the construction or equipment or repair of vessels built in the United States for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, and shall pay the duty now prescribed by law for manufactures of copper.

SEC. 6. That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the thirtieth paragraph of said section in relation to the duty on Moisic iron of whatever condition, grade, or stage of manufacture, shall be the same as on all other species of iron of like condition, grade, or stage of manufacture.

SEC. 7. That the duty on jute-butts shall be $6 per ton: Provided, That all machinery not now manufactured in the United States adapted exclusively to manufactures from the fiber of the ramie, jute, or flax may be admitted into the United States free of duty for two years from the 1st of July, 1874: And provided further, That bags, other than of American manufacture, in which grain shall have been actually exported from the United States may be returned to the United States free of duty under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 8. That on and after the date of the passage of this act the importation of the articles enumerated and described in this section shall be exempt from duty, that is to say:

Alizarine.

Pease, exclusively for seed purposes.

Quicksilver.

Ship-planking and handle-bolts.

Spurs and stilts used in the manufacture of earthen, stone, and crockery ware.

Seed of the sugar beet.

SEC. 9. That casks, barrels, carboys, grain-bags, and other packages, the manufacture of the United States, when exported filled with American products, or exported empty and returned filled with foreign products, may be returned to the United States free of duty, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the provisions of this section shall apply to and include boxes, barrels, crates, and casks exported in shooks.

SEC. 10. That where bullets and gunpowder, manufactured in the United States and put up in envelopes or shells in the form of cartridges, such envelope or shell being made wholly or in part of domestic materials, are exported, there shall be allowed on the bullets or gunpowder, on the materials of which duties have been paid, a drawback equal in amount to the duty paid on such materials, and no more, to be ascertained under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That 10 per cent. on the amount of all drawbacks so allowed shall be retained for the use of the United States by the collectors paying such drawback, respectively.

SEC. 11. That the oaths now required to be taken by subordinate officers of the customs may be taken before the collector of the customs in the district in which they are appointed, or before any officer authorized to administer oaths to such collector, within three months; the oaths shall be taken in duplicate, one copy to be transmitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and the other to be filed with the collector of customs for the district in which the officer appointed acts. And in default of taking such oath or transmitting a certificate thereof or filing the same with the collector, the party failing shall forfeit and pay the sum of $200, to be recovered, with cost of suit, in any court of competent jurisdiction, to the use of the United States.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

SEC. 12. That each collector of internal revenue shall be authorized to appoint, by an instrument in writing under his hand, as many deputies as he may think proper, to be by him compensated for their services; to revoke any such appointment, giving such notice thereof as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe; and to require and accept bonds or other securities from such deputy; and actions upon such bonds may be brought in any appropriate district or circuit court of the United States; which courts are hereby given jurisdiction of such actions concurrently with the courts of the several States. Each such deputy shall have the like authority in every respect to collect the taxes levied or assessed within the portion of the district assigned to him which is by law vested in the collector himself; but each collector shall, in every respect, be responsible both to the United States and to individuals, as the case may be, for all moneys collected and for every act done or neglected to be done by any of his deputies while acting as such.

SEC. 13. That there shall be further paid, after the account thereof has been rendered to and approved by the proper officers of the Treasury, to each collector, his necessary and reasonable charges for advertising, stationery, and blank-books used in the performance of his official duties, and for postage actually paid on letters and documents received or sent and exclusively relating to official business; but no such accounts shall be approved or allowed unless it states the date and the particular items of every such expenditure, and shall be verified by the oath of the collector: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be authorized to make such further allowances from time to time as may be reasonable in cases in which, from the territorial extent of the district or from the amount of internal duties collected, or from other circumstances, it may seem just to make such allowances. But the total net compensation of a collector shall not in any case exceed $4,500 a year; and no collector shall be entitled to any portion of the salary pertaining to the office unless such collector shall have been confirmed by the Senate, except in cases of commissions to fill vacancies which may have happened by death or resignation during the recess of the Senate.

SEC. 14. That the existing provisions of law for the redemption of, or allowance for, internal-revenue documentary stamps, the use of which has been rendered unnecessary by the repeal of the taxes for the payment of which such stamps were provided, shall apply only to such of said stamps as shall be presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for allowance or redemption before the 1st day of October, 1874; and no allowance, redemption, or refunding on account of such of the aforesaid stamps as shall not be so presented to the said Commissioner prior to the date last mentioned shall be thereafter made.

SEC. 15. That the words "bank-check, draft, or order for the payment of any sum of money whatsoever, drawn upon any bank, banker, or trust company, at sight or on demand, 2 cents," in Schedule B of the act of June 30, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, stricken out, and the following paragraph inserted in lieu thereof:

"Bank-check, draft, order, or voucher for the payment of any sum of money whatsoever, drawn upon any bank, banker, or trust company, 2 cents."

SEC. 16. That any person who shall carry on the business of a rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, retail liquor dealer, wholesale dealer in malt liquors, retail dealer in malt liquors, or manufacturer of stills, without having paid the special tax as required by law, or who shall carry on the business of a distiller without having given bond as required by law, or who shall engage in or carry on the business of a distiller, with intent to defraud the United States of the tax on the spirits distilled by him, or any part thereof, shall, for every such offense, be fined not more than $5,000, and imprisoned not more than two years. And all distilled spirits or wines, and all stills or other apparatus, fit or intended to be used for the distillation or rectification of spirits or for the compounding of liquors, owned by such person, wherever found, and all distilled spirits or wines and personal property found in the distillery or rectifying establishment, or in any building, room, yard, or inclosure connected therewith, and used with or constituting a part of the premises; and all the right, title, and interest of such person in the lot or tract of land on which such distillery is situated, and all right, title, and interest therein of every person who knowingly has suffered or permitted the business of a distiller to be there carried on, or has connived at the same; and all personal property owned by or in possession of any person who has permitted or suffered any building, yard, or inclosure, or any part thereof, to be used for purposes of ingress or egress to or from such distillery which shall be found in any such building, yard, or inclosure, and all the right, title, and interest of every person in any premises used for ingress or egress to or from such distillery, who has knowingly suffered or permitted such premises to be used for such ingress or egress, shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 17. That if any person shall affix, or cause to be affixed, to or upon any cask or package containing or intended to contain distilled spirits any imitation stamp or other engraved, printed, stamped, or photographed label, device, or token, whether the same be designated as a trade-mark, caution notice, caution, or otherwise, and which shall be in the similitude or likeness of, or shall have the resemblance or general appearance of, any internal-revenue stamp required by law to be affixed to or upon any cask or package containing distilled spirits, he shall, for each offense, be liable to a penalty of $100, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $300 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years, and the cask or package with its contents shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 18. That retail dealers in liquors shall pay $25. Every person who sells, or offers for sale, foreign or domestic distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors otherwise than as hereinafter provided in less quantities than five wine gallons at the same time, shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors. Wholesale liquor dealers shall each pay $100. Every person who sells, or offers for sale, foreign or domestic distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors otherwise than as hereinafter provided, in quantities of not less than five wine gallons at the same time shall be regarded as a wholesale liquor dealer. But no distiller, who has given the required bond, and who sells only distilled spirits, of his own production, at the place of manufacture, in the original packages to which the tax stamps are affixed, shall be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale liquor dealer on account of such sales. Retail dealers in malt liquors shall pay $20. Every person who sells or offers for sale malt liquors in less quantities than five gallons at one time, but who does not deal in spirituous liquors, shall be regarded as a retail dealer in malt liquors. Wholesale dealers in malt liquors shall pay $50. Every person who sells, or offers for sale, malt liquors in quantities of not less than five gallons at one time, but who does not deal in spirituous liquors, shall be regarded as a wholesale dealer in malt liquors: Provided, That no brewer shall be required to pay a special tax as a wholesale dealer by reason of selling in the original stamped packages, whether at the place of manufacture or elsewhere, malt liquors manufactured by him: Provided further, That any assessments of additional special tax against wholesale liquor dealers or retail liquor dealers, or against brewers for selling malt liquors of their own production, at the place of manufacture, in the original casks or packages, where such assessments were made by reason of an amendment to section 59 of the internal-revenue act, approved July 20, 1868, as amended, made by section 13 of the act approved June 6, 1872, further amending said section 59 by striking out the words "malt liquor," "malt liquors," "brewer," and "malt liquors" in the three several paragraphs in which they occur, shall be, on proper proofs, remitted; and if such assessments have been paid, the amounts so paid shall be, on proper proofs, refunded by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 19. That every person, firm, association, other than national-bank associations, and every corporation, State bank, or State banking association, shall pay a tax of 10 per cent. on the amount of their own notes used for circulation and paid out by them.

SEC. 20. That every such person, firm, association, corporation, State bank, or State banking association, and also every national banking association, shall pay a like tax of 10 per cent. on the amount of notes of any person, firm, association, other than a national banking association, or of any corporation, State bank, or State banking association, or of any town, city, or municipal corporation, used for circulation and paid out by them.

SEC. 21. That the amount of such circulating notes, and of the tax due thereon, shall be returned and the tax paid at the same time and in the same manner and with like penalties for failure to return and pay the same as provided by law for the return and payment of taxes on deposits, capital, and circulation imposed by the existing provisions of the internal-revenue law.

SEC. 22. That hereafter nothing contained in the internal-revenue laws shall be construed so as to authorize the imposition of any stamp tax upon any medicinal articles prepared by any manufacturing chemist, pharmaceutist, or druggist in accordance with a formula published in any standard dispensatory or pharmacopœia in common use by physicians and apothecaries or in any pharmaceutical journal issued by any incorporated college of pharmacy, when such formula and where found shall be distinctly referred to in the printed label attached to such article and no proprietor interest therein is claimed. Neither shall any stamp be required when the formula of any medical preparation shall be printed on the label attached to such article nor where no proprietorship in such preparation shall be claimed.

SEC. 23. That all acts and parts of acts imposing fines, penalties, or other punishment for offenses committed by an internal-revenue officer or other officer of the Department of the Treasury of the United States, or under any Bureau thereof, shall be, and are hereby, applied to all persons whomsoever employed, appointed, or acting under the authority of any internal-revenue or customs law, or any revenue provision of any law of the United States, whether such persons are designated as officers or otherwise.

SEC. 24. That from and after the passage of this act any farmer or planter may sell at the place of production tobacco of his own growth and raising at retail directly to consumers to an amount not exceeding one hundred dollars annually, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 25. That the time limited for the redemption of direct tax lands by the act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption and sale of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 8, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, extended for the period of one year from June 8, 1874, at the expiration of which time the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall proceed to sell the lands as provided by section 4 of said act.

Mr. DAWES. At the time of the tariff debate——

Mr. RANDALL. Is debate in order? The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] was denied the opportunity to debate, and I object to the gentleman from Massachusetts debating the question.

Mr. DAWES. I was not proposing to debate it. I desire to modify my motion, and move now that the rules be suspended so as to pass this bill with an amendment which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] desires to offer to make the duty on hops 5 cents per pound. He desires to test the sense of the House on that amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has a right to frame his motion in his own way.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman has already framed his motion.

The SPEAKER. No action has been taken by the House upon it, and it is still within the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I adhere to my original motion, and move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

The question was taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division there were ayes 112, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. COX. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 49, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Barber, Barnum, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Beck, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bowen, Bradley, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crocker, Crooke, Crossland, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Durham, Fort, Foster, Garfield, Gunckel, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Kasson, Kelley, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Leach, Lewis, Lowe, Lowndes, Luttrell, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McNulta, Milliken, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rapier, Rice, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Sloss, Small, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Starkweather, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Vance, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Wheeler, Whitehead, Whiteley, Whitthorne, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Willliams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Woodworth, and John D. Young—177.

NAYS—Messrs. Arthur, Banning, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bright, Bromberg, Benjamin F. Butler, Caldwell, Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, DeWitt, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, Herndon, Holman, Hyde, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lynch, Magee, Marshall, McLean, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Potter, Randall, James C. Robinson, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Standiford, Stone, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Whitehouse, Willie, and Wolfe—49.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Averill, Cannon, Clayton, Creamer, Davis, Dobbins, Eames, Eden, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Freeman, Frye, Gooch, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Howe, Hynes, Jewett, Kellogg, Killinger, Lofland, Loughridge, Maynard, McJunkin, McKee, Merriam, Mills, Morey, Negley, Niblack, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Phillips, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Ransier, Ray, Read, William R. Roberts, Ross, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sheats, Sherwood, Smart, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stephens, St. John, Storm, Waddell, White, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—63.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 3572) was passed.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. FOSTER. My colleague, General SHERWOOD, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. MARSHALL. My colleague, Mr. EDEN, is necessarily absent from the House on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. My colleague, Mr. MERRIAM, is necessarily absent; if present he would vote "ay."

Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey. My colleague, Mr. DOBBINS, is necessarily absent; if present he would vote "ay."

Mr. PENDLETON. My colleague, Mr. EAMES, is necessarily absent; if present he would vote "ay."

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I move that the rules be so suspended that the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk be passed as a section of the tariff bill just passed on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

The Clerk read as follows:

That on and after the 1st day of July next there shall be levied and paid a tax on all sales of stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion and coin, and promissory notes, and other securities, at the rate of $\frac{1}{20}$ of 1 per cent. on the amount of the sale thereof; that every person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of selling stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion and coin, promissory notes, and other securities, either for their own account or on the account of others, shall keep a true and accurate record thereof, under oath, that the same is true and correct, to the collector of the district where such business is carried on, on or before the 1st and 15th day of each month, and the collector shall thereupon assess and collect a tax of $\frac{1}{20}$ of 1 per cent. on the gross amount of such sales. The said list or return shall be made in such form or manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. On the suggestion of several gentlemen I will modify my bill by leaving out "promissory notes," as that is a small matter.

The question was on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If this shall be passed would it not just add so much to the tariff on all goods? Every person who has to pay duties would have to pay just so much more for gold.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I object to debate.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; and the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) upon a division—ayes 122, noes 34; and the additional section was adopted to the tariff bill just passed.

Mr. KASSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to move a suspension of the rules and the passage of additional sections to the tariff bill just passed on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. With the permission of the House I will state the two points effected by my proposition. One is simply that upon only that portion of manufactured tobacco exported from the United States, and thus coming in competition with exports from Canada, a drawback of the value of the duties paid on the imported licorice entering into the manufacture of said tobacco, and none other, shall be allowed to the exporter. The second is to allow the exporting manufacturer of tobacco the same privilege of a transportation bond to be replaced by a transportation bond at the port of export that was given by the House the other day in the case of the exporting manufacturer of distilled spirits.

Mr. COX. Why did not the committee include this in their other bill?

Mr. KASSON. It was ordered to be reported; but not being in print, it was thought best by the chairman not to include it in that bill.

Mr. SPEER. Will this affect the price of tobacco?

Mr. KASSON. Not for internal consumption at all; it is only to facilitate the export of tobacco by giving to the exporters the same privileges which have been extended to exporters of whisky.

Mr. KELLEY. Nor will the bill affect the price for export. It will do the tobacco trade no good, while it will impair a rising industry, the manufacture of licorice.

Mr. KASSON. I object to debate, unless I am allowed to reply.

Mr. KELLEY. The amount of duty collected on licorice is not $100,000 annually; and we collect as internal revenue on tobacco $31,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. KELLEY. Is this bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. KASSON. It is.

Mr. KELLEY. I did not so understand.

The SPEAKER. It was on that ground that the gentleman from Iowa made the motion to connect it with the other bill.

The proposed amendment to the tariff bill was read, as follows:

Add after section 24 the following:

SEC. —. That upon all manufactured tobacco exported under the provisions of any act of Congress the manufacturer exporting the same shall be entitled to a drawback equal to the amount of duties which shall be shown to have been paid upon imported licorice which has entered into the manufacture thereof; and the quantity so used in such manufacture shall, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, be ascertained and certified by the collector of internal revenue of the district from which the manufactured tobacco shall be removed for exportation to the collector of the port whence the same shall be exported, by whom the same shall be duly examined and the amount of duties reported for drawback in accordance with the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the same shall be allowed and paid as in other like cases of drawback of duties on manufactured articles exported.

SEC. —. That whenever any manufacturer of tobacco shall desire to withdraw the same from his factory for exportation under existing laws, such manufacturer may, at his option, in lieu of executing an export bond, as now provided by law, give a transportation bond with sureties satisfactory to the Collector of Internal Revenue, and under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, conditioned for the due delivery thereof on board ship at a port of exportation to be named therein; and in such case, on the arrival of the tobacco at the port of export, the exporter or owner at that port shall immediately notify the collector of the port of the fact, setting forth his intention to export the same, the name of the vessel upon which the same is to be laden, and the port to which it is intended to be exported. He shall, after the quantity and description of tobacco have been verified by the inspector, file with the collector of the port an export entry verified by affidavit. He shall also give bond to the United States with at least two sureties, satisfactory to the collector of customs, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will export tobacco as specified in said entry to the port designated in said entry or to some other port without the jurisdiction of the United States. And upon the lading of such tobacco the collector of the port, after proper bonds for the exportation of the same have been completed by the exporter or owner at the port of shipment thereof, shall transmit to the collector of internal revenue of the district from which the said tobacco was withdrawn for exportation a clearance certificate and a detailed report of the inspector, which report shall show the quantity and description of manufactured tobacco and the marks thereof. Upon the receipt of the certificate and report, and upon payment of tax on deficiency if any, the collector of internal revenue shall cancel the transportation bond. The bonds required to be given for the landing at a foreign port of such manufactured tobacco shall be canceled upon the presentation of satisfactory proof and certificates that said tobacco has been landed at the port of destination named in the bill of lading or any other port without the jurisdiction of the United States, or upon satisfactory proof that after shipment the same was lost at sea without fault or neglect of the owner or exporter thereof.

SEC. —. That if any person or persons shall fraudulently claim or seek to obtain an allowance or drawback of duties on any manufactured tobacco or shall fraudulently claim any greater allowance or drawback thereon than the duty actually paid, such person or persons shall forfeit triple the amount wrongfully or fraudulently claimed or sought to be obtained or the sum of $500, at the election of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be recovered as in other cases of forfeiture provided for in the internal-revenue laws.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 62, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLEY and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 46.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question recurring on agreeing to the motion, tellers were ordered; and Mr. KASSON and Mr. KELLEY were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 53.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 159, nays 53, not voting 77; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Bundy, Burchard, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Conger, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Crounse, Crutchfield, Danford, Dawes, DeWitt, Donnan, Dunnell, Durham, Eldredge, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Garfield, Giddings, Glover, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Holman, Howe, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lawrence, Leach, Lewis, Loughridge, Lowe, Magee, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, McKee, McNulta, Milliken, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packard, Perry, Pierce, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Randall, Ransier, Ray, Read, Rice, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sloan, Sloss, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stanard, Standiford, Stone, Stowell, Strait, Swann, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tyner, Vance, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, Willie, James Wilson, Wood, and John D. Young—159.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Biery, Buffinton, Burleigh, Burrows, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Corwin, Crocker, Crooke, Duell, Field, Hamilton, Benjamin W. Harris, John W. Hazelton, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunter, Kelley, Lansing, Lawson, Lowndes, MacDougall, Monroe, Moore, Myers, O'Neill, Packer, Pendleton, Phelps, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Rainey, Richmond, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Isaac W. Scudder, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Starkweather, Strawbridge, Taylor, Todd, Townsend, Marcus L. Ward, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, and Woodworth—53.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Barnum, Bass, Bromberg, Benjamin F. Butler, Clayton, Coburn, Cotton, Creamer, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, Dobbins, Eames, Eden, Elliott, Farwell, Frye, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hynes, Jewett, Kellogg, Killinger, Lofland, Luttrell, Lynch, Maynard, McJunkin, McLean, Merriam, Mills, Morey, Negley, Niblack, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Rapier, William R. Roberts, Ross, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sherwood, Smart, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stephens, St. John, Storm, Sypher, Tremain, Waddell, Wells, Whitley, Wilber, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—77.

So the rules were suspended; and the additional sections indicated were added to the tariff bill.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HOLMAN stated that his colleague, Mr. NIBLACK, who was necessarily absent, would if present vote in the affirmative.

Mr. COOK stated that his colleague, General YOUNG, who was absent by order of the House as one of the Visitors to West Point, would if present vote in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WELLS obtained the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Is it in order to move other sections to the tariff bill?

The SPEAKER. That can be done at any period of the day. They need not be in consecutive series.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask unanimous consent to extend and print the remarks I was prevented from making by the limitation of time on Wednesday last when the House had under consideration the report of the Committee on Ways and Means recommending the repeal of that portion of the act of May 10, 1872, providing for the employment of persons to assist the proper officers of the Government in discovering and collecting money withheld by persons or corporations.

There was no objection, and the leave was granted. (See Appendix.)

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WELLS. I am directed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to report back a bill (H. R. No. 3573) making additions to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entiled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," with the recommendation that it do pass. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed at this time.

The bill, which was read, provides that there shall be added to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," the words following, namely:

And any officer or agent of the companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads, or of any company engaged in operating either of said roads, who shall refuse to operate and use the road or telegraph under his control, or which he is engaged in operating, for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line with the said Union Pacific Railroad, or with either of its branches, or shall refuse, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, or transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of, or adverse to, the road or business of any or either of said companies, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000, and may be imprisoned not less than six months. In case of failure or refusal of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or either of said branches, to comply with the requirements of this act and the section to which this act is amendatory, the party injured or the company aggrieved may bring an action in the district or circuit court of the United States in the Territory, district, or circuit in which any portion of the road of the defendant may be situated, for damages on account of such failure or refusal; and, upon recovery, the plaintiff shall be entitled to judgment for treble the amount of all excess of freight and fares collected by the defendant, and for treble the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff by such failure or refusal; and for each and every violation of or failure to comply with the requirements of this act, a new cause of action shall arise; and in case of suit in any such Territory, district, or circuit, process may be served upon any agent of the defendant found in the Territory, district, or circuit in which such suit may be brought, and such service shall be by the court held to be good and sufficient; and it is hereby provided that for all the purposes of said act, and of the acts amendatory thereof, the railway of the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company shall be deemed and taken to be a part and extension of the road of the Kansas Pacific Railroad to the point of junction thereof with the road of the Union Pacific Railroad Company at Cheyenne, as provided in the act of March 3, 1869.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will be permitted to explain the bill.

Mr. WELLS. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House with any debate. Most of the members are aware of the difficulties surrounding the operations of the Union Pacific Railroad and its branches. This bill simply carries out the provisions of section 15 of the organic act authorizing the building of this road. I ask the Clerk to read that section.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to discussion unless it can be discussed all round.

Mr. WELLS. I ask that section 15 be read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. SPEER. This is in the interest of commerce and cheap transportation.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move to suspend the rules, and to add the following as an additional section to the revenue bill which was passed to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

That so much of the act entitled "An act to reduce internal taxes and for other purposes," approved July 14, 1870, as limits the levy and collection of income taxes to the years 1870 and 1871, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that all the provisions of said act directing and controlling the collection of said income tax be, and the same are hereby, revived and declared in full force and virtue with all exemptions and allowances therein declared: Provided, That the duties required in said act to be performed by, and the powers therein vested in, assessors and assistant assessors shall be performed by and vested in the several collectors and deputy-collectors in their several districts, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may establish.

Mr. COX. I suggest a point of order, although it may not be well taken.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. COX. This is stretching the ordinary practice of the House to an unlimited extent in allowing the rules to be suspended in this way.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the ordinary practice of the House. That is the very motion.

Mr. COX. It seems to be an extraordinary suspension of it.

The SPEAKER. When the rules are suspended the House is only bound by the Constitution of the United States, and sometimes the Chair fears not quite by that.

Mr. POTTER. I quite agree with the Chair on this occasion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. COX. I understood the Chair to rule on my point of order before I made it.

The SPEAKER. No point of order can be made against a suspension of the rules. It is wholly a matter within the discretion of the House. Two-thirds can control.

Mr. COX. Would it be in order to make a remark on the bill?

The SPEAKER. It would be by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. I think no one will object to my saying that this kind of legislation is out of all sort of order. At least out of all sort of moral if not political order.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Strictly speaking all suspensions of the rules are against order, and all the revenue legislation to-day has been under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. COX. But this tends to a mere juggling with legislation. I hope the Speaker, if he can, will suppress it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot control a majority of the House, much less two-thirds.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 35, noes 72; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered under the rule, and Mr. COX and Mr. HURLBUT were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 86.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

DEVELOPMENT OF MINING RESOURCES.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the bill (S. No. 822) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," passed May 10, 1872, be taken from the Speaker's table and passed.

The bill was read. It amends the provisions of the fifth section of the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," passed May 10, 1872, which requires expenditures of labor and improvements on claims located prior to the passage of said act, so that the time for the first annual expenditure on claims located prior to the passage of said act shall be extended to the 1st day of January, 1875.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a bill of considerable importance, and as there was a good deal of confusion prevailing in the House, I ask that it may be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. KENDALL. Has there been any notice given of this motion?

The SPEAKER. No notice is required for a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman who makes the motion propose to give any explanation of the bill?

Mr. KENDALL. I hope the bill will not pass without some discussion. This is a matter of very great importance in reference to the mining interests of the country.

Mr. HUBBELL. With the permission of the House, I will make a brief explanation. The Committee on Mines and Mining instructed me to report a bill similar to this extending the time one year. In the mean time the Senate passed this bill; and on consultation with a majority of the committee it was agreed that we should take this Senate bill and endeavor to pass it through the House, laying aside the House bill which extended the time one year. The provisions of both bills are precisely alike. I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman explain what is the exact purpose of the bill?

Mr. HUBBELL. The object of the bill is to extend the time in which work can be done on claims located prior to the passage of the act of May 10, 1872. During the past year, owing to financial and other troubles, parties have not been able to perform the work on many of these locations. They now ask that they may have this extension of time in which to do it. The House bill provided for an extension of time for a year from the 10th of June. This bill extends the time only to the 1st day of January next. With that the parties who claim this extension seem to be content.

Mr. POTTER. Are the parties liable to forfeiture of their claims if the bill does not pass?

Mr. HUBBELL. They are liable to forfeiture if the work is not performed by the 10th of June.

Mr. POTTER. Under what law?

Mr. HUBBELL. Under the law of May 10, 1872.

Mr. POTTER. On the 10th of June of this year?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. POTTER. And to what time does this extend it?

Mr. HUBBELL. To the 1st day of January next. The object is simply to give the parties this summer in which to do this work.

Mr. KASSON. Is not this law of forfeiture one of the greatest elements of safety to the mining interests of the country?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not at all. These claims, located prior to the passage of this act, were for the most part originally located by speculators who came to Philadelphia, New York, Boston, &c., representing that they had valuable mines. These mines were sold on what is known as speculative terms. Large companies were formed on many of these locations and these companies found when they went to examine the property that they had not the value represented. This took all the fever out of the speculators and scattered the stock all over, and there has been great trouble since in getting work performed on these claims.

Mr. KASSON. Is it not the very purpose of some of our mining laws to prevent speculators from getting these lands back again?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not at all.

Mr. KASSON. Parties get possession of these lands and hold on to their claims although they do not themselves work them.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask for the regular order; I object to debate.

Mr. KENDALL. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUBBELL] has been allowed a short time to explain the nature of this bill, I desire to say something in regard to it. As I understand it, and as I think any gentleman of the House would understand it who is directly interested in mining interests, this bill I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, is entirely in the interest of non-residents and absentees from the mining States of the West. I assume that there is not any considerable portion of bona fide resident miners in those States and Territories who desire the passage of this bill.

Mr. WILBER. I call for the regular order unless some gentleman can be allowed to speak upon the other side.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the regular order, any way.

Mr. KENDALL. There was an extension granted during the last Congress at the instance of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and it does seem to me that that ought to be sufficient. I hope this bill will be voted down.

Upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered, and Mr. KENDALL and Mr. HUBBELL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 35.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. KENDALL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 12 members voting therefor.

The question was taken on suspending the rules; and on a division there were—ayes 109, noes 45.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. SARGENT, and Mr. DAVIS, conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 134) for the relief of Daniel S. Mershon, jr.;

A bill (S. No. 875) for the relief of Thomas Hughes;

A bill (S. No. 876) to amend the laws relating to patents, trade-marks, and other copyrights;

A bill (S. No. 711) providing for the completion and location of the naval monument;

A bill (S. No. 877) granting a pension to John W. Truitt;

A bill (S. No 536) granting a pension to Livanna Ingraham;

A bill (S. No. 844) for the relief of G. B. Tyler and E. H. Luckett, assignees of William T. Cheatham; and

A bill (S. No. 758) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and of a causeway across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2245) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875;

A bill (H. R. No. 1297) for the relief of Thomas T. Crittenden, of Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of B. W. Harris, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Massachusetts.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3407) to change the name of the schooner Jacob Faithful to Eyvor;

A bill (H. R. No. 3022) granting a pension to Sarah A. Timmons;

A bill (H. R. No. 2216) granting a pension to Cornelia A. Washburn;

A bill (H. R. No. 2800) for the relief of Benjamin Crawford;

A bill (H. R. No. 1791) granting a pension to Augustus L. Yeager;

A bill (H. R. No. 2209) granting a pension to Louisa H. Canby, widow of the late General E. R. S. Canby; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1145) granting a pension to Martin Lafflin.

RESTORATION OF DUTIES.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the rules be so suspended as to adopt what I send to the Clerk's desk to be read as an additional section to the tariff and tax bill passed to-day on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. COX. Is it in order to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order pending the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. MYERS I ask that my bill may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the second section of the act of June 6, 1872, which reduces the duties on certain manufactured articles 10 per cent., be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that in lieu of the duties imposed by said section of said act there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the articles, goods, wares, manufactures, and merchandise therein mentioned the same duties as were imposed by law prior to the enactment of said act of June 6, 1872.

The question was upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I hope this House will quit passing bills we do not know anything about. Who knows the effect of this bill? It is the most vicious mode of legislation we could possibly adopt.

The question was taken upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and upon a division—ayes 42, noes not counted—the motion was not seconded.

COLLECTION OF MONEY FROM PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I am instructed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to report back House bill No. 3282 providing for the collection of money due the United States from the Pacific Railroad Companies, and to move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to require payment of the Pacific Railroad Companies of all sums of money due the United States for the 5 per cent. of the net earnings provided by section 6 of the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; and in case either of said railroad companies shall neglect or refuse to pay the same within a reasonable time after demand therefor made upon the treasurer of such railroad company, the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify that fact to the Attorney-General, who shall thereupon institute the necessary suits and proceedings to collect the same in the proper circuit courts of the United States, and prosecute the same with all convenient dispatch to a final determination.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POLAND. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill explanatory of the act of June 30, 1864, and to move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. STANDIFORD. I ask permission at this time to offer a resolution calling for information.

Mr. POLAND. If it gives rise to no debate I will not object.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. STANDIFORD. I ask consent to submit the following preamble and resolution for adoption now:

Whereas the United States is now the owner of the Louisville and Portland Canal, situated at the Falls of the Ohio River; and whereas said canal has a capacity for furnishing water-power capable of operating the heaviest machinery without injury to navigation; and whereas it will be an immense saving to the United States to use said water-power in the manufacture of arms and munitions of war: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to cause a report to be made by a competent engineer in the employ of the Government, setting out the amount and convenience of the water-power of the Louisville and Portland Canal, and the manner in which it may be utilized by the United States in the manufacture of arms and munitions of war, or for other purposes, and the propriety of establishing at that point an armory with founderies and shops for the manufacture of such materials of war or for other purposes, and that he report the same to this House without delay.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will not enter upon the construction of any more such works. This is simply the foundation for another heavy expenditure. We have sufficient manufactories of arms already; more than the Government requires.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of the resolution at this stage?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

TAXATION ON SAVINGS-BANKS.

Mr. POLAND. I now move that the rules be suspended and the bill from the Committee on the Judiciary passed which I sent to the Clerk's desk a moment since.

The bill was read. It provides that all deposits made in institutions now existing which do business only as savings-banks, and are recognized as such by the laws of their respective States or by Congress, are hereby declared to be exempt from taxation on deposits in savings-banks, or institutions having no capital, although having a capital stock or bond for the additional security of their depositors, and paying dividends thereon; and no tax shall be assessed upon the deposits made in such institutions, or collected of them on said deposits, otherwise than as herein provided; provided that all the profits of such savings-banks, less the aforementioned dividends, are divided among their depositors, and that the capital stock is invested only in the same class of securities as is used for investing the deposits, and that interest at the rate of not less than 4½ per cent., to be made good if necessary from the capital stock, be paid to their depositors in all cases.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] say why this bill was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. POLAND. By the request of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BURCHARD. O, no.

Mr. POLAND. I was told so by the chairman and one or two other members of that committee.

Mr. DAWES. With their consent.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 3574) was passed.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

Mr. COX. I ask consent that Senate bill No. 675, in relation to compulsory pilotage, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. With the privilege to report the same at any time?

Mr. COX. I do not ask that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who is interested in this bill, stated to the Chair that he wanted no motion made touching the bill unless with a provision that it may be reported back at any time.

Mr. SAWYER. I was about to ask for a couple of hours for the Committee on Commerce to submit reports.

Mr. COX. The Committee on Commerce agreed to hear the pilots interested in this bill to-morrow morning. Can I not make a motion to suspend the rules and send this bill to the Committee on Commerce?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is recognized for that purpose. But to refer the bill without the right to the committee to report it back at any time would be prejudicial to the bill.

Mr. COX. I would connect that motion with mine, if I am compelled to do so, in order to get it before the committee, although I do not like to make that motion.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT OMAHA.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I move that the rules be suspended so as to allow the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to report back and the House to now pass a bill (H. R. No. 3279) amendatory of and supplemental to the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the bridge constructed by the Union Pacific Railroad Company across the Missouri River between Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, and Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, together with its approaches on both sides of said river, be, and the same is hereby, declared to constitute, and shall be operated as, a part of the continuous line of the Union Pacific Railroad.

SEC. 2. That the said railroad company is hereby required to make semi-annual reports, signed and verified by the treasurer of said company, setting forth in detail the amount received monthly by said railroad company for tolls and charges for the use of said bridge; the first report to include the tolls and charges received for the six months ending June 30, 1874; said reports to be forwarded to, and filed with, the Secretary of the Interior within thirty days thereafter.

Mr. CROUNSE. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in regard to this bill, showing that the whole matter is before the courts, involving millions of dollars of interest.

Mr. SPEER. This is a very important bill. Let five minutes be given to each side.

Mr. HOUGHTON. The bill has been agreed to by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. SPEER. It is too important a bill to be passed without debate.

Mr. HOUGHTON. If I am allowed an opportunity to explain the bill I will not object to debate on the part of other gentlemen.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 37, noes 76.

So the motion was not seconded.

SHOSHONE INDIAN RESERVATION, WYOMING TERRITORY.

Mr. SHANKS. The Committee on Indian Affairs have unanimously agreed to recommend the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2104) to confirm an agreement made with the Shoshone Indians (eastern band) for the purchase of the south part of their reservation in Wyoming Territory. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the agreement entered into on the 26th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1872, between Felix R. Brunot, commissioner on the part of the United States, and the chief, head-men, and men of the eastern band of Shoshone Indians, in the words and figures following, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed, satisfied, and approved by the Congress and President of the United States: Provided, That the cattle furnished under this agreement shall be good, young American cattle, suitable for breeding purposes:

Articles of a convention made and concluded at the Shoshone and Bannack Indian agency in Wyoming Territory, this 26th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1872, by and between Felix R. Brunot, commissioner on the part of the United States, and the chief, head-men, and men of the eastern band of Shoshone Indians, constituting a majority of all the adult male Indians of said band or tribe of Indians, and duly authorized to act in the premises, witnesseth:

That whereas by article 11 of a treaty with the Shoshone (eastern band) and Bannack tribes of Indians, made the 3d day of July, 1868, at Fort Bridger, Utah Territory, a reservation was set apart for the use and occupancy of said tribes of Indians in the following words: "The United States further agrees that the following district of country, to wit, 'commencing at the mouth of Owl Creek, and running due south to the crest of the divide between the Sweetwater and the Papo-Agie Rivers; thence along the crest of said divide and the summit of Wind River Mountains to the longitude of North Fork of Wind River; thence due north to mouth of said North Fork and up its channel to a point twenty miles above its mouth; thence in a straight line to head-waters of Owl Creek and along middle of channel of Owl Creek to place of beginning' shall be, and the same is, set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the Shoshone Indians herein named." And whereas previous to and since the date of said treaty, mines have been discovered and citizens of the United States have made improvements within the limits of said reservation, and it is deemed advisable for the settlement of all difficulty between the parties arising in consequence of said occupancy to change the southern limit of said reservation:

1. The Shoshone band or tribe of Indians (eastern band) hereby cede to the United States of America that portion of their reservation in Wyoming Territory which is situated south of a line beginning at a point on the eastern boundary of the Shoshone and Bannack reservation due east to the mouth of the Little Papo-Agie at its junction with the Papo-Agie, and running from said point west to the mouth of the Little Papo-Agie; thence up the Papo-Agie to the North Fork, and up the North Fork to the mouth of the cañon; thence west to the western boundary of the reservation.

2. The United States agree to pay to the Shoshone (eastern band) or tribe the sum of $25,000; said sum to be expended under the direction of the President for the benefit and use of said Indians in the following manner, namely: On or before the 10th day of August of each year, for the term of five years after the ratification of this agreement, $5,000 shall be expended in the purchase of stock cattle, and said cattle delivered to the Shoshones on their reservation. Second. The salary of $500 per annum shall be paid by the United States for the term of five years to Washa-kie, chief of the Shoshones.

3. Within the term of six months, and as soon as practicable after the ratification of this agreement, the United States shall cause the southern line of the Shoshone reservation, as herein designated, to be surveyed and marked at suitable points on the ground, and until said line has been so surveyed and marked the United States binds itself not to permit the intrusion of any white persons upon any of the agricultural or other lands within the limit of the district proposed to be ceded.

4. This convention or agreement is made subject to the approval of the President and the ratification or rejection of the Congress of the United States.

[SEAL.] FELIX R. BRUNOT,
Commissioner.

Witnesses:
Lieutenant J. B. GUTHRIE,
Thirteenth United States Infantry.
THOMAS K. CREE, Secretary.

[Here follow the names of the Indians signing the agreement.]

Mr. HOLMAN. From what committee does this bill come?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] states that he has been directed to report it from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SHANKS. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. HOLMAN. It appears to contemplate a large outlay on the part of the Government.

Mr. SHANKS. It is a confirmation of an agreement by which the United States gets seven hundred thousand acres, leaving to these Indians, a little over a thousand in number, two million acres. It is proposed to pay them in stock cattle; and as these Indians are now engaged in farming, that is the best mode of payment to them. They desire this form of payment instead of money. It is proposed to pay only $5,000 a year, making $25,000 in five years. It is a very excellent agreement; I hope it will be confirmed.

The motion to suspend the rules being seconded, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

So the bill was passed.

BUSINESS OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to suspend the rules so that any bills which may be reported this evening from the Committee on the Judiciary shall not be referred to the Committee of the Whole on points of order, but shall be considered in the House. We intend to report no private bills; and we simply desire that such bills as we may report shall be considered in the House, notwithstanding any point of order.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, the session for this evening having been ordered by unanimous consent, is this motion in order under the rules?

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There are two or three bills with reference to courts, &c., which we do not wish to have thrown into the Committee of the Whole upon points of order.

Mr. SPEER. Certainly, after the House, by unanimous consent, has granted the session this evening for business of the Judiciary Committee, it is taking an undue advantage to make this motion for a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The order can only be made by two-thirds of the House.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. This is a most extraordinary proposition I think, especially in regard to one of the bills of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We do not intend to report to-night the Geneva award bill or the civil-rights bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly the House should not adopt so broad a proposition as this. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. What bills does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to bring before the House under this proposed order?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Neither the Geneva award bill, nor the civil rights bill, nor any private bill. But there are some court bills——

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SPEER. Pending that motion, I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. Pending a motion to suspend the rules only one motion is in order, and that is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This being Monday, will not a motion to suspend the rules be in order this evening?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not so hold. The evening session having been devoted by order of the House to a specific purpose, the business of the Judiciary Committee, the Chair would hold that the right to move to suspend the rules would not apply to the evening session.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I had thought it would not be right or fair to make that motion this evening, and therefore I submit this proposition now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not recognize the motion this evening; the right to make the motion was waived by the assignment of the evening session to special business.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Will the Chair state the question?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that the rules be so suspended that points of order which would send any bill this evening to the Committee of the Whole shall not be entertained; in other words, that all reports made by the Judiciary Committee this evening may be considered in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. What bills are they?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not the slightest knowledge on that subject.

Mr. BECK. I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

The question being taken on seconding the motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, it was not seconded, there being—ayes 35, noes 70.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER reported back from the Committee on Appropriations Senate amendments to the Army appropriation bill; which, together with a written report of the committee, were ordered to be printed.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

Mr. COX. I ask that the bill (S. No. 675) to relieve ships and vessels from the payment of compulsory pilot fees in certain cases be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Commerce, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. CONGER. The committee now have the same bill under consideration as a House bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to giving the committee authority to report back at any time.

MONUMENT TO MARY, MOTHER OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. PELHAM, from the Select Committee on the Washington Monument, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3576) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburgh, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed with the accompanying reports, and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

REPORTS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to suspend the rules to adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That on Thursday next, June 4, the Committee on Commerce be allowed two hours after the reading of the Journal for reports from that committee for consideration in the House at that time.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to name Friday or Saturday next.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. SPEER. Will the bills be liable to the point of order when so reported?

The SPEAKER. Under this order they would not.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, I understand, says he has no objection to the points of order being reserved upon the bills.

The SPEAKER. Then all points of order will lie.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the resolution was passed.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS IN MINNESOTA AND IOWA.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to put upon its passage at this time a bill (H. R. No. 3575) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in certain portions of the States of Minnesota and Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to make a single statement with regard to the objects of the bill. Last year some ten counties of Minnesota and Iowa were raided upon by grasshoppers, and to such extent that the settlers in that section were rendered extremely poor, hundreds of them being driven away, while there the grasshoppers filled the soil of that region with eggs. The States of Minnesota and Iowa, as well as the citizens of those States, contributed some hundred thousand dollars for the purchase of necessaries of life and of seed for these unfortunate settlers. It turns out that these eggs are now hatching and the earth is literally filled with young grasshoppers, and all vegetation there is being destroyed. The object of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is simply this: to allow these pre-emption and homestead settlers to be absent from their settlements until May 1, 1875, and that they may then come back and go on with their work and settlement. We trust at the expiration of that time these visitors to the States of Minnesota and Iowa will have left. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ORR] has received a message from the governor of his State and has united with me in the drawing of this bill.

Mr. COX. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands in the counties of Cottonwood, Noble, Martin, Jackson, Watonwan, Murray, Rock, Lyon, Redwood, Brown, Chippewa, and Renville, in the State of Minnesota, and the counties of Iowa which compose the Sioux City land district and counties contiguous to either of the above exempted sections, where the crops of such settlers were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1873 and where such grasshoppers shall reappear in 1874 to the like destruction of the crops of such settlers, to leave and be absent from said lands until May 1, 1875, under such regulations as to proof of the same as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe.

The second section provides that during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands, such settlers being allowed to resume and perfect their settlement as though no such absence had been enjoyed or allowed.

The third section provides the same exemption from continued residence shall be extended to those making settlements in the year 1874 and suffering the same destruction of crops as those making settlement in 1873 or any previous year.

Mr. DUNNELL. The House will perceive that no possible loss can occur to the Government. It merely allows for the present season these settlers to obtain a living elsewhere. It is but an act of justice to these citizens that without loss they be allowed to provide for themselves and their families till the pest shall have passed by.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

HARPER'S FERRY PROPERTY.

Mr. HEREFORD. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of discharging the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of and to pass a bill (H. R. No. 549) to authorize the Attorney-General to adjust the claim of the Government upon the purchasers of property at Harper's Ferry.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Attorney-General of the United States be directed to discontinue proceedings for enforcing payment of the purchase-money of property sold at Harper's Ferry by the direction of the Secretary of War under the authority of the act of Congress of December 15, 1868, (and to institute legal proceedings to vindicate the title to said property now in controversy,) and that the Secretary of War, on the application of any of the purchasers of any of said property or their sureties, be directed to release the obligations for the purchase-money; and (so soon as the title of the United States to any of said property now in controversy shall be finally adjudicated) to resell the same at public auction upon terms that shall require at least one-third of the purchase-money to be paid in cash.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will inform the House whether the Government has not recently obtained a foreclosure of the mortgage on this very property against these parties who are now asking to be relieved?

Mr. HEREFORD. If the House will bear with me for a moment I will explain the whole matter. It is one in which my own State is interested. This Harper's Ferry property was ordered to be sold. It was sold. The persons to whom it was sold are now mere men of straw. The Government cannot collect the money. Harper's Ferry is rapidly going to decay, and in a short time instead of being a flourishing manufacturing place as it was once, it will be the abode of nothing but owls and bats. The Legislature of my State last winter and the winter before passed a resolution asking for the passage of this very bill. If the money could be collected from these purchasers we would not ask to have them relieved or to have the property resold. But while this matter is going on the people of Harper's Ferry are suffering. They know the Government cannot recover anything, and that if this thing is to be continued much longer the whole town will be impoverished.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, whether the same end is not accomplished by the resale of the property by the Government under the foreclosure?

Mr. HEREFORD. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I object to debate.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 54, noes 51; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered under the rule; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HEREFORD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 62.

So the motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Pending that I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done while the motion to suspend the rules is pending.

The question being taken, the rules were not suspended, two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the rules be suspended, and that Friday evening next after half past seven o'clock be assigned for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman please to name the bills the committee propose to report?

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is but one bill reported by the Public Lands Committee which so far as I know has met with no objection here—the bill in regard to the reorganization of the clerical force of the Land Office. Knowing the opposition there is to that bill, I do not propose to bring it up at all. But there are many bills of great interest which the committee are prepared to report, bills likely to be of value to settlers on the public domain, homesteaders, and others, that will meet with little or no opposition in the House, and I ask that the House may have an opportunity of considering those bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman excepts the bill for the reorganization of the clerical force of the Land Office?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. That could not be considered in any case against a single objection, which would be sufficient to carry it to the Committee of the Whole.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the order requested by Mr. TOWNSEND was made.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. SENER. I desire to present a report in writing, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, in regard to the western district of Arkansas, and ask that it may be printed and recommitted. I desire also to report in connection therewith four bills, and ask that they may be printed and recommitted, and that a time may be set for a special hearing of them in the House.

There being no objection, the following bills reported by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice were received, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the same committee:

A bill (H. R. No. 3577) to abolish the western district of Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 3578) to amend the act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789, in relation to bonds of clerks of the courts of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 3579) to provide for the service of process and making arrests in the Indian country, and to repeal section 3 of the act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, approved June 14, 1858; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3580) to amend and re enact the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SENER] asks that a day be assigned to the committee for a hearing on the bills which they have presented and the accompanying report.

Mr. SENER. I will say Tuesday of next week, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Would that exclude the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. It would if no exception is made.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Unless an exception is made in favor of that committee I must object, as no member of that committee seems now to be present.

Mr. SENER. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice have had under patient investigation for over two months this matter of frauds in the western district of Arkansas. These bills which they propose for the House to pass in judgment upon are bills which in their opinion go not only to the correction of frauds in the western judicial district of Arkansas, but to the correction of frauds in every judicial district in the United States, and they believe will protect the Treasury not only in that district but in every district of the United States, and they ask that the day I have named may be assigned for a hearing.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I ask that reports from the Committee on Appropriations may be excepted.

Mr. RANDALL. There is but one appropriation bill now to be reported.

Mr. DAWES. I would suggest that the time assigned be one hour after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SENER. I accept that modification of the motion, and ask that Tuesday, one hour after the reading of the Journal, be assigned to the committee to the exclusion of all other business and for the consideration of these bills in the House.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I must object.

Mr. SENER. Then I move that the rules be suspended and that that order be made.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded—ayes 84, noes not counted.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the order was made.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire now to move to suspend the rules so as to take from the table the bill (S. No. 1) known as the civil-rights bill, and to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with the right to report it as they now may report the House bill on the same subject. I desire further to say that I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to allow a motion in the House to strike out the school clause of that bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Will you agree to strike it out?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; but we allow a motion to strike out or amend.

Mr. BECK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts seemingly displays great liberality in saying that he is instructed to allow an amendment to strike out mixed schools. I want the gentleman to tell us whether or not he will support the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky so that the House shall now take a recess.

The SPEAKER. That amendment is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. When will it be in order?

The SPEAKER. At half past four o'clock the motion executes itself.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be a great relief when that hour comes.

The question being taken on Mr. BECK'S motion that the House do now adjourn, there were—ayes 57, noes 71; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered under the rule; and Mr. BECK, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 88.

Mr. ELDREDGE and Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 72, nays 141, not voting 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Roderick R. Butler, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, DeWitt, Durham, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Holman, Hunton, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Lofland, Lowndes, Luttrell, Magee, Milliken, Mitchell, Moore, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Randall, Read, Robbins, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Sloss, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Standiford, Stone, Swann, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Vance, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, Wolfe, and John D. Young—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barry, Beeole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crocker, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dawes, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Farwell, Field, Foster, Freeman, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kelley, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lowe, Lynch, Maynard, McCrary, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Monroe, Myers, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Pelham, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Stowell, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—141.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Barrere, Bass, Burchard, Cannon, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Creamer, Davis, Dobbins, Eames, Eden, Elliott, Fort, Frye, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Havens, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hubbell, Hynes, Jewett, Kellogg, Killinger, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, Alexander S. McDill, McJunkin, McLean, McNulta, Merriam, Mills, Morey, Negley, Niblack, O'Brien, Orr, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Perry, Potter, William R. Roberts, Ross, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sherwood, Smart, William A. Smith, Snyder, Starkweather, Stephens, St. John, Storm, Strait, Tyner, Waddell, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Williams, Wood, Woodford, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—76.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ARCHER. My colleague, Mr. WILSON, is absent on account of the illness of a member of his family. If here he would vote "ay."

Mr. WILLIE. My colleague, Mr. MILLS, is absent by leave of the House. If here he would vote "ay."

Mr. RANDALL. My colleague, Mr. STORM, is absent on account of sickness. If here he would vote "ay." I desire also to state that my colleague, Mr. CLYMER, is absent on a committee of conference.

Mr. KNAPP. My colleague, Mr. EDEN, is detained from the House by sickness in his family.

Mr. BELL. I desire to state that my colleague, General YOUNG, is absent as one of the examiners at West Point. He is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. SMART, upon all questions relating to the civil-rights bill.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to state that Mr. WOOD is absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. PENDLETON. My colleague, Mr. EAMES, is necessarily absent. If here he would vote "no."

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague, Judge NIBLACK, is necessarily absent. If here he would vote "ay."

The hour of half past four having arrived, the House, pursuant to order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

PROCEEDINGS IN MANDAMUS.

Mr. TREMAIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1273) to regulate proceedings in mandamus.

The bill was read. It provides that in all proceedings in mandamus in any of the courts of the United States, wherein any officer of the United States is made a party defendant, but who may die, resign, or be removed from office before the final determination of such proceedings, the same may be continued in the name of his successor in said office, and such proceedings may be had as in case of the death of a party defendant during the pending of a suit at law in the proper court; and said proceedings in mandamus shall proceed to a hearing at the same term, unless for good cause shown the court shall continue the case, and if a peremptory writ shall be awarded, the same shall and may be directed to any successor in office to such person who may have so resigned, been removed, or died.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I would ask the gentleman from New York this question: Suppose the proceedings have reached a certain stage and there has been a hearing before an officer and he goes out and another man comes in, is there anything in this bill requiring a rehearing by him?

Mr. TREMAIN. I suppose the law would be like those which are found in the different States and that where an officer goes out and a successor comes in, he comes into the shoes of the dead man and the proceeding goes on.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I respectfully make the suggestion whether there ought not to be some provision of the kind. In the McGarrahan case they had proceeded to a hearing before one Secretary of the Interior; he went out and another came in, and the court undertook to issue a peremptory mandamus against his successor in office.

Mr. TREMAIN. Of course he should have a hearing. If he comes in merely as the successor of a dead man, and the dead man has had a hearing in the courts, as in the case of a person who is sued in his individual capacity, and he dies and his heirs are substituted for him, they are entitled to a hearing. And when the court is moved for an order of substitution, if they deem it necessary to grant the hearing they will make that a condition of the substitution. I recollect a case which was instituted and carried up to the Supreme Court on an appeal, and before the final hearing the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. BOUTWELL I think it was, went out of office. The court decided that there was no statute allowing the proceedings to continue, and all the fruits of the litigation were lost. This is simply to avoid that casus omissus in the law. If the court think it necessary to demand a hearing they will make that a condition.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TREMAIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. TREMAIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, a bill (H. R. No. 2826) to authorize the prosecution of certain offenses upon information.

The bill provides that all crimes and offenses committed against the laws of the United States which are not capital or otherwise infamous may be prosecuted either by indictment or information filed by the district attorney, and, in case of prosecution upon information, there shall be an affidavit alleging the commission of the offense and his own certificate that he has made inquiry into the evidence in the case and is of opinion that there is reasonable ground to believe that the accused is guilty of the offense alleged.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does the gentleman propose to put that bill through now?

Mr. TREMAIN. I will state what there is about it. This bill was recommended by the Attorney-General in his report. The Constitution provides that for minor offenses no indictment by the grand jury shall be necessary, but an act of Congress may permit proceedings upon information. Congress has passed a law allowing a certain class of minor offenses to be proceeded with in that way.

The particular occasion or rather necessity for this bill arises from the fact that a very large proportion of the minor offenses under our laws involve great expense to the defendant as well as to the Government in having an examination before the commissioner, then having the witnesses appear before the grand jury, and again upon the final trial. The object of this bill is to avoid those expenses. Wherever, as in the case provided for in the bill, an affidavit of the charge is proved, and the district attorney on examination certifies that it is a proper case for proceedings, the bill provides for relieving the defendant from unnecessary expenses.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I see the bill says "except capital or otherwise infamous crimes."

Mr. TREMAIN. It is intended to embrace the minor offenses ordinarily known as misdemeanors.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Would it not be better to use the word "felony," which is a well-defined term?

Mr. TREMAIN. I have a letter from the district attorney of the southern district of Ohio which I will have read, if desired, to explain the necessity for this bill. I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do object, very seriously.

Mr. TREMAIN. Then I will ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO,
Cincinnati, April 20, 1874.

DEAR SIR: I am informed by Mr. SAYLER that he introduced a bill into the House authorizing district attorneys to prosecute misdemeanors upon information. I suppose it is the same that I showed to you when in Washington last month, and having been, as I am informed, referred to the Judiciary Committee upon suggestion of Mr. SAYLER, I will state to you briefly the reasons that render the passage of such a law important.

A very large proportion of the prosecutions of this district, which is probably a fair representative of the other districts in the United States, are for minor violations of the internal-revenue laws, such as selling proprietary medicines and cosmetics without stamps, liquors and tobacco without payment of special tax, and for depredations upon the mails. Under the existing practice there is a preliminary examination before a commissioner, an examination by the grand jury, and a final trial before a petit jury, making substantially three trials. The witnesses are often brought in each trial from a considerable distance, making the expenses very heavy—at least double what they ought to be under a practice which will allow of but one trial directly upon information.

Again: It often happens that the accused is a poor fellow, unable to give bail, and is kept in jail until the grand jury meets and thereafter until trial. The court is in session substantially nine months in the year, but the grand jury generally meets only twice, in October and April, and its session seldom lasts over two or three weeks. This makes in many cases great hardships to person accused of the smaller offenses. Both, therefore, as a matter of economy in the administration of the laws and relief from unnecessary hardships and promptness in the enforcement of its penalties the proposed law would be very useful.

There is another reason for its passage. In some of the districts the circuit and district courts have held that the district attorneys may file informations. It was so held by Justice Field and District Judge Sawyer in California. Justice Swayne expressed doubts about it here, and it is not the general practice. It is important that Congress should settle the question. The Attorney-General in his last annual report recommends the passage of such a law. The judge here wishes the sanction of congressional authority.

Allow me to suggest that in addition to an affidavit the district attorney be allowed, when it can be had, in place of such affidavit to file the transcript of a commissioner. In general the preliminary examination before a commissioner may be avoided under the proposed law.

Very respectfully,

WARREN M. BATEMAN.

Hon. B. F. BUTLER,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have very rarely heard on this floor a recommendation from any committee involving so radical a change as this. It is no slight matter that for all offenses prosecuted in the United States courts in all this broad land, covering as they do so many kinds and involving all shades of punishment from fine up to imprisonment for a long term of years, with all the safeguards, all the checks, all the scrutinies which come from a grand jury, and which I for one have been taught from early boyhood to look upon as almost the saving thing in our institutions—it is no slight matter that all this is to be done away with, and that in no case shall it be resorted to as a matter of law, excepting in capital cases or in case of infamous crimes, which very rarely occur. I venture to say in all the States of the Union combined they would not furnish one-tenth, perhaps not one-twentieth, of the trials that take place in the United States courts. Nineteen-twentieths of all the causes between the Government and the citizen are to be taken from the province and scrutiny of a grand jury, and put into whose hands? Into the hands of the district attorneys, wherever they may be.

Now, I can understand that a bright, sharp, shrewd district attorney, looking at one side only, eager to prosecute, eager to punish, eager to swell his docket, desirous of having his docket called for trial, dependent upon his imperious say-so, and not upon a bill or no bill rendered by at least twelve men—I can understand how he might be in favor of this innovation. But a reason that may be good to the district attorney in Ohio why he should hale men before the courts for a final trial is not a reason that will satisfy me or will satisfy the people.

But the height of audacity has been reached in this matter when it is claimed that the bill is introduced in the interest of the citizen who is brought before the courts, and that it saves him the delay and anxiety of previous tribunals to the one which sits in final judgment upon him.

It is for him it seems that this bill is brought here, so that he shall not be subjected to the delay and expense that may arise from being summoned before a commissioner. But what about the grand jury? Is the defendant who is sought to be indicted for a crime involving imprisonment for ten or twenty years, it may be, (for this bill would not exclude such cases,) is he to be deprived of the refuge—no, I will not use that word——

Mr. WHITE. This bill specially excepts cases involving capital or otherwise infamous punishment. The law has determined what is an infamous punishment. It is anything amounting to punishment by imprisonment. That is as well settled as any principle of law.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not know what may have been the decision in the gentleman's courts; but I certainly do not agree with him in his construction of this bill.

Mr. POLAND. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. POLAND. In the gentleman's own State is not the right to file information by prosecuting attorneys as broad as that given by this bill to prosecuting attorneys of the United States?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. No man in the State of Maine was ever for any offense triable by a jury tried upon information. I have myself been a prosecuting officer for nine years; and I know how dangerous it is—the statutes of the State of Maine proceed on the conviction how dangerous it is—to put into the hands of one man this right to summon men and arraign them finally for punishment; and in the United States district courts the proceeding is infinitely worse than it would be before the State courts. Why, sir, the district attorneys are paid according to their success. A district attorney is better paid if there is a trial than if there is no trial; his fees are swollen if the grand jury finds a bill and sends it into court and it is there tried. His fees are lessened if the grand jury throws out the bill. Now, I do not know that the district attorneys are worse than any other men or worse than any other lawyers, (for I believe that lawyers as a class are as good an any men,) but I do know that among the many district attorneys who represent the Government in various States throughout this country there are dozens of men into whose hands I would not put the control over this precious right of the citizen. The measure here proposed is a broad and dangerous innovation, and I hope the House will put its foot on it.

I could talk longer, but I am warned by gentlemen on the committee that they have other bills which they desire to present; so I will not occupy any more time. It seems to me, however, that it would be more becoming if the committee would withdraw this bill and proceed to other matters that do not involve so great an innovation.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. A single word, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Wait a moment; the gentleman has not the floor for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear this called an innovation. By the common law of England all misdemeanors were allowed to be prosecuted by the attorney-general or the solicitor-general upon information; and when the amendments to our Constitution were adopted—amendments which constitute the bill of rights of the State of Maine and Massachusetts as well as of the United States—it was expressly provided that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on presentment or indictment," leaving undisturbed in this respect the old common law which is in practice in many of the States, which is in practice in this District in the United States courts; so that in minor offenses the district attorney, the attorney representing the Government, might if he chose proceed by information in order to save costs—costs which, in a case involving fines and costs as part of the punishment, the defendant mustpay.

Now the very exception made by the Constitution is about to be put in force. No man can be harmed by any proceeding by information on the part of the district attorney, unless twelve of his neighbors duly selected as a jury say that he is guilty. It is not an innovation at all. On the contrary as long ago as 1866 a statute was passed applying to certain offenses tried before the United States courts and providing that they should be by information.

Why has not a measure of this kind been brought forward earlier? Simply because until very lately we have had very few misdemeanors tried in the United States courts. Until recently piracy, robbing the mails or the post-office, murder on the high seas, and larceny were about all the crimes tried in the United States courts. But our tax laws and our customs laws have brought to the front a great number of small misdemeanors, and the trial of these is depleting our Treasury. Grand juries are kept in session week in and week out simply to examine such small offenses as the selling of a box of cigars without a license. I hope that in the interest of economy (and it cannot be against justice) this bill will pass.

Mr. TREMAIN. I wish to say only a word or two in conclusion. I am informed by gentlemen from Wisconsin and gentlemen from Michigan that in those States the grand jury has been abolished altogether, and that they would not under any circumstances go back to it. In my own State of New York, the northern district of which is about three hundred miles long, I have known persons, charged with petty offenses on the complaint of spies acting on behalf of the Government, to be dragged from the city of Albany to the city of Buffalo. The witnesses are taken out there. The expenses are enormous. They are usually charged to the defendant, but in case of acquittal the Government is subjected to them. The object of this is to avoid those expenses in lesser—minor—offenses, but not in infamous crimes. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 34.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BANKRUPT LAW.

The Speaker appointed as the managers of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bankrupt bill Mr. TREMAIN of New York, Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, and Mr. ELDREDGE of Wisconsin.

PRESERVATION OF BALLOTS, ETC.

Mr. TREMAIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1979) to preserve the ballots cast at, and all papers connected with, elections held for Representatives or Delegates to Congress, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that the ballots, lists of voters, tally-sheets, and all other papers connected with any election hereafter held for Representative or Delegate in Congress shall be preserved and safely kept by the lawful custodians thereof in the several States until the adjournment of the first session of Congress next thereafter to be affected by said election.

The second section provides that either party to any contest in the House of Representatives may, when there is an allegation in either the notice of contest or the answer thereto that a portion of the ballots cast at any precinct or precincts at an election held for Representative or Delegate in Congress have been fraudulently changed previous to the count thereof or falsely counted, have a subpœna, in accordance with the law governing contested elections, directed to said custodian, who shall produce, as required therein, the ballots, lists of voters, tally-sheets, and all other papers connected with said election in his custody or control, and the same may, after the usual notice to the contestant or contestee, be examined and compared before any person authorized to take depositions in contested elections; and said person shall certify, under his hand and seal, and forward in the manner provided by law said examination and comparison and the result thereof, to be used as evidence in the case.

The third section provides that said ballots, lists of voters, tally-sheets, and all other papers produced in response to said subpœna, shall, immediately after the examination and comparison thereof, be returned to the lawful custodian in the same condition as when produced.

The fourth section provides that any custodian of the ballots cast at any election for Representative or Delegate to Congress who shall willfully neglect or refuse to safely keep and preserve the same, and the lists of voters, tally-sheets, and all other papers connected therewith, or who shall willfully neglect or refuse to produce the same as required in this act, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000, to be recovered, with costs of suit, by the party at whose instance the subpœna was issued and for his use, by an action of debt, in any court of the United States, and shall also be liable to an indictment for a misdemeanor and be punished by fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court.

The fifth section provides that all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

Strike out the fifth section and insert the following:

SEC. 5. That at all elections for Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States, the vote at each election precinct shall be counted at the close of the election by the managers and officers conducting such election in the presence of such managers and of the supervisors (if any there be) appointed under the act of Congress in such cases made and provided, whose duty it shall be to attend for that purpose; and the result of the ballot at such precinct shall be thereupon announced and made public; and any such manager, officer, or supervisor willfully neglecting or refusing to perform the duties imposed by this section shall be guilty of a crime, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than three months and not more than two years, one or both, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, give, or furnish any intoxicating liquors, vinous, fermented, or alcoholic, to any voter or voters, or to any person for any voter or voters, on the day of any election of a Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States; and any person or persons violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a crime, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $500, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than six months nor more three years, one or both, at the discretion of the court trying the same.

SEC. 7. That whenever in any city, town, county, or parish there shall be fifty voters thereof who, not less than fifteen days prior to any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in the Congress of the United States, or if there be no registration, at least fifteen days prior to any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, shall petition, in writing, to the judge of the circuit court of the United States for the circuit wherein such city, town, county, or parish shall be, to have an election precinct and voting place established at some convenient place to be designated in said petition, it shall be the duty of the said judge of the circuit court, within not less than ten days prior to said registration, if one there be, or if no registration be required or had, within not less than ten days prior to said election, to hear and determine said petition; and if it appear to said judge that notice of the presentation of said petition has been posted up in said city, town, county, or parish at the place where it is proposed to establish a voting place not less than five days prior to the presentation of the petition, and stating at what time and place said petition would be presented, and that no legal voting place exists within six miles of the place where said petitioners pray to have a voting place established, said judge shall make an order establishing an election precinct and voting place as prayed for by said petitioners, and the same shall be a legal precinct and voting place for the election of Representatives or Delegates in Congress: And provided, That in any city having less than one voting place to each six thousand of its population, or fraction thereof over six thousand, according to the then last census of the United States, then said judge may establish one additional voting place for such additional six thousand, or fraction thereof, at some convenient point within not less than one-half mile of any other legal voting place: And provided further, That said judge, in establishing precincts and voting places as herein provided, and in appointing supervisors for the same, shall possess the same power and authority conferred by the act to which this is amendatory, and for that purpose may sit either as a court or at chambers.

SEC. 8. That any person using fire-arms, or proposing or threatening to use fire-arms or other deadly weapons, offensively against individuals or assemblages of individuals, at or near the place and on the day or days of any election of a Representative or Delegate to the Congress of the United States, for the purpose of intimidating or injuring such person or persons, either before or after the election or while the same is progressing, shall be guilty of a crime, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, and imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than three years, one or both, at the discretion of the court trying the same: Provided, That the open or concealed carrying of fire-arms or other deadly weapons at such election shall be taken as presumptive evidence of the intent to intimidate under this act.

SEC. 9. That in case the registration officers appointed under the authority of any State or Territory shall refuse or neglect to give the persons entitled to vote at any precinct or voting place established under the provisions of the last preceding section an opportunity to register in the manner required by law for legal election precincts, such refusal or neglect shall not disqualify the persons entitled to register and vote at said precincts from voting.

SEC. 10. That the district courts of the United States within their respective districts and the circuit courts of the United States within their circuits, respectively, shall have concurrent jurisdiction of offenses committed against the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. That all laws and parts of laws contravening the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on this bill. It provides for the election of officers not authorized by law. It increases the number of election officers, and of course increases the expenditures from the public Treasury. It is not in accordance with existing law. Making an appropriation from the Treasury, it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPEER. It authorizes judges of the court to provide additional election precincts.

Mr. TREMAIN. No new officer is created by the bill at all.

Mr. SPEER. It authorizes the judges to provide additional election precincts, and of course to hold elections thereat.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They are authorized by law now.

The SPEAKER. What particular section is it to which the gentleman from Indiana attaches his point of order?

Mr. WHITE. It provides only for the extension of precincts.

Mr. SPEER. In section 8 on page 6 it is provided said judge in establishing precincts and voting places as herein provided, and in appointing supervisors for the same, shall possess the same power and authority conferred by the act to which this is amendatory, and for that purpose may sit either as a court or at chambers.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read section 8 in full, as the points of order seem to attach particularly to that section.

The Clerk again read the eighth section.

Mr. WHITE. The bill does not provide for the appointment of supervisors. This section of the bill to which attention has been specially called merely gives to the circuit judge on the petition of a citizen power to extend election precincts in certain cases. The acts of 1870 and 1871, authorize the appointment of supervisors. The United States judge in every precinct has to provide for the supervisors contemplated by the law. There is no authority given to the circuit judge to appoint supervisors. All the authority given to him is to establish election precincts. I will state to the House the purport of the bill.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is arguing the point of order, the Chair will hear him. The point of order is that this bill creates and authorizes the appointment of new officers. The Chair understands that the point lies in this: that the present law authorizes the precincts to be formed in a certain manner with a supervisor for each.

Mr. SPEER. Two supervisors.

The SPEAKER. And this bill proposes to change that law by allowing the judge of the circuit court to designate more numerous precincts at his discretion, and hence there is a multiplication of officers. The Chair understands that to be the drift of the bill, and if he be correct in that statement of the purport of the bill, it is liable to the point of order.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. There is no compensation to these officers.

The SPEAKER. Is there not any under the existing law?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. No; they perform their duties without compensation.

Mr. RANDALL. They are paid in my city.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. They serve without any compensation whatever.

The SPEAKER. It is a question of fact.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. It is a fact that they are not paid.

Mr. WHITE. This bill does not propose to make it compulsory on the judge to enlarge the number of precincts; it merely gives him the power to do so.

The SPEAKER. That does not make any difference if these officers are paid.

Mr. COX. I know that they are paid in my city.

The SPEAKER. This ought not to be a matter of doubt; it is a matter of fact, and upon the fact in the case hinges the law and the testimony.

Mr. RANDALL. Would not an amendment be in order, in any event, to the bill giving these officers compensation?

The SPEAKER. No; because the Chair would rule it out if these officers serve without any compensation; that would be a change of existing law.

Mr. HEREFORD. By this bill the circuit judge is authorized to appoint additional supervisors.

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen state that these supervisors are not paid.

Mr. SPEER. That is a mistake.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the law be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the law read.

Mr. MAYNARD. These officers were created by the law of the last Congress.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suggest that the bill be withdrawn for the present.

The SPEAKER. Until the question of fact be determined the Chair would prefer to have the bill withdrawn.

Mr. COBURN. I have the law here. It provides that no compensation shall be allowed to the supervisors herein authorized to be appointed, except those appointed in cities or towns of twenty thousand or more inhabitants. That is the law of 1872.

Mr. RANDALL. I know these supervisors were paid in my city.

Mr. COBURN. They are not paid excepting in towns of twenty thousand or more inhabitants.

Mr. TREMAIN. I withdraw the bill for the present.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. TREMAIN. I desire to ask the consent of the House to take up a report from the Committee on the Judiciary and assign some time for its consideration. I do not wish to take up the time of my colleagues on the committee. A report was made by the Committee on the Judiciary on the South Carolina case, which was submitted informally, and ordered to be printed and recommitted. I wish that the reports, both the majority and the minority, be received and laid on the table, to be called up on some subsequent day.

The SPEAKER. Then the reports had better be ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. TREMAIN. The reports have already been printed.

The SPEAKER. There is no such thing as laying a report upon the table, excepting when the purpose is to dispose of it finally.

Mr. TREMAIN. I only desire to clear my docket. I will ask unanimous consent that the majority and minority reports be received and assigned for consideration on Thursday of next week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better ask leave for their consideration at any time.

Mr. TREMAIN. Very good; I will then ask leave that they be considered at any time.

Mr. SPEER. That would not give them precedence over orders previously made?

The SPEAKER. Certainly not.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the House asked to act upon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the action proposed is.

Mr. TREMAIN. The resolution of the committee is that they be discharged from the further consideration of the petition referred to them; that is the report of the majority.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman had better withdraw the report.

Mr. TREMAIN. I withdraw it.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report in writing on the legal relations of the District of Columbia to the Government of the United States; which was recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

SURETIES OF JOHN L. ROBINSON.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2069) for the relief of the sureties of John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana.

The bill was read. It directs the Attorney-General to discontinue the suit now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana against John Carmichael, Jesse Carmichael, Chenoweth Robinson, and Hamilton Miller, as sureties on the official bond of John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana; and that said sureties be, and are hereby, discharged from any and all liability on account of said bond.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I will explain the bill in a few words. John L. Robinson was appointed United States marshal for the district of Indiana in 1854 and died in 1861, having been reappointed. It seems that at the time of his death he was indebted to the United States in the sum of $12,000 or $15,000. During the last summer a suit was brought on his bond. After his death his sureties took counsel of some of the best lawyers of the State, and were advised by them that suit on his bond was barred by the statute of April 10, 1806, which provides:

> That all suits on marshal's bonds, if the right of action has already accrued, shall be commenced and prosecuted within three years after the passage of this act, and not afterward. And all such suits, in case the right of action shall accrue hereafter, shall be commenced and prosecuted within six years after the said right of action shall have accrued, and not afterward, saving, nevertheless, the rights of infants, feme covcrts, and persons non compos mentis, so that they sue within three years after their disabilities are removed.

After this period had elapsed the sureties of Robinson took counsel of able attorneys as to whether they were liable upon that bond, and were advised that they were not. One of the sureties was indebted to the estate of Robinson in the sum of $4,000 and upward. Another of the sureties was a man of ample means; he died, and his estate has been finally settled. And now, after about fourteen years from the death of Robinson, the United States comes forward and institutes a suit against the surviving sureties and is seeking to recover judgment against them.

Under the circumstances it seems to me and to the committee that these sureties ought to be discharged. Even admitting for the sake of the argument that the statute to which I have referred does not bar this action, yet the Government has laid by for about fourteen year before bringing this suit. In the mean time the estate of Robinson has been finally settled; one of the sureties has paid to that estate this $4,000 which has been distributed, and another of the sureties has since died and his estate has been finally settled and distributed. The consequence will be, unless this bill shall be passed, that these laches on the part of the Government will throw the whole burden on the two sureties still living. Under the circumstances I think this relief should be granted to these sureties, and it is the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary that this bill should be passed.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Why should these sureties be released from their share of the bond? I can see where there can be some equity in releasing them from paying the share of another surety.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I do not think we should make fish of one and flesh of the other. I call the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF CONGRESSMEN FOR PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CESSNA, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, a bill (H. R. No. 3359) fixing the time for the election of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania to the Forty-fourth Congress.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that on the Tuesday next following the first Monday in November, 1874, there shall be elected in each congressional district in the State of Pennsylvania one Representative to represent said State in the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States.

Mr. CESSNA. I desire to make a very brief explanation to show the necessity for the passage of this bill. The fourth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States reads thus:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania by the act of 1839 provides that "the election of Representatives of the people of this Commonwealth in the Congress of the United States shall take place on the second Tuesday in October, of the year 1840 and on the second Tuesday of October in every second year thereafter, at the places appointed by law for the holding of general elections."

The Forty-second Congress passed a general law making elections for members of Congress uniform throughout the United States. But, as will be seen by reference to the third section of that act, it goes into effect only in the election of members of the Forty-fifth Congress. Therefore it does not apply to the election which takes place in 1874 for members of the Forty-fourth Congress. For a long period of time the general elections in Pennsylvania have taken place on the second Tuesday of October. But, as is well known to members of the House, recently the State of Pennsylvania held a convention to revise their constitution, and that convention has changed the time for holding general elections in that State from the second Tuesday in October to the day named in this bill. In order, therefore, to avoid the necessity of holding two elections this year in Pennsylvania, one for members of Congress on the second Tuesday of October and the other for State officers in November, we have reported this bill. I believe it is the unanimous wish of the Pennsylvania delegation that the bill should pass.

Mr. SPEER. Should not this bill provide officers for holding the elections? Should it not say by whom the elections shall be held?

Mr. CESSNA. Certainly not; that follows. The State officers always hold the election, and they will hold it under this bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CESSNA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF PERSONS OF FOREIGN BIRTH.

Mr. CESSNA also reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill (H. R. No. 3581) to protect persons of foreign birth against forcible constraint or involuntary servitude; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides in the first section that whoever shall knowingly and willfully bring into the United States, or the Territories thereof, any person inveigled or forcibly kidnaped in any other country, with intent to hold such person so inveigled or kidnaped in confinement or to any involuntary service, and whoever shall knowingly and willfully hold any other person in involuntary confinement or to any involuntary service, or who shall transfer any such service to any other person except for the purpose of acquiring a trade or occupation in the United States or the Territories thereof; and whoever shall sell, or cause to be sold, into any condition of involuntary servitude, any other person for any term whatever, and every person who shall knowingly and willfully hold to involuntary service any person so sold and bought, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned for a term not exceeding five years and pay a fine not exceeding $5,000.

The second section provides that every person who shall be accessory to any of the felonies herein declared, either before or after the fact, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned for a term not exceeding five years and pay a fine not exceeding $1,000.

The third section provides that every person charged with the felonies therein declared may be tried in the district in which the same have been committed, or in any district in which the person so inveigled, brought, kidnaped, sold, or held has been taken under such confinement or holding to involuntary servitude.

The fourth section declares that upon the trial of the felonies therein declared the consent of the person so held, confined, or kidnaped shall not be a defense unless it appear satisfactorily to the jury that such consent was not extorted by threats or by duress.

Mr. CESSNA. I desire to state briefly that this bill is intended to prevent the practice of enslaving, buying, selling, or using Italian children, a practice which has been so common in the large cities of our country. I believe this bill which was introduced into this House by my colleague [Mr. NEGLEY] is a literal copy of one which was presented in the Senate by the late Senator Sumner. It is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. COX. I do not object to the bill, though this is a very difficult question to legislate upon. But I should like to throw out the suggestion, inasmuch as we have the exposition of the bill authoritatively, that this practice can never be thoroughly stopped unless by the intervention of the treaty-making power.

Mr. CESSNA. I cannot see how it is possible that the passage of this bill can in any way interfere with any treaty which the gentleman may desire to have made hereafter.

Mr. COX. I do not know that it will.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CESSNA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COSTS, FEES, ETC., IN FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. CESSNA also reported back, with a favorable recommendation, from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill (H. R. No. 2911) to adjust costs, fees, and allowances in Federal courts; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the courts of the United States shall have power to award to the successful party in all causes pending therein, whether in admiralty, common law, or equity, for fees of attorneys, proctors, or solicitors, such costs, fees, and allowances as are allowed and provided for by law to the successful party or his attorney, proctor, or solicitor, in the courts of the States in which such courts of the United States are respectively held.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Why would it not be better to prescribe specifically the fees, allowances, &c.?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We cannot do that; we must follow the practice of the several States in this respect.

Mr. CESSNA. The bill authorizes the allowance of fees, costs, in the United States courts according to the practice in the States respectively. There can be no objection to the bill, so far as I can see.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We cannot fix uniform rates; we must follow the practice of the States.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then there is no uniformity at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CESSNA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MONEY INVOLVED IN SUITS.

Mr. CESSNA also reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill providing for the restraining of certain officers of the United States from paying money involved in suits; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that whenever an order shall be rendered by a competent court in the District of Columbia restraining or enjoining any head of a Department, or the Treasurer, or any accounting officer of the Treasury of the United States, from paying a debt, or any part of a debt, due, or alleged to be due, by the United States to a certain party, or to certain parties, therein named, or their assignee or assignees, or enjoining or restraining such party or parties, or their assignee or assignees, from receiving the said debt, or any specified amount or portion thereof; a copy of such order, duly certified by the judge and clerk of said court to be a copy, shall be deposited in the office of such head of a Department or accounting officer, and it shall be his or their duty to respect said order so long as it shall remain in full force.

The second section provides that it shall also be the duty of such head of a Department or such accounting officer to obey and carry out the interlocutory or final order or decree of said court in any such case, so far as the same may be applicable or is intended to operate on such head of a Department or on such accounting officer.

The third section provides that nothing in the act shall be taken or held to apply to any pension, or to the salary of any officer or employé of the Government.

Mr. CESSNA. If gentlemen do not desire any explanation, I will call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask that the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, the attention of the House should be called to this bill. It commands the heads of Departments in the city of Washington, and especially the head of the Treasury Department, to pay out any money on the order of any court.

Mr. DAWES. It does just the opposite. It commands the Treasury Department to obey the district judge, which is worse yet. It subordinates the Executive Department of this Governments to the judiciary of this District. That is what it does.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It compels the heads of Departments here to watch every claim agent and every lobby agent.

Mr. CESSNA. I deny all those allegations. We have agreed not to consume time with any of these bills, so that all the members of the Judiciary Committee may have an opportunity to get in their reports this evening. I therefore withdraw the bill for the present and ask consent to print some remarks in explanation of the bill.

There was no objection, and the remarks of Mr. CESSNA are as follows:

Mr. CESSNA. There are several considerations which seem to make necessary such a law as that proposed by this bill. First, it is undoubtedly true that there are cases of frequent occurrence where just claims against the Government are audited and passed into a draft which ought not to be paid to the claimant, in whose name the allowance is made. Oftentimes parties, holding equitable titles to portions if not all of the claim, are wholly unable to legally assert such rights, because of the peculiar condition of existing laws, until the claim has passed into a warrant. One instance may be stated. The act of February 26, 1853, (10 United States Statutes at Large, 170,) prohibits the assignment or transfer of a claim until "after the allowance of such claim, the ascertainment of the amount due, and the issuing of a warrant for the payment thereof." When the claim has reached that stage, the Government has no longer any interest in it; the accounting officers of the Treasury having done their duty in auditing it, and having nothing further to do but to pay the claim to the party in whose name it has been audited, they cannot recognize any assignment made previously to this time, however equitable and just such assignment may appear to be. Their plain duty is to deliver the draft according to its literal import.

The equitable owner is remitted to the courts to work out his rights, if the legal owner is dishonest and refuses to pay him. He therefore applies to the chancellor and procures a restraining order against the dishonest claimant, in whose name the draft is issued and who will and can control its proceeds, to the prejudice of all other parties in interest, inasmuch as he can only serve the Secretary of the Treasury with a copy of the process—the courts having no power to enjoin the Secretary—which process that officer is not bound to obey. The hardship of this state of affairs can the better be understood and appreciated when we consider that the majority of parties who bring claims against the Government are non-residents of the District of Columbia and wholly irresponsible. The difficulty of getting service upon such a party is apparent, too, though even if he could be served the writ could go no further than to restrain him from receiving and indorsing the draft which a bad man would not hesitate to disobey. Having obtained control of the draft—the Secretary and those under him having no authority of law to refuse to deliver or pay it to the party named therein—the very spirit which impels him to ignore and defraud his creditor would embolden if not urge him to disobey the process of a court when he knows that he cannot be prevented from drawing the money on that draft and after he has fled without the jurisdiction of that court. A very recent case will best illustrate this view:

The administratrix of one Alexander J. Atocha obtained a judgment in the Court of Claims for $467,763. The petition was filed and the suit commenced in the life-time of said Atocha. In the petition he makes the following statement, namely: "Your petitioner further shows that the whole of the said sum of $467,763 still remains unpaid, and all interest thereon, and that on the — day of ——, in the year ——, your petitioner, for valuable consideration, assigned, transferred, and set over to Louis Stanislaus Hargous, of the city of Vera Cruz, in the republic of Mexico, 20 per cent. of the claim of your petitioner herein, and that the said Louis Stanislaus Hargous is fully and justly entitled to receive from and out of any judgment that may be rendered in favor of your petitioner herein the sum of 20 per cent. thereof; and that his administratrix took out letters in Maryland and gave bond in the sum of $500. After the judgment was rendered she procured and presented the transcript to the Treasury and demanded payment. The attorneys of the creditors (the estate being largely in debt) objected unless she would increase the amount of her administration bond. But this she refused to do. The First Comptroller withheld the draft as long as he could, fully recognizing the peril of the situation so far as the creditors were concerned. But impressed with the knowledge that he had no legal right to withhold it longer or refuse to deliver it, he was compelled to surrender it to the administratrix, who drew the money and left the District of Columbia immediately with it. Thus the party named by Mr. Atocha in his petition as being entitled to a portion of the sum was cheated out of his equitable claim, because the law afforded him no protection or remedy.

This is but a mild illustration of the hardship and injustice which the absence of such a law as the one now under consideration works, as developed in the business of the Treasury almost daily. Had the law now proposed been in existence, such an act of fraud could not have happened, because process served upon the Secretary or any of his accounting officers would have given the court jurisdiction and compelled the appearance of the administratrix with or without process.

I cannot perceive any good reason for exempting the Secretary of the Treasury or any head of a Department from the control of the order of a chancellor. Such order simply makes the official the custodian of the money to await the final order of the court in the controversy between proper litigants for the fund. The Government is put to no additional expense or trouble, its action in the premises not being the subject of review. The claim, having been passed upon and allowed, is forever settled, so far as the Government is concerned, and a delay, however long, in delivering and paying the draft can in nowise embarrass the Government.

Inasmuch as there is no sort of protection or safeguard for the class of equitable claimants who are to be benefited by the remedy now proposed and who are obviously entitled to such remedy, it would seem to be a proper change of existing laws.

CURRENCY BILL.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the currency question. (See Appendix.)

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WHITE, from the Judiciary Committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 600) to amend the several acts in relation to the northern judicial district of the State of Mississippi, and to provide for the times and places of holding the district courts of the United States therein in future, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that hereafter the northern judicial district of the State of Mississippi shall embrace all the territory of said State between the Mississippi River, on the west, and the western boundary of the State of Alabama, on the east, and lying north of the present counties of Bolivar, Sunflower, Carroll, Attala, Leake, Neshoba, and Kemper, and including the territory of those counties themselves as part thereof.

The second section provides that the northern judicial district of the State of Mississippi, as now thereby constituted, shall be divided into an eastern and a western division; that the counties of Tishemingo, Itawamba, Alcorn, Prentiss, Union, Lee, Pontotoc, Monroe, Chickasaw, Colfax, Oktibbeha, Lowndes, Noxubee, Winston, Neshoba, and Kemper shall compose the eastern division of said northern judicial district; that all the other counties embraced in the northern judicial district, as now thereby constituted, shall compose the western division of said northern judicial district; that there shall be in each year two terms of the United States district court for the eastern division to be styled "the district court of the United States for the eastern division of the northern judicial district of Mississippi," held at the city of Aberdeen, in said eastern division, to begin on the first Mondays of June and December, respectively, and shall continue twenty-four judicial days, if the business so long require; that there shall also be in each year two terms of the United States district court for the western division, to be styled "the district court of the United States for the western division of the northern judicial district of Mississippi," held at the town of Oxford, in said western division, to begin on the first Mondays of April and October, and to continue so long as the business may require. That the district judge of the United States for the State of Mississippi is hereby required to hold the courts aforesaid. Juries shall be summoned for the additional courts thereby created as now provided by law for the summonsing of juries in said northern district.

The third section provides that hereafter all suits to be brought in either of said courts, not of a local nature, shall be brought in the division where the defendants, or either of them, reside, (or where they may be found in said northern district, without reference to the division of their residence;) but if there be more than one defendant, and they reside in different divisions, or any of them reside in the southern judicial district of Mississippi, the plaintiff may sue in either division or district, and send duplicate writs to the other division or district, directed to the marshal of the district where he or they may reside, on which said writs shall be indorsed by the plaintiff, or his attorney, that the same is a duplicate of the original writ sued out of the district court of the proper division or district; but wherever a defendant is sued out of the division of his residence, and is not joined with a codefendant whose residence is in the division where the suit is brought, he may before pleading therein, on motion, and on affidavit of the division of his residence, change the venue to the court of the division of his residence, which suit shall stand for trial at the first term of the court to which the venue may be so changed; but any cause may, by written consent of both parties, or their attorneys of record, be transferred to the court of either division, without regard to the division of the residence of the defendants, and whether such cause be now pending or be instituted hereafter.

The fourth section provides that the clerk of the northern judicial district of Mississippi shall be sole clerk of the courts of both divisions of the said district, to be appointed in the manner now prescribed by law. That the said clerk or his deputies shall reside at each of the places of holding said courts, and shall there keep an office and the records, files, and documents pertaining to the court of that division; and said clerk shall be entitled to the same fees now allowed to him by law. In addition to his powers to appoint deputies, as now prescribed by law, said clerk shall be required to appoint a chief deputy for the court of that division in which he himself may not reside, who shall have all the powers of the clerk in his absence, and shall reside at the place of holding the court for the other division, where the chief clerk does not reside.

The fifth section provides that the marshal and the district attorney for the northern judicial district of Mississippi shall respectively be the marshal and the district attorney for the eastern and western divisions of said northern district, and shall be allowed the same fees, and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as now provided by law. That process issuing from the courts of either division of said northern district shall be directed to the marshal of said northern district, and may be executed by him or his deputies upon the party or parties for whom issued, wherever found in said northern district; and said marshal shall have an office, and at least one general deputy residing at the place of holding court in each division unless he shall reside there himself.

The sixth section provides that all causes and proceedings in law, equity, or bankruptcy, and all criminal and other prosecutions now pending in the district court of the northern district of Mississippi, where all the defendants (or the plaintiffs, where the jurisdiction is derived from the residence of plaintiffs within the district) shall reside in the eastern division of said district, shall be transferred to the court of such eastern division of said northern district, said transfer to be made in vacation or in term time; if made in vacation, only an affidavit of all the parties defendant that they are resident in said eastern division, and on ten days' notice of the purpose and time of hearing said motion; but if made in term time, then on motion and affidavit only.

The seventh section provides that said district courts for the eastern and western divisions of said northern district shall have the same powers and jurisdiction, with the same right to parties to prosecute appeals and writs of error therefrom, as now pertains to the district court for said northern judicial district.

The eighth section provides that all causes, civil or criminal, now pending in the United States court for the southern district of Mississippi against parties residing in that part of the territory of said southern district by the act annexed to and incorporated in the aforesaid northern judicial district, may remain and be finally disposed of in the court for said southern district, unless the defendant therein shall desire to have the same transferred to the appropriate court in the northern district, in which last event such transfer shall be applied for and made to the court for the division of the residence of such defendants in said northern district, in the manner above provided in the sixth section thereof, for the transfer of pending causes from the court of the western division of said northern district to that of the eastern division thereof, mutatis mutandis.

The ninth section provides that when a cause shall be transferred, as above provided by the sixth and eighth sections thereof, either from the western division of said northern district to the eastern division thereof, or from the southern district of Mississippi to the appropriate division of said northern district, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court from which the transfer is made to carefully transmit to the clerk of the court to which the transfer is made the entire file of papers of the cause, and all documents and deposits in his court pertaining thereto, together with a certified transcript of the record of all orders, interlocutory decrees, or other entries in said cause; and he shall also certify, under the seal of the court, that the papers sent are all which are on file in said court belonging to the cause; for the performance of which duties said clerk so transmitting and certifying shall receive the same fees as are now allowed by law for similar services, to be taxed in the bill of costs and regularly collected with the other costs of the cause; and such transcript, when so certified and received, shall thenceforth constitute a part of the record of the cause in the court to which the transfer shall be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit this bill creates two additional courts in North Mississippi, and is subject to the point of order in that it is virtually an appropriation of money, and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole. It is also amenable to the point of order in that it provides for a deputy clerk and deputy marshal.

Mr. BARRY. It does not provide for the expenditure of a single dollar.

Mr. WHITE. The bill does not involve any additional expense at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was of the opinion when it was read that it does not involve any additional expenditure.

Mr. BARRY. In a few words I can state the substance of that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It provides for additional courts and deputy marshals.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was listening somewhat attentively to the bill, although he may not have heard the part to which the gentleman's point of order applies, and he was of the impression when the bill was read it was not liable to the point of order.

Mr. BARRY. The same point of order was raised against this bill in the Forty-second Congress and it was decided by the Chair that it could not obtain inasmuch as it incurred no additional expenditure.

The SPEAKER. It may, however, be different in this Congress, because the rule has been changed; but even with the strict rule the House is under, the Chair does not think it is liable to the point of order. It may involve additional expense, but the Chair does not see where that is required. The Chair decides therefore it may be considered in the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 32; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BARRY and Mr. HOLMAN tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 37.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COURT AT JACKSON, TENNESSEE.

Mr. WHITE also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1995) to amend the act approved June 18, 1838, entitled "An act to require the judge of the district courts of East and West Tennessee to hold a court at Jackson, in said State," with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, in its first section provides that so much of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to require the judge of the district courts of East and West Tennessee to hold a court at Jackson, in said State," approved June 18, 1838, be so amended as to detach the county of Perry, as at present bounded, in the State of Tennessee, from the district of West Tennessee, and the same be attached to the middle district of Tennessee; and that all cases arising in said county of Perry which are now returnable to the United States district court at Memphis shall hereafter be returnable to the United States district court at Nashville, in said State of Tennessee.

The second section provides that all cases from said county of Perry now pending may, with the consent of parties, by order of the United States district court for said State, be transferred from Memphis to Nashville.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITE, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. WHITE, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2132) to reorganize and fix the times for holding the United States district courts in Alabama.

The bill was read. The first section abolishes the several districts of the United States court in and for the State of Alabama.

The second section provides that the State of Alabama shall be divided into four districts of the United States district court, to be called and known as follows: The northern district, which shall consist of and embrace the counties of Lauderdale, Colbert, Franklin, Lawrence, Marion, Winston, Fayette, Walker, Blount, Marshall, Etowah, De Kalb, Limestone, Madison, Morgan, Jackson, Sanford, Cherokee, Calhoun, and Cleburne; the western district, which shall consist of and embrace the counties of Pickens, Greene, Hale, Bibb, Tuscaloosa, Choctaw, Sumter, Marengo, Perry, Jefferson, Shelby, and Saint Clair; the eastern district, which shall consist of and embrace the counties of Dallas, Autauga, Baker, Lowndes, Elmore, Montgomery, Coosa, Talladega, Clay, Randolph, Chambers, Tallapoosa, Lee, Macon, Russell, Bullock, Barbour, Butler, and Crenshaw; the southern district, which shall consist of and embrace the counties of Mobile, Washington, Baldwin, Escambia, Monroe, Conecuh, Covington, Coffee, Dale, Geneva, Wilcox, Clarke, Pike, and Henry.

The third section provides that there shall be holden annually two terms of said court in each of said districts at the times and places as follows: For the northern district, in the city of Huntsville, on the second Mondays in January and June, and shall continue two weeks at each term, unless the business is sooner disposed of; for the western district, in the town of Eutaw, on the fourth Mondays in February and October, and continue two weeks, unless the business is sooner disposed of; for the eastern district, in the city of Montgomery, on the fourth Mondays in April and November, and continue two weeks, unless the business is sooner disposed of; for the southern district, in the city of Mobile, on the second Mondays in May and December, and continue two weeks, unless the business is sooner disposed of.

The fourth section provides that the district attorney and marshal for the southern district shall be the district attorney and marshal for the western district; and that all process returnable to the district courts of the State of Alabama, as now provided by law, shall be returnable in the same manner to the terms fixed by the act.

The fifth section provides that the criminal docket in said several district courts shall be taken up on Thursday of the first week, unless otherwise ordered by the judge of the district.

The sixth section provides that the circuit court of the United States at Mobile shall have the same jurisdiction in the western district thereby created that it has in the southern district of Alabama.

The seventh section repeals all laws and parts of laws contravening the provisions of the act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that that bill authorizes the appointment of new officers and is therefore liable to the point of order.

Mr. SPEER. It makes four districts and authorizes the appointment of a clerk in each, whereas there are only three now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana raises the point of order that the bill authorizes the appointment of new officers and hence must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. WHITE. I ask leave to amend the bill by striking out the section providing for the appointment of an additional clerk.

Mr. SPEER. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. SPEER. I object.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WHITE, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1639) to provide for the holding of an additional term of the United States district court for the southern district of Mississippi.

The bill was read. The first section provides that there shall hereafter be held a term of the United States district court for the southern district of Mississippi, at the town of Shieldsborough, in the county of Hancock, commencing on the first Monday of August in each year, to be held by the United States district judge of Mississippi.

The second section provides that said court shall have jurisdiction of all causes, civil and criminal, at law, in equity, and in admiralty, of which the circuit and district courts of the United States have jurisdiction, under the Constitution and laws thereof, arising in the counties of Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Greene, Perry, and Pearl, in said district, or in which the defendants reside, or may be served with process within said counties.

The third section provides that the clerk of the district court for the southern district of Mississippi, the marshal, and district attorney for said district, shall perform the duties pertaining to their offices respectively for said court; and the said clerk and marshal shall each appoint a deputy to reside and keep their offices at said town of Shieldsborough, and who shall, in the absence of their principals, do and perform all the duties pertaining to said offices respectively.

The fourth section provides that all causes now pending in the district or circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Mississippi in which the defendants reside within said counties shall be transferred to and tried in the district court aforesaid, to be held at Shieldsborough, as aforesaid.

The fifth section provides that in all cases determined in said court in which an appeal or writ of error to or from the circuit court to the district court of the United States in said district is now allowed by law, an appeal or writ of error shall be allowed to and from the court so held at Shieldsborough, to the circuit court for said district at Jackson, to be heard and determined as other causes of like character in said circuit court.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF DEBTS AND BOUNTIES.

Mr. WHITE, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2035) providing for payment of debts and bounty on contracts made, and for services rendered previous to the 14th of April, 1861, by persons engaged in the rebellion, and repealing all acts and joint resolutions conflicting therewith.

The bill was read.

The first section repeals all acts and parts of acts, all joint resolutions and parts of joint resolutions, which require an oath to be taken by any creditor of the United States, or any person to whom the bounty of the United States has been extended, before receiving payment of his debt, or the bounty given under provisions of law, and all such acts or joint resolutions, or parts thereof, as prohibit the payment of such debt, or the extension of such bounty, on account of participation in, or sympathizing with, the late rebellion, except the laws relative to claims of which the Court of Claims and the several commissions constituted and authorized by law to pass upon claims arising out of the war of the rebellion, and except such oaths or affirmations as are required by law for the verification of claims against the United States.

The second section provides that whoever, being a creditor of the United States on account of any contract before the 14th of April, 1861, or a claimant of any bounty of the United States given by law for military or naval service done before the 14th of April, 1861, shall be entitled to receive the amount due and payable, notwithstanding any participation in or sympathy with the late rebellion, or the exercising of the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; and repeals all laws and parts of laws contravening the provisions of the act.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I think that that bill is liable to a point of order.

Mr. HURLBUT. It is subject to a point of order without doubt.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I suggest that the bill makes no direct appropriation from the Treasury. It merely repeals a law, and before any money can be paid from the Treasury there must be a direct appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

Providing for payment of debts and bounty on contracts made, and for services rendered, previous to the 14th of April, 1861, by persons engaged in the rebellion, and repealing all acts and joint resolutions conflicting therewith.

The SPEAKER. It is very evident that this bill is subject to the point of order both negatively and positively. It not only provides for the payment of debts, but it removes obstacles to the payment of debts. The bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PROOF OF LOYALTY BY CLAIMANTS.

Mr. WHITE, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 18) repealing joint resolution of March 2, 1867, prohibiting payment of debts due by the United States before the war unless loyalty is proved.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution repeals the joint resolution prohibiting payment by the United States of debts due before the war, unless loyalty be proved, approved March 2, 1872.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I make the same point of order on this joint resolution that was made upon the bill last before the House.

The SPEAKER. This joint resolution is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MAYNARD. Both of these are pari materia. I suggest that they be incorporated in one bill, and go together to the Committee of the Whole where we can discuss them.

The SPEAKER. They will both go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAYNARD. I mean let them go as one bill.

The SPEAKER. The one can be considered as an amendment to the other.

The joint resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole.

STAMPING OF UNSTAMPED INSTRUMENTS, ETC.

Mr. WHITE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3582) to provide for the stamping of unstamped instruments, documents, or papers; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all instruments, documents, or papers made, signed, or issued, and subject to a stamp duty or tax under any law heretofore existing, and remaining unstamped, may be stamped by any person having an interest therein, or, where the original is lost, a copy thereof, at any time prior to the 1st of June, 1875, and the same shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if stamped when made, signed, or issued.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the above are hereby repealed.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the second section of this bill.

The SPEAKER. That will be omitted by the engrossing clerk.

Mr. WHITE. The second section is a repealing section.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suppose all conflicting laws or parts of laws will be repealed by this bill without any such declaration. The effect of passing a statute in conflict with an existing statute is to repeal it. This section does not repeal any statute eo nomine.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to inquire of the Chair by what authority this clause is stricken out by the enrolling clerk?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought it was a section providing that the act should take effect from and after its approval or passage. That section has been left out of all bills heretofore by general consent of the House on the engrossment of the bills. The Chair misapprehended the section when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] proposed to strike it out.

Mr. MAYNARD. This is not a matter of any importance; but it has always seemed to me to disfigure legislation to say, after we have passed an act, that all acts and parts of acts in conflict shall be repealed. It is a well-known principle of law that such acts or parts of acts are repealed by the passage of the bill. If, however, you introduce a repealing clause, and say that such an act or such a section or proviso of such a section is repealed, that is specific and definite and means something.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the rule of law to be different from that stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.] The rule governing the courts, when there is no repealing clause in the statute, in case of repugnancy, is if possible to give effect to both statutes. There being no expressions of intention on the part of the legislature to repeal any existing law, the result is that wherever it is possible to reconcile by construction two statutes the rule of law is that both statutes shall stand.

Mr. MAYNARD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WHITE. Let me get through. When there is a repealing clause, then of course that is regarded as an expression of intention on the part of the legislature to repeal all the laws in conflict with the act.

Mr. MAYNARD. It then leaves to be decided what acts or parts of acts are consistent or inconsistent. The courts of course will say that they are consistent whenever they can make them appear consistent. If my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. WHITE] thinks this section is any embellishment of his bill or adds anything to it or makes it more effective, I will not press my motion to strike out, but will withdraw it.

Mr. WHITE. As I have had such luminous examples I will adhere to the bill as reported.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN G. BYNUM.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3307) for the relief of the estate of John G. Bynum, of Tennessee, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPREME COURT.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported adversely upon a bill (H. R. No. 1119) changing the time of holding the Supreme Court, and providing for a session of the same at Saint Louis, Missouri; and the bill was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

NORTON POST-MARKING AND CANCELING STAMP.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon a bill (H. R. No. 1789) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication and determination all claims of the parties therein named for the past and future use of the Norton post-marking and canceling hand-stamp and the Robertson improved hand-stamp; and the bill was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to report back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 347) to divide the State of Illinois into three judicial districts and to provide for holding courts therein.

Mr. Speaker, anticipating that some "master of the situation" will discover some point of order against this bill, I desire to deprive him of the privilege of making it by moving that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 2265) relating to the salaries of United States district judges.

The first section of the bill was read. It provides that the salaries of the United States district judges for the district of Massachusetts, the eastern, northern, and southern districts of New York, the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the district of Maryland, the southern district of Ohio, the eastern district of Missouri, the northern district of Illinois, the district of Louisiana, and the district of California are thereby fixed at the sum of $6,000 a year; and the salaries of all the other United States district judges are thereby fixed at the sum of $4,000 a year; said salaries to be paid quarterly, as of and from the 1st day of January, 1874.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I raise the point of order that this bill must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. No, sir; I do not allow the gentleman to raise that point; I raise it myself. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole and made a special order.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Well, I supposed everybody would consent since I am so willing to send it there. It is a most important bill.

Mr. DAWES. I object. I do not like the way in which the bill puts Massachusetts in the front.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I know the gentleman will not object when he knows what the bill is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again submits the question whether there is objection to making the bill a special order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole, to be placed on the general Calendar.

COMMISSIONERS OF CIRCUIT COURTS.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 1859) authorizing commissioners of the United States circuit courts to take depositions under commission.

The bill was read. It provides that commissioners of bail and affidavits appointed by the circuit courts of the United States shall have power to take the depositions of witnesses under commission according to the common usage, and such depositions shall be admitted as evidence in the courts of the United States, subject, however, to all legal exceptions, as to manner and form of taking and returning, known to the laws of the State in which such court is held, except as to the authority of such commissioners to take them.

The amendment reported by the committee was to strike out at the close of the bill the words "except as to the authority of such commissioners to take them."

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to occupy one moment in relation to this bill. Doubtless members have listened to the reading attentively; and I know that the bill commends itself to their best consideration. At the risk of being a little obnoxious, I will only state that it provides that commissioners appointed by the judges of the United States courts may take depositions. A question has been raised with reference to their authority in this respect, especially in Texas; and some courts have decided that the practice of the States in reference to the taking of depositions having been adopted, these officers have not this authority. The bill does not involve any expense; and I think it is an improvement to the existing law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, submitted a written report from the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary upon the distribution of the Geneva award; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TREMAIN. I ask that a minority report which is in the hands of my colleague [Mr. POTTER] may also be ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ADMISSION OF WOMEN AS ATTORNEYS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3583) to allow certain citizens of the United States to practice law in the courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that every female citizen of the United States, otherwise found duly qualified, shall be admitted to practice as attorney and counselor at law in the several courts of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If there is no desire to have an explanation of this bill I will move the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The bill is all right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be again read.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. It seems to me that this bill does not dispose of a question which, as I understand, has been raised recently, as to what may be understood by the language "otherwise qualified." I will ask the gentleman whether under this bill femes covert, or married women, will be allowed to practice as attorneys.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Clearly they will.

Mr. LAWRENCE. They will if they are "female citizens of the United States."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The difficulty is that one court in the United States—the Court of Claims—has decided that a woman cannot be admitted to practice although duly qualified.

Mr. MAYNARD. Not because she is a woman, but because of her disabilities arising from coverture.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; because she is a woman.

Mr. MAYNARD. I did not so understand the decision.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The greater includes the less. If all women are allowed to practice when found otherwise qualified, then married women will be allowed to practice if found otherwise qualified.

Mr. MAYNARD. The question is, What is meant by the language "otherwise qualified?"

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. "Otherwise qualified" is to know as much law as my friend from Tennessee.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, there were—ayes 63, noes 54; no quorum voting.

Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 95, noes 66, not voting, 128; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Barber, Barry, Begole, Biery, Bland, Bradley, Bromberg, Buffinton, Bundy, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Coburn, Conger, Crocker, Darrall, Dawes, Donnan, Farwell, Field, Foster, Freeman, Gooch, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Houghton, Howe, Hunter, Hyde, Kasson, Knapp, Lawrence, Lawson, Loughridge, Lowe, Marshall, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Moore, Morrison, Myers, Niles, O'Neill, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Purman, Rainey, Rapier, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, Shanks, Sheats, Sloan, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Stanard, Starkweather, Stone, Strait, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—95.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Burleigh, Roderick R. Butler, Caldwell, Clymer, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crossland, Danford, Dunnell, Giddings, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hays, Hereford, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, Holman, Hunton, Hurlbut, Lofland, Magee, Maynard, McLean, Milliken, Packer, Poland, Ray, Rice, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, Sawyer, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Storm, Swann, Townsend, Tremain, Vance, Whitehead, Whitthorne, and John D. Young—66.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Averill, Banning, Barrere, Bass, Berry, Burchard, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Cotton, Creamer, Crittenden, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Davis, DeWitt, Dobbins, Duell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Eldredge, Elliott, Fort, Frye, Garfield, Glover, Ganckel, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Havens, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hynes, Jewett, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lowndes, Luttrell, Lynch, Martin, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Merriam, Mills, Mitchell, Monroe, Morey, Neal, Negley, Nesmith, Niblack, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packard, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Randall, Ransier, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, Sherwood, Small, Smart, William A. Smith, Snyder, Standiford, Stephens, St. John Stowell, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tyner, Waddell, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, George Willard, Willie, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—128.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

During the roll-call,

Mr. COOK stated that his colleague, Mr. YOUNG, who was absent, would, if present, vote in the affirmative.

Mr. FOSTER stated that his colleague, Mr. SHERWOOD, was absent by leave of the House.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RICE moved the House adjourn.

Mr. BECK demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 96, not voting 137; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barnum, Beck, Begole, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Roderick R. Butler, Caldwell, Clymer, Danford, Farwell, Giddings, Hagans, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hereford, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hunter, Lofland, Lynch, Magee, Maynard, McLean, Milliken, Morrison, Rainey, Rice, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts James C. Robinson, Isaac W. Scudder, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloss, Southard, Speer, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waldron, Whitehead, Whitthorne, William Williams, and John D. Young—56.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Barber, Barry, Berry, Biery, Bradley, Bromberg, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Coburn, Conger, Cook, Corwin, Dounan, Dunnell, Field, Foster, Freeman, Gooch, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Holman, Houghton, Howe, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Knapp, Lawrence, Lawson, Loughridge, Lowe, Marshall, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Moore, Myers, Niles, O'Neill, Packer, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, Pierce, Potter, Rapier, Ray, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Shanks, Sheats, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, Stone, Strait, Taylor, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, White, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—96.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Averill, Banning, Barrere, Bass, Burchard, Cannon, Cason, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crocker, Crooke, Crossland, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Dobbins, Duell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Eldredge, Elliott, Fort, Frye, Garfield, Glover, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Havens, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hynes, Jewett, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lowndes, Luttrell, Martin, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Merriam, Mills, Mitchell, Monroe, Morey, Neal, Negley, Nesmith, Niblack, Nunn, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Packard, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Purman, Randall, Ransier, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, Sherwood, Sloan, Small, Smart, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Standiford, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tyner, Waddell, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, George Willard, Willie, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—137.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, stated that Mr. LUTTRELL was necessarily detained from the House by business.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BECK. Has the previous question been demanded on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 29; no quorum voting.

The Speaker ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. BECK.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 17; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. No motion is in order except the House adjourn or that there be a call of the House.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. POLAND. I move that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 50.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 66.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CHAFFEE: The petition of the judges of the Supreme Court of Colorado for an appropriation to enlarge the penitentiary of the Territory, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: The petition of the proprietors of the Evening Star, Washington, District of Columbia, for an appropriation to pay an account which fell due in the last fiscal year, to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. DARRALL: The petition of J. W. Flanagan, sr., of Rusk County, Texas, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of citizens of Louisiana, for an amendment of the homestead law, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FARWELL: Resolutions of workingmen of Chicago, protesting against the repeal of the eight-hour law, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GOOCH: The petition of Madeleine Vinton Dahlgren, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Dahlgren, for compensation for the adoption and use by the United States Navy of certain inventions of Rear-Admiral Dahlgren relating to ordnance, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HERNDON: The petition of citizens of Kaufman County, Texas, for the relief of V. I. Stirman, Postmaster at Kaufman, Texas, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McNULTA: The petition of Ann E. Miller, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Mary Schinley, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PIERCE: The petition of Joseph H. Chadwick and others, of Massachusetts, incorporators of the Joseph Warren Monumental Association, for a donation of brass cannon, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of George H. Hubbs and 108 others, of Kinsley, Kansas, for the location of a land office at Kinsley, Kansas, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS: The petition of citizens of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in favor of arbitration and an international code, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey: The petition of Bridget T. Hopper, widow of Edward C. Hopper, late captain Fifth New Jersey Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania: The petition of citizens of Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, for the substitution of specific for ad valorem duties on tin plates, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of Robert H. Hyatt, Henry Moss, and 230 others, of Cherokee County, North Carolina, and of R. H. Penland and 45 others, of Haywood County, North Carolina, for aid in building the Western North Carolina Railroad from Old Fort, North Carolina, to Ducktown, Tennessee, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, the petition of Minerva Williams, widow of Jesse Williams, late of Third Tennessee Mounted Infantry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITEHEAD: The petition of Moses Lacy, of Lynchburgh, Virginia, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: The petition of citizens of Alabama, for aid to the Chickasaw, Birmingham and Tuscaloosa Railroad Company, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, the petition of Nancy J. Thomas, to have the name of her deceased husband placed on the muster-roll of Company C, Second Tennessee Mounted Infantry, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Nancy J. Thomas, widow of James M. Thomas, late private in Company C, Second Tennessee Mounted Infantry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIE: Joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, in favor of the speedy reimbursement of Henry Warren for losses incurred by reason of the destruction of his wagon train, and other property by the Comanche, Kiowa, and Cheyenne Indians, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of Galveston, Texas, for the passage of a law to define a gross of matches and provide uniform packages for the same, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 2, 1874.

The Senate met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

J. L. TEDROW.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent now, as I am obliged to be absent on committee service, to call up House bill No. 955.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 955) for the relief of J. L. Tedrow, of Clarke County, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, upon presentation of satisfactory evidence to him of the loss of postal stamps of the value of $34.50, or any less amount, by J. L. Tedrow, as postmaster at Ottawa, Clarke County, Iowa, by burglars, as alleged, to credit his account as postmaster with the amount so feloniously taken and not recovered.

Mr. ALLISON. This bill has received the unanimous consent of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. For the same reason I intended to call up another bill. but I see the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is not present, and I will not call it up this morning. I desire his presence when I call it up.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say to the Senate that to-morrow, as soon as I can be heard after the disposition of the morning business, I shall seek to call up the bill (S. No. 587) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts, approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Gouverneur Morris, executor of S. J. Morris, deceased, asking reimbursement for the amount paid by him for certain property and furniture purchased by him at a sale made by the United States marshal for the eastern district of Virginia, in the city of Alexandria, in a proceeding against Dr. Orlando Fairfax, and from which he was ejected by an order of the district court; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WINDOM presented the memorial of George D. James, a delegate representing the Choctaw Nation, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 680) giving to persons of African descent, formerly slaves of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, an individual interest in all the land and moneys of the respective nations, contrary to treaty stipulations, and in favor of the bill (S. No. 812) which proposes to give said freedmen what the treaty provided for, to wit, forty acres of land to each, with the privilege of becoming citizens of the tribes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Mineral Ridge, Ohio, against the action of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury in relation to the eight-hour law, and in favor of the substitution of legal-tender notes for national-bank notes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union, No. 3, of Iowa, in favor of the enforcement of the eight-hour law; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM presented a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, relating to Senate bill No. 680, for the relief of persons of African descent resident in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations; which was ordered to be printed.

FORT SANDERS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. KELLY. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 773) to reduce the area of the military reservation of Fort Sanders and providing for the survey of said reservation as reduced, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to report it back without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that the military reservation at Fort Sanders, in the Territory of Wyoming, shall hereafter be limited and bounded as follows: Beginning at the point where the old stage-road to Salt Lake crosses the Big Laramie River, and running thence east four miles; thence south four and five-tenths miles; thence in a west-southwest direction to the junction of what is known as the Five Mile Creek, with the present south line of the reserve; thence along this creek to its junction with the Big Laramie River; thence along Big Laramie River to the place of beginning.

It is to be the duty of the officer commanding the military department of the Platte, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to cause a direct survey of the reservation to be made in conformity with the reduction made and to have posts or monuments planted at each of the corners thereof, and so marked that they will indicate the boundaries of the reservation.

The lands heretofore constituting the Fort Sanders military reservation outside of the limits of the new reservation are to be held to be and to have been subject and liable to the operation of the laws of the United States, in the same manner and to the same extent as if the same had never been included within the limits of the reservation; and in all cases where any of the last-mentioned lands would be subject to entry under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States, the actual settlers on them shall have the right and privilege to make proof and payment for their respective claims, under the provisions of the pre-emption and homestead laws, by filing their declaratory statements, as provided by existing laws, at any time within six months from the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE SYSTEMS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies of the report of Major Elliot of his tour of inspection of European light-houses, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of Major George H. Elliot, of the Light-House Board, of a tour of inspection of European light-house systems, be printed for the use of the Treasury Department; and that one thousand additional copies be printed for the use of the Department.

Mr. ANTHONY. Having the fear of the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] and some other Senators before our eyes, we have hardly ventured to report anything from the Committee on Printing. This is the report of the engineer secretary of the Light-House Board, who has made a tour of inspection by direction of the board through the light-houses of England and the continent of Europe and has brought back what Professor Henry, the president of the board, says is very valuable information, calculated to improve the construction of our light-houses to aid in the safety of navigation and the security of life and property.

The information in this bundle before me [exhibiting the manuscript report] is of no use whatever in its present form. It is useless to print a book of this kind for sale, because nobody owns a light-house except the Government and the information is for the use of the Government alone; and it cannot be made available unless it is printed. If it is printed, there should be some copies given to the Treasury Department for distribution among the superintendents and the keepers of lights and scientific men who may make suggestions that may be valuable in the construction of these important aids to the security of navigation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Confined to that particular service, I do not think the proposition is objectionable; but I take occasion to say that I hope my friend, at the earliest possible moment, when there is an interregnum in the appropriation bills, will take occasion to bring his bill to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have a word to say on that when this shall have been disposed of.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. And now, Mr. President, at the earliest possible moment I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 857) to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents, and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is taken up subject to morning business.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

DEWIGHT DESILVA.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 1936.

Mr. ANTHONY. After this has been disposed of, I shall insist upon the order that has been made to go on with the bill that has been taken up. I shall not object to the motion of my friend from New York, but I shall object to any other bill being interposed.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not think there will be any objection to this bill when it is heard.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1936) for the relief of Dewight Desilva, of Deposit, New York. It is a direction to the Adjutant-General of the Army to change the record so as to relieve Dewight Desilva, of Deposit, New York, late a private in Company F, Fifty-sixth Regiment of New York State Volunteers, from the charge of desertion, and to furnish him an honorable discharge. The proper accounting officer of the Treasury is to allow and pay to Desilva all arrears of pay due him at the time of his absenting himself from his regiment and all veteran bounty, the same as if he had been honorably discharged at the end of his term of service.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3421) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1875, have instructed me to report it back with a single amendment and recommend its passage. I think it is not necessary to print it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar without being printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3413) to provide for the stamping of unstamped instruments, documents, or papers, reported it with amendments.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 418) for the relief of the administratrix of the estate of Lieutenant Joseph Wheaton, deceased.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 673) for the relief of the builders of the steamers La Portena, Edward Everett, F. W. Lincoln, Azalia, and N. P. Banks, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 79) referring the claim of J. Snowden & Son to the Court of Claims, the bill (S. No. 75) for the relief of J. B. Cornell and others, and the bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay, moved their indefinite postponement, a general bill covering the cases having passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3006) authorizing the President to nominate Holmes Wickoff an assistant surgeon in the Navy, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A petition of citizens of Virginia and a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a military and marine hospital at Massanetta Springs, Rockingham County, Virginia;

A petition of citizens of the United States, praying for the establishment of a system of education on board naval men-of-war;

The petition of Captain E. Carrington Bowers, of the Navy, praying to be promoted to the rank of commodore on the reserved list;

A petition of Abraham Miller and others, praying the establishment of an Army and Navy hospital at Taylor's or Massanetta Springs, Virginia;

A petition of citizens of Rockingham County, Virginia, praying for the establishment of a summer hospital at Massanetta Springs for the use of the sick of the Army and Navy;

The memorial of Commodore Edward Middleton, United States Navy, praying to be advanced to his proper grade on the retired list;

The petition of Hon. Asa D. Smith, President of Dartmouth College, and other citizens of New Hampshire, praying that a system of instruction in nautical science may be established on board vessels of war; and

The petition of J. Snowden & Son, praying for the passage of an enabling act permitting them to sue in the Court of Claims to recover losses on their contract for building the monitors Manayunk and Umpqua.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2696) for the relief of John F. Wheeler, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Colman and others, praying payment of balance of bounties, reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 792) for the relief of John Fletcher, surviving partner of Fletcher & Powell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3430) for the relief of settlers on the abandoned Fort Sumner military reservation, in the Territory of New Mexico, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3431) authorizing the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department parts of certain reservations in the Territory of Arizona, no longer required for military purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 554) for the relief of William I. Blackistone, of Saint Mary's County, Maryland, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of the trustees of Cane Hill College, in Arkansas, asking an appropriation for college purposes, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1108) for the relief of Alfred Fry, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 958) for the relief of Robert Sutherland, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3002) for the relief of Isaac Riseden, late first lieutenant of the Eleventh Tennessee Cavalry, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 600) for the relief of Captain J. B. Thompson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 88) for the better organization of the district courts of the United States within the State of Louisiana, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of John J. Hayden, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 763) for the relief of Oliver P. Mason, to report it back, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. ANTHONY. I object, and call for the regular order.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3429) to put retired officers of the Army on duty, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LOGAN. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1828) to further continue the act to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army and Navy, to report it favorably, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am sorry to object, but I have a bill before the Senate which is to be proceeded with as soon as morning business is through with.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2420) allowing Army officers to wear certain emblems indicative of honors conferred upon them, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3003) for the relief of George A. Bacon, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1385) to regulate commerce by railroads among the several States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3171) to amend the customs-revenue laws, and to repeal moieties, recommitted to the committee the other day, and I ask that the bill and the amendments now reported be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HITCHCOCK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 884) to amend sections 245, 246, 247, 251, and 253 of an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 885) to authorize the purchase of harbor privileges and lands for the establishment of a naval and coaling station in the Samoan Islands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 792) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereto, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LYMAN TREMAIN of New York, Mr. BENJAMIN F. BUTLER of Massachusetts, and Mr. CHARLES A. ELDREDGE of Wisconsin, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 822) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," passed May 10, 1872.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1394) in relation to the centennial exhibition.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3573) making additions to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862;"

A bill (H. R. No. 3359) fixing the time for the election of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania to the Forty-fourth Congress;

A bill (H. R. No. 3575) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in certain portions of the State of Minnesota and Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 3581) to protect persons of foreign birth against forcible constraint or involuntary servitude;

A bill (H. R. No. 2911) to adjust costs, fees, and allowances in Federal courts;

A bill (H. R. No. 3582) to provide for stamping unstamped instruments, documents, or papers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1859) authorizing commissioners of the United States circuit courts to take depositions under commission;

A bill (H. R. No. 3574) explanatory of the act of June 30, 1864;

A bill (H. R. No. 3282) providing for the collection of moneys due the United States from the Pacific Railroad Companies;

A bill (H. R. No. 1639) to provide for the holding of an additional term of the United States district court for the southern district of Mississippi; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2069) for the relief of the sureties of John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana.

The message also announced that the House requested the return of the bill (H. R. No. 1196) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 196) granting a pension to Peter J. Cratzer;
A bill (H. R. No. 240) granting a pension to John C. Farnam;
A bill (H. R. No. 551) granting a pension to Alfred Bolder;
A bill (H. R. No. 1228) granting a pension to Mary Storrs;
A bill (H. R. No. 1335) granting a pension to Guadaloupe Torres;
A bill (H. R. No. 1414) granting a pension to Susan Bennett;
A bill (H. R. No. 1439) granting a pension to John Folger;
A bill (H. R. No. 1582) for the relief of C. C. Spaids;
A bill (H. R. No. 1719) granting a pension to Ezra H. Foster;
A bill (H. R. No. 1770) for the relief of Jonathan L. Mann, late a chaplain in the volunteer service of the Army;
A bill (H. R. No. 1934) for the relief of Pat. O. Hawes;
A bill (H. R. No. 1843) granting a pension to Lucinda Jones, widow of Thompson M. Jones, late a private of Company G, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers;
A bill (H. R. No. 1832) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hackleman;
A bill (H. R. No. 1866) granting a pension to Dennis McCarthy, a soldier of the Mexican war;
A bill (H. R. No. 1907) granting a pension to Henry B. Havens, late a private of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers;
A bill (H. R. No. 1949) granting a pension to Ann M. Brackett;
A bill (H. R. No. 2090) for the relief of Jacob Harding;
A bill (H. R. No. 2116) granting a pension to Magdalena Docks;
A bill (H. R. No. 2214) granting a pension to Ann Humphreys, of Philadelphia;
A bill (H. R. No. 2217) granting a pension to Henry Buckner, late a private of Company F, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers;
A bill (H. R. No. 2220) granting a pension to Andrew J. Baldwin;
A bill (H. R. No. 2353) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Cummings;
A bill (H. R. No. 2356) granting a pension to Edwin Jardine, late colonel and brevet brigadier-general United States volunteers;
A bill (H. R. No. 2669) granting a pension to Deborah A. Swan;
A bill (H. R. No. 2672) granting a pension to Mary A. S. Loomis;
A bill (H. R. No. 2676) granting a pension to Thomas McKinster;
A bill (H. R. No. 2678) granting a pension to Charles Herbert;
A bill (H. R. No. 2692) to change the name of the schooner-yacht Quarantine to Welcome;
A bill (H. R. No. 2970) granting a pension to Nancy Abbott;
A bill (H. R. No. 2792) granting a pension to Llewellyn Bell;
A bill (H. R. No. 2899) granting a pension to Harriette A. Woodruff;
A bill (H. R. No. 2925) granting a pension to Dorothea Irons, mother of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons;
A bill (H. R. No. 2452) to equalize pensions in certain cases;
A bill (H. R. No. 2538) to legalize and establish a ponton railway-bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa;
A bill (H. R. No. 2081) to facilitate the exportation of distilled spirits and amendatory of the acts in relation thereto; and
A bill (H. R. No. 3169) changing the time of holding circuit and district courts in Vermont.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business being completed, the bill (S. No. 857) to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents, and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question or two in regard to this bill. The bill appears to have been carefully prepared, and I have great confidence in the committee from which it emanates. It appears to propose to do away entirely with the gratuitous distribution of public documents. I observe that in the second section there is provision for the preparation of copies of the public documents by stereotyping and having them properly mailed for transmission at cost price upon receipt of cost price by the Congressional Printer and the amount of postage; but on page 15 of the bill, in sections 12, 13, 14, and 15, there is provision made for the printing and binding of large numbers of various works to be distributed by the various heads of Departments; three thousand copies of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on commerce and navigation to be distributed by him; two thousand copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for distribution by the Secretary of the Interior; twenty-five thousand copies of the report on agriculture for distribution by the Commissioner of Agriculture; ten thousand copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for distribution by that institution, and so on. Now, are these documents to be distributed by these officials gratuitously, or are they to be distributed under the same provisions as to prepayment of postage and cost as are provided in section 2?

Mr. ANTHONY. The provision to which the Senator from Delaware calls my attention is for the official, not the popular, distribution of documents. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is allowed two thousand copies of his annual report. He desires to send that report of course to the various officials under him, to the various Indian agencies, and to many persons who have a semi-official connection with his Bureau, persons who are interested in the management of Indian affairs, who are corresponding with the department, and from whom the department constantly receives suggestions.

Mr. BAYARD. How about the Commissioner of Agriculture?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Commissioner of Agriculture has addressed a letter to the committee, in which he states that the value of his report depends almost entirely or very largely upon correspondence all over the country, especially that portion of the report which relates to the prospects of the crops. He has volunteer correspondents, gratuitous correspondents, in every county, and a great many in some counties. They receive no compensation for this information which they render to him, but they expect in return a copy of his annual report. I do not know that this information can be obtained in any other way so cheaply as by this little compliment that is paid to the assistants of the Commissioner. The number struck me as rather large, but it was the number that the Commissioner thought was necessary, and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, if I remember correctly, thought the number was not extravagant. That is the only large official distribution that is provided for. A small number is provided for the heads of several of the Bureaus of their own reports for official reasons.

Mr. BAYARD. In addition to the twenty-five thousand copies fixed here for the Commissioner of Agriculture, will there be copies also published for purchase by the public?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir; under another provision. In the discretion of the Joint Committee on Printing, any number of copies of any document may be printed for sale, and undoubtedly a document of that character would be required.

Mr. BAYARD. Can the Senator tell me how many copies of the Agricultural Report have been awarded heretofore to the Commissioner of Agriculture for his distribution?

Mr. ANTHONY. About this number.

Mr. BAYARD. Twenty-five thousand?

Mr. ANTHONY. About that. It has varied, I think, from fifteen to twenty-five thousand. I think that is the full number he has had. But if there is to be no popular distribution whatever, there should be a little larger official distribution.

Mr. BAYARD. Of course the postage on all these documents will be paid by the Government, but that will be paying it to itself.

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not care much about that. I can only express my great satisfaction at the relief afforded to members of Congress by this bill from what was singularly termed by some I believe the "privilege" of franking these books, and I am very glad that there is now proposed some means of distribution without the intervention of members of Congress. The economy of this measure, its practicability, must of course abide the test of time. We must try and see how this method of distribution works, and what economy it results in. The measure certainly is novel in this country. We never yet have had many features of this bill; and, as I said before, experience alone must test its practicability and value. I was not aware till the bill was read of the commission to the heads of Departments of the sole distribution of these documents or if their having such large numbers to be distributed without any order of distribution impressed by the law. But, as I said before, it must stand the test of experiment. Having confidence in the judgment of the gentlemen composing the committee who prepared the bill I shall support it.

Mr. HAMLIN. The fifteenth section of this bill provides for the printing of 10,000 copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution. That stands, I think, entirely different from either of the other documents. That is precisely what Congress has done for years. While there will be no return directly to the Government for this work, while in other words it will not be sold by the Smithsonian Institution, it will be used in exchange and will be sent abroad all over the world for other works of a scientific character. The Government will thus receive in return in other works a compensation for this, and I believe I am justified in saying that the Smithsonian Institution contributes annually to the Congressional Library works which it receives by the exchange of its own, an amount very much in excess of what it costs to print this work.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are several amendments that I wish to propose, and I should like to make some little explanation of the bill. I know the anxiety of my friend from Minnesota to take up the Indian appropriation bill which comes up as the unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. I think the bill ought to be explained.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] will allow me to go on I will do so now; and if not, if I can have general consent to take up the bill to-morrow, immediately after the morning business, I think in a few minutes we shall dispose of it. I will do either.

Mr. RAMSEY. Would it not be better to go through the bill now, and take to-morrow in the morning hour for the Calendar?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like very much to have the Senator explain the bill at some time, but at present I am inclined to think that it is rather an increase than a diminution of the expenses of the public printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall be happy to correct the impression of my friend in that respect. This bill contains a codification of the whole law with regard to the distribution of public documents, and the customs and traditions of the Senate, some of which are unwritten and have sprung up, it is impossible to tell how. The number of documents officially distributed is considerably reduced by the bill. For instance, at the Treasury Department there was a very irregular distribution of the documents there, and of all the bills printed, some Bureaus had two or three copies, while the Light-House Board had four copies of every bill that was printed. That was a perfectly absurd distribution. The Light-House Board might want twenty copies of some one bill, but none of the greater number of the bills. This bill proposes to give to the Secretary of the Treasury a certain number of copies to be distributed by himself among the Bureaus, according as they may be needed. As the Senator from Delaware very justly says in his criticism of the bill, this is to be brought to the test of experience, and that is the only test by which we can decide whether the distribution has been properly made.

Mr. THURMAN. May I be allowed to ask a question for information?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. Does the second section clothe the Joint Committee on Printing with the power to determine what shall be the number of extra copies of every document that shall be printed? Is it the intention to devolve on the joint committee the power to fix the number of extra copies that shall be printed for sale?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. Without any action of Congress?

Mr. ANTHONY. Without any action of Congress. Whenever a document is ordered to be printed, then the Congressional Printer is to take the instruction of the Joint Committee on Printing as to whether he shall stereotype it; and if he stereotypes it, then he is to take the instruction of the Joint Committee on Printing as to how many he shall print for sale. It is impossible to fix in a bill, in advance, the number that shall be printed for sale of any document; but it is so easy to come within reasonable limits as to the probable demand; and if a document is stereotyped a small number can be printed in advance and any additional number can be printed afterward for merely the cost of paper and press-work.

Mr. THURMAN. The second section covers every report, document, or other publication which shall be ordered to be printed by Congress. I do not know but that is a very large power to give to a committee without any action on the part of Congress. Take a report made in Congress which is supposed to have some political significance or party value, is this committee to be authorized to have one hundred thousand copies of it printed and circulated, or as many as we have had printed of some lumbering things like the report of the Ku-Klux Committee? I do not know how many were printed of that, but they went into the thousands.

Mr. ANTHONY. Just as many were printed as Congress ordered, and no more.

Mr. THURMAN. I know that. But is this power to involve us in that expense, and to determine that a particular report is of such merit that you are to print one hundred thousand or fifty thousand copies for sale, or the like, to be devolved on the committee without any appeal or action of Congress at all? That strikes me as rather a dangerous proposition.

Mr. ANTHONY. These extra copies are printed only for sale; they cannot be given away; and it is not to be supposed that any Committee on Printing or any other committee would order documents to be printed to lumber up the store-rooms of the Capitol.

Mr. THURMAN. But the difference between this case and that of a man carrying on business on his own account is that he would not print more than he could sell, because he would lose money by doing so; but the committee can order as many to be printed as possible, and any loss falls on Uncle Sam.

Mr. ANTHONY. What advantage is gained to any party by printing documents and not distributing them? There is no way of distribution except by purchase, and I take it the opinion of the Senate has been manifested repeatedly that any document that is printed by the Senate may be sold to any extent to any person who chooses to buy it.

I now move to amend the bill in section 4, line 11, by inserting the words "one set to the Official Reporter" in the clause relative to furnishing sets of bound documents to Senators and officers of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. In the same section, line 19, after the word "House" I move to insert "and one set to the official reporting corps of the House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Here is an amendment to which I call the attention of the Senate. Beginning in line 50 of section 4, this clause occurs:

One set to the executive of each State which shall in return send to the Library of Congress a complete annual set of its executive and legislative documents, as shall appear by an annual report made by the Librarian of Congress to the Secretary of the Interior.

This clause was put in at the request of the Library authorities; but I move to strike out all after the words "one set to the executive of each State for the use of the State." I think that every document which we print is due to each State and that we ought not to impose upon the State the condition that it shall return its documents to us, although it is exceedingly convenient and every State ought to send its documents to the Library of Congress. I think we ought to render to those who send us here the reports of our doings without any condition that they shall send us something back. I move therefore to strike out that provision from the word "State" in the fiftieth line down to and including the word "Interior" in line 54, and to insert in their place "for the use of the State."

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will consent to let this bill go over until to-morrow. It was only reported five days ago. I have no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator will allow me to go through with the amendments of the committee, which are mostly verbal, I will then consent that the bill lie over until to-morrow morning, with the understanding that it shall be taken up in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. THURMAN. All I want is a little time to look into it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire the criticism of the Senator; but the bill was reported more than five days ago. This is a reproduction of the draught of a bill which the committee reported some time ago.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no objection to the amendments being acted on.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move in line 51 of section 4 to insert the word "set" instead of "report."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. In section 6, line 9, after the word "copy," I move to insert "to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress one copy." This relates to the Statutes at Large of each Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio and of other legal Senators to the fact that the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States have never been distributed to members of Congress, and this bill does not make any provision for such distribution. Some of the Senators have thought it should be done.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would ask the Senator whether the bill makes provision for giving a set of these publications to the justices of the Supreme Court?

Mr. ANTHONY. No.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would suggest that such an amendment be inserted.

Mr. RAMSEY. I see that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth sections of the bill provide for the publication of reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of the Department of Agriculture, and of the Smithsonian Institution; but there is no provision made for the annual report of the Commissioner of the Land Office. That is a very important document. In all the land States certainly it is looked for with as much anxiety as the other reports.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is provided for in section 13, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes; I now see it is.

Mr. ANTHONY. After the word "Senate," in section 17, line 7, I move to insert "for the use of the Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. In line 10 of the same section, after the word "Representatives," I move to insert "for the use of the House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice to the Senator, as the bill is going over, that I will move to strike out sections 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, as I think they are totally inconsistent with the principal purposes of the bill. The residue of the bill I approve of most heartily.

Mr. ANTHONY. Those are the sections which provide for official distribution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Those are the sections which authorize the distribution of extra copies by the Departments instead of by members of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Senator was not in when I made an explanation of that in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was in, and I heard the explanation of the Senator; but I am satisfied that if this is a privilege which cannot be allowed to members of Congress, it ought not to be exercised by the heads of Departments.

Mr. ANTHONY. We can discuss that when it comes up; but it is no use to print documents and give the head of a Department only one copy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside informally, with the understanding that it is to be proceeded with to-morrow morning after the expiration of morning business.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE HOUSE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the resolution of the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill (H.

R. No. 1196) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes.

The resolution was concurred in.

SURETIES OF B. B. EMORY.

Mr. PEASE. I move to reconsider the action of the Senate postponing indefinitely Senate bill No. 127, for the relief of J. M. Stone, William M. Compton, and W. C. McAlexander, sureties on the bond of B. B. Emory, deceased, late collector of internal revenue of the third district of Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEASE. I now desire to have the bill recommitted to the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

Mr. WINDOM. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to amend the bill in the appropriation for the removal of the Kickapoos by striking out "75" in line 740 and inserting "90," so as to make the appropriation $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. At the end of that paragraph, line 746, I move to insert the following words, by direction of the committee:

And not exceeding $5,000 may be used for compensation of interpreters, guides, and carriers, and such other expenditures as may be deemed actually necessary to contribute to success in effecting said removal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In line 1072 I move to strike out "$261.47" and to insert "$357.80."

I have a number of amendments to offer in relation to this tribe, the Pottawatomies, all based upon the same principle, and one explanation will cover them all. As appropriated in the bill, we adopted the estimates of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs formerly submitted. Upon a revision of those estimates the amounts which I now propose as amendments are recommended by the Interior Department, and as the original appropriation was based upon the calculations made at that Department, and as they have since revised them, it seemed proper to the committee to adopt the revised estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In line 1075, I move to strike out "$130.74" and to insert "$178.90."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In line 1078, I move to strike out "$653.67" and to insert "$894.50."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In lines 1081 and 1082, I move to strike out "$522.94" and to insert "$715.60."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In lines 1086 and 1087, I move to strike out "$4,183.48" and insert "$5,724.77."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In line 1093, I move to strike out "$78.44" and insert "107.34."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In lines 1100 and 1101, I move to strike out "$737.34" and insert "$1,008.99."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In lines 1104 and 1105, I move to strike out "$114.39" and insert "$156.54."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. In lines 1110 and 1111, I move to strike out "$8,406.19" and insert "$11,503.21."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no further amendments to offer.

Mr. PRATT. I now offer the amendment of which I gave notice the other day, to come in after line 1122; and I ask the Clerk to report it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For balance due the Pottawatomies under various treaties with the United States, from that of December 2, 1795, to that of July 23, 1846, as ascertained in the report made January 18, 1869, to the Secretary of the Interior by the commissioners appointed by the President under the Senate amendment to the tenth article of the treaty with the Pottawatomie Indians of August 7, 1868, $178,953.43.

For interest due said Indians on the sum of $160,540.48 cents, at 5 per cent., to January 22, 1869, awarded by the same commissioners in their supplementary report, made January 22, 1869, $48,897.95.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, these are large sums, and it is proper that I should put the Senate in possession of the evidence upon which I rely to show the justice of the large sums of principal and interest sought to be appropriated. In my youth I lived a neighbor for a good many years to the Pottawatomie Indians and I am familiar with many of the treaties that were made with them, and therefore take an especial interest in seeing that justice is done to this tribe. Between 1795 and 1846 there were nineteen treaties made with these Indians

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I desire to make a point of order on this amendment. It has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PRATT. I beg the Senator's pardon; it was referred to that committee a week ago or more and printed by order of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. But it does not come back by any order of the committee or any report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SCOTT in the chair.) The Senator from California makes the point of order that this amendment has not been referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. SARGENT. That it has not been reported from the appropriate committee.

Mr. PRATT. I not only gave notice of this amendment, but had it printed, and I called the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to it and told him that I desired whenever the appropriation bill came up to submit my views to the Senate upon it, and I am prepared to do so now unless some technical objection shall prevent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. According to the copy of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana before the Chair, it proposes to appropriate an amount of money ascertained by a treaty, and he also states that notice of the amendment has been given and that it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. These facts being admitted, the Chair will rule the amendment to be in order.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask pardon of the Chair for making one remark. It is not an appropriation of an amount ascertained by treaty. This is simply to pay for damages arising from underpayments under the treaty. It is simply a claim for damages. It is not an amount that we have agreed by treaty to pay. It is simply a going over of all these items from the last century down to the present time and finding in the salt delivered and in other things, as they assume, some little amount of deficiency which may or may not have been paid. They say we owe this $100,000. It is not an amount ascertained by treaty.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, every one of the items which go to make up this sum total depends upon treaty stipulations made by the United States with these Indians, every item rests upon contract; and that I shall be able to demonstrate to the Senate if I have the opportunity.

Mr. SARGENT. I was merely speaking to the point of order, and not discussing the matter itself.

Mr. PRATT. What is the point of order that the Senator makes?

Mr. SARGENT. My point of order is that the amendment has not been reported by the committee and is not provided for by existing law.

Mr. PRATT. But I state that I gave notice of this amendment, that I offered it, that it was printed by order of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I beg to know what further I could have done?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Indiana propose this amendment as coming from any standing committee or select committee of the Senate, or was it of his own motion that he offered the amendment?

Mr. PRATT. It was of my own motion, in order to carry out the provisions of the several treaties made between the United States and this tribe of Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it would not be in order unless it be made for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of an existing treaty. Has the Senator the treaty upon which he relies to bring this amendment in order?

Mr. PRATT. I do not understand the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that as this amendment does not come from any standing or select committee it is not in order, unless it be made for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation. Will the Senator quote the provisions of the treaty which he proposes to carry out by this amendment?

Mr. PRATT. I will state that it is to carry out the provisions of several treaties, particularly the treaty of 1867, and to carry out an act of Congress of 1861 which I will bring to the notice of the Senate if I have the opportunity to do it.

Mr. SARGENT. The general statement of the Senator may not be open to criticism. As I understand the case it is this: by treaties running back into the last century we agreed to give these Indians so much twine, so much salt, so much of different articles. Now, with an ingenuity and industry that do somebody great credit, they have gone back over this long period of time and have attempted to show from the records that six instead of seven bags of salt were delivered in one year, or that the twine measured so many yards short. That is an illustration of the kind of claim that is made under these treaties. They came here and insisted that there was a deficiency in some of these items, and Congress, I believe, appointed a commission or rather required the Secretary of the Interior to look into the matter; and this is the report, that these driblets, made up during all these years, amount to over $100,000. That is the nature of the claim. It is a mere claim. It is not in pursuance of any article of a treaty binding us to pay $100,000 or any other sum, and therefore I insist it is not provided for by any existing law.

Furthermore, this ought to go to the Committee on Claims. Here is a claim of nearly $200,000, including interest, and it ought to go to that committee which has the opportunity to sift it like any other claim; and if there is a law sanctioning it, all the more ready will the Committee on Claims be to report it. I will remark that it is the practice of the other House to send such claims to the Committee on Claims, and the result is much more satisfactory than by this scrambling legislation, which involves the Treasury in such large amounts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to this clause of the thirtieth rule:

And no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation.

The amendment now offered providing for the payment of principal and interest, will the Senator quote that part of the treaty stipulation which he alleges requires this amendment to carry it out, so that the Chair may be able to rule upon it?

Mr. PRATT. I am thankful to the Chair. I have been trying for the last five minutes to bring to the notice of the Senate some of the treaties on which this claim rests.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this point: that even under the last clause of the rule that has been quoted by the Chair the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana is still out of order, because the Chair will observe that the last clause does not pretend to change the rule that requires amendments to be reported from a select or standing committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRATT. Now, Mr. President, I will proceed to refer the Senate to the treaty under which this claim immediately arises. It is the treaty made between the United States and the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians on the 27th day of February, 1867, amended by the Senate, amendments accepted August 4, 1868, and the treaty proclaimed August 7, 1868.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the volume and page?

Mr. PRATT. I read from the fifteenth volume of the Statutes at Large, page 536. Article 10 of the treaty was stricken out and the following was inserted by the Senate as a substitute for that article:

And it is further agreed—

Who were the parties to this contract? The United States on the one part and the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians on the other part—

And it is further agreed that the claims of the Pottawatomies, heretofore examined and reported on by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of Congress of March 2, 1861, shall be submitted to two commissioners, to be named by the President of the United States, for examination, and said commissioners, after being sworn impartially to decide on said claims, shall make report of their judgment in the premises, together with the evidence taken, to the Secretary of the Interior, and the same shall be communicated to Congress at its next session: Provided, That no part of the money reported due by the said commissioners shall be paid until the same shall be appropriated by Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas rises to a point of order. He will state his point of order.

Mr. INGALLS. Rule 30, which has been already referred to by the Chair, reads as follows:

No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments.

That is the rule that requires amendments to be first reported from a select or standing committee of the Senate. Now the last clause is:

And no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation.

The point that I make is, that it is entirely immaterial whether the amendment be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation, unless it has also been reported from a standing or select committee of the Senate; that the fact of its being to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation does not change the provision of the rule that requires it to be first reported by a committee, because the Chair will observe that that clause does not pretend to change the previous part of the rule, but refers merely to a different class of cases. It is a cumulative or additional clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One point of order being under consideration, the Senator from Kansas raises another point of order. The Chair is of opinion that where an amendment is proposed for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of some existing law, where notice has been given of it and it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, it is in order even although not reported by a standing committee; and therefore he rules against the point of order made by the Senator from Kansas. The Senator from Indiana is still entitled to the floor on the point of order made by the Senator from California.

Mr. PRATT. Now, Mr. President, I will go back a few years for the purpose of laying the proper foundation to present this claim properly to the Senate. I go back to the act of Congress of March 2, 1861, which reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and report to Congress at its next session, what amount, if any, is due to the Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians now residing in the State of Michigan, under and by virtue of the treaties of July 29, 1829, the 26th of September, 1833, and the articles supplementary thereto of September 27, 1833 with said Indians, and under the treaty of the 5th and 17th of June, 1846, with the Pottawatomie Nation of Indians.

I call the attention of the Senate now to the concluding clause—

And the Secretary of the Interior is furthermore hereby authorized and directed to ascertain and report at the same time whether there is any money or property heretofore payable to said Pottawatomie Nation under and by virtue of the treaty of October 26, 1832, or other treaties, which has not been appropriated and paid; and, if any, what amount.

Here was a plain direction given that the Secretary of the Interior should examine into the relations between this nation of Indians and the Government from the beginning; and while Mr. Smith was Secretary of the Interior, during the year 1862, he caused this laborious investigation to be made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I said it was a laborious investigation. It became necessary to review nineteen treaties which had been made with this tribe of Indians, reaching back to 1795 and terminating with the treaty of 1846, and I have before me the report which was made by Mr. Smith, then Secretary of the Interior, dated 23d of December, 1862, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Accompanying that report is a report made to the Secretary of the Interior by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The Commissioner at that time was William P. Dole; and perhaps I ought to read his report to the Secretary first, or at least enough of it for the purpose of illustrating the justice of this claim. Referring to the act of Congress which I have just read to the Senate, he says, in his report to the Secretary:

By this act you were authorized and directed to examine and report to Congress at its next session what amount, if any, is due to the Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians, now residing in the State of Michigan, under and by virtue of the treaties of July, 29, 1829, September 26, 1833, and the articles supplementary thereto of September 27, 1833, with said Indians, and under the treaty of June 5 and 17, 1846, with the Pottawatomie Nation of Indians; and to report at the same time whether there is any money or property heretofore payable to said Pottawatomie Nation under and by virtue of the treaty of October 26, 1832, or other treaties, which have not been appropriated and paid; and, if any, what amount.

With a view to prompt action in the premises, I suggested to you on May 2, 1861, the propriety of your requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to direct the Second Auditor to furnish from the accounts on file in his office a statement of facts to enable this Department to report. You acquiesced in the suggestion on the succeeding day, and the Secretary of the Treasury responded to your request by directing the Second Auditor to furnish the statement desired.

In compliance with the above direction, an examination and report was made to this office by the Second Auditor of the Treasury, showing a detailed statement in money, goods, provisions, &c., from 1819 to 1860, said years both included.

I shall show before I get through that this examination in the Second Auditor's Office occupied two clerks for the period of eighteen months.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It becomes the duty of the Chair to remind the Senator from Indiana that his five minutes under the rule have expired.

Mr. PRATT. I was not aware that the rule obtained while we were discussing the merits of this bill. I hope that rule will not be enforced against me. I am quite earnest in presenting this amendment. It amounts to about a quarter of a million dollars; and it is evident that it is quite impossible to present its merits to the Senate in five or ten minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed in the discussion of this question of order. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall not object to a limited discussion. I am willing to give the Senator fifteen minutes.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the Senator from California will not draw the line.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know whether I shall or not. We applied the rule yesterday to this bill. We want to get through with the appropriation bills. We are now on the 2d day of June and have only twenty days left to finish up the great business of this session. I do not think the time ought to be extended. I am willing for the present that the Senator shall go on indefinitely, and I will not raise an objection unless I think he is abusing our patience.

Mr. INGALLS. How much time does the Senator want?

Mr. PRATT. I will sit all night with the committee in order to pass the bill, if that be necessary.

Mr. INGALLS. This whole matter has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs for a long time and repeatedly reported upon.

Mr. PRATT. Ever but once?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir; and it appears to me to be injudicious to attempt to incorporate this in a general appropriation bill in this manner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is endeavoring to ascertain whether there is objection to extending the time of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall object to unlimited time. I have no objection to allowing fifteen minutes, if the Senator desires it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the Senator from Indiana is entitled to proceed for fifteen minutes.

Mr. PRATT. On page 4 of this report the Commissioner says:

The third article of the treaty of 26th September, 1833, stipulates that as fast as the Indians shall be prepared to emigrate they shall be removed at the expense of the United States, and shall receive subsistence while upon the journey, and for one year after their arrival at their new homes. The reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs show that from 1833 to 1851 there were removed by the Government forty-seven hundred and ninety-two Indians; and the muster-rolls on file in the Second Auditor's Office show the number of self-emigrated Indians to be eleven hundred and thirty-eight who removed themselves without expense to the Government; but from the reports of the superintendents and agents who had supervision over these Indians it appears that they were all subsisted by the Government for one year after their arrival at their new homes, the same as those that were removed by the United States.

I have not time to refer to the treaty cited in this report for the purpose of showing the express stipulation of the United States to remove these Indians at the expense of the United States and to furnish them with a certain outfit and to subsist them for the period of one year after they had reached their new home. But as this constitutes one of the largest items in this account, I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the articles which were furnished under similar stipulations with other tribes of Indians and which should have been furnished to these Pottawatomies but were not furnished. Thus the Commissioner says:

The following articles are the same furnished the Choctaws, and in due proportion according to numbers. There are not as many manufacturing implements, in consequence of their not having made any advance in manufacturing. The ratio of warriors and families to the whole number of Indians is one to five, or one-fifth of the whole number, according to the usual custom of this office.

Then he goes on to enumerate 1,186 rifles that were due them, 5,930 blankets, 1,186 axes, 1,186 hoes, 395 plows, 3,558 pounds of powder, 14,232 pounds of lead, 50 looms, 100 wheels, 100 cards, two tons of iron, one thousand pounds of steel, &c. Then the Commissioner, after this laborious examination, sums up the whole case with this recapitulation: "Deficiency under treaty stipulations, $69,507.56; 11,000 pounds of tobacco, 567 pounds of iron, 855 pounds of steel, 672 pounds of salt"—none of which items are estimated; "outfit of emigrating Indians, $28,442.92; commutation for self-emigration, $62,590;" making a sum total of $160,540.48.

Now I call the attention of the Senate to what the Secretary of the Interior says upon communicating this report to Congress, on page 1:

I have no reason to doubt the correctness of the statement or the construction given by the Commissioner to the treaties.

And the concluding clause of his report is as follows:

Believing the report of the Commissioner upon the amount due to the Pottawatomie Nation to be substantially correct, I recommend an appropriation of that amount, with instructions to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the amount due to that portion of the nation who remained in Michigan under the stipulations of the supplementary treaty, and to pay the same from the appropriation for the benefit of the nation.

This was the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior on the 23d of December, 1862. He recommended Congress to pay this principal sum which I have just named, $160,540.48.

The next matter that I desire to call the attention of the Senate to is the report that was made by the present Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] while he was Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I know the Senate will give great heed to what the honorable Senator thought of this claim at the time he was at the head of this Bureau. I make no apology for reading a portion of this report, of which I have an official copy here. Referring to the report of Mr. Dole, which I have just read to the Senate, he says:

This report of Mr. Dole was the result of a long and laborious investigation in this office, and that of the Second Auditor, occupying, as I am informed, the time of two experienced clerks for about eighteen months.

In consideration of the above facts leading me to believe that the subject has been carefully considered and exhausted, I deem it sufficient for me to refer you to late Commissioner Dole's printed report * * * as sufficient upon the questions involved in the present inquiry, containing, I have no reason to doubt, a full and fair statement of the case. One of your predecessors, Hon. Caleb B. Smith, as it appears from his report to Congress dated 19th December, 1862, before referred to, approved of Mr. Dole's report, and transmitted it to Congress with the recommendation that the amount found due the Pottawatomie Nation should be appropriated and paid.

The Committee of Indian Affairs, as per its report on the 29th of January, 1863, also examined into the whole subject—

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to this statement—

The Committee of Indian Affairs, as per its report on the 29th of January, 1863, also examined into the whole subject of this communication, as well upon the reports submitted to it as the data upon which such reports were made, and came to the same conclusion as did Secretary Smith and Commissioner Dole. (See House Reports, Committees and Court of Claims, third session Thirty-seventh Congress, Report No. 18.)

In conclusion, I would respectfully draw your attention to an error in the printed copy of Commissioner Dole's report, where in his "recapitulation" he is made to say "six hundred and seventy-two pounds of salt" when it is evident that "six hundred and seventy-two barrels" was intended. The Committee of Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, however, did not detect the error, and made the computation for pounds.

That is all that it is necessary for me to read of that report. I have one other report made to the Secretary of the Interior by Mr. Cooley at the time he was Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is to the same purport. I should be glad to read it if I had time, but I must content myself with barely a reference to it if I am to be limited to fifteen minutes.

I have another report from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, made on the 29th of January, 1863, that I have only time to read a few extracts from.

By this report—

Speaking now of the report made to Congress by Mr. Smith while Secretary of the Interior, the committee say:

By this report it appears that a long and laborious investigation has been made into all the recorded transactions between the Government and the Pottawatomie Nation, extending back to the earliest treaty between the parties, made in 1795.

The stipulations on the part of the Government in that and in each of the subsequent treaties mentioned in said report, for the payment of money, goods, and other articles of property usually paid and furnished to Indian tribes in consideration of their cessions of lands, and of stipulations on their part, have been carefully collated; and, per contra, all payments of money, and all deliveries of articles of the description aforesaid, in pursuance of said several treaties, have been ascertained, as is supposed, and the balances due, as stated in the said report of the Commissioner, have thus been raised.

The report, in connection with a supplementary letter, finds that there is now due to the Pottawatomie Nation the following:

For deficiency in payments required by treaty stipulations from 1819 to 1861		$69,507 56
For deficiency of the following articles stipulated to by furnished by said treaties, to wit:
11,000 pounds of tobacco, at 10 cent	$1,100 00
567 pounds of iron, at 7½ cents	42 52
855 pounds of steel, at 25 cents	213 75
672 pounds of salt, at $4 per barrel	2 00
		1,358 27
For deficiency of outfit of emigrating Indians, by treaty of October 26, 1862		28,442 92
For commutation for self-emigrating Indians, by same treaty		62,590 00
		161,898 75

That was the principal sum found due to this tribe of Indians at the time this report was made. Now, hear what further the committee say:

The committee have not only examined the Commissioner's report with care, but have made some examination of the data collected on which his conclusions are based, and have possessed themselves with such further information as they could obtain by a personal interview.

They were slow to believe—

I call the attention of the Doubting Thomases in this body now to what this committee say, and particularly my friends from Kansas and California—

They were slow to believe that so considerable an amount as that above stated could have accumulated against the Government by a failure to fulfill from time to time, through a long series of years, its plain treaty stipulations with a single Indian tribe. Nothing, however, in their examinations came under their observation or to their knowledge to enable them to disprove any of the items to the credit of the Pottawatomies contained in the exhibit by the Commissioner; they are, therefore, constrained to accept them as verified and established according to the statements in the report, and to recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution.

Now here is the resolution which this committee reported to the House of Representatives and recommended the adoption of:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to incorporate in their general appropriation bill for the expenses of the Indian Department an appropriation of the sum of $161,898.75 to be paid to the Pottawatomie Nation of Indians, in full satisfaction of their claims for deficiencies of payments under all treaties made with them from the year 1795 to the present time.

Now I come to the treaty of 1867 which required the President of the United States to appoint two commissioners for the purpose of examining what was due from the United States to this tribe of Indians. The Indians had no voice whatever in the selection of any of these agencies to investigate their claims against the United States. It was an ex parte affair entirely. Every one of these examinations was conducted by the debtor party; and neither the Indians nor any agent or attorney or representative of the Indians were allowed to be present and present their side of the case; and every one of these various agencies, these three commissioners at the head of the Indian Bureau, these Secretaries of the Interior, the Committee on Indian Affairs in the House of Representatives, and the gentlemen appointed by the President in pursuance of the treaty of 1867, all of them unite in reporting that sums, varying from $160,000 to $178,000, principal, are due to these Indians. I have only time to refer very briefly to the report of the commissioners appointed by the President in pursuance of the treaty of 1867. They were appointed, I believe, in August. They made their report the following January. They had the whole intervening time from August, 1868, to the 19th of January, 1869, to investigate this claim, and they spent that time diligently, as appears from this voluminous report. They went over all this work aided by the previous examinations in the Auditor's Office and in the Indian Office and in the House of Representatives, and here is the result at which they arrived. But before I state that result let me read a sentence from their report:

The first impression of the meaning of these instructions might lead one to believe it would be our duty to hear the Pottawatomies, through their council or authorized agents, as one of the two parties interested in our award.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It becomes the duty of the Chair to remind the Senator that the time allotted him by the Senate has expired.

Mr. PRATT. Was it counted from the time I first rose, or from the time the fifteen minutes were given?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From the time of the extension.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senator be allowed to proceed.

Mr. WINDOM. Has not the Senator succeeded in the half hour he has addressed the Senate in discussing the question sufficiently as to the point of order that was raised so that we may have a decision on that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only question now before the Senate is, does the Senator from Indiana ask an extension of time?

Mr. PRATT. I do, certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to prolong his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to have the point of order decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California objects to the Senator from Indiana proceeding further. A question of order is raised by the Senator from California. In the opinion of the Chair the thirtieth rule is intended to permit amendments to be offered for the purpose of making payment of specific sums, to be ascertained by reference to the law itself the provisions of which are proposed to be carried out. Upon looking at this amendment the Chair finds that it proposes to carry out the provisions of a number of treaties extending from 1795 to 1868 by collating their various provisions and closing with a reference to two reports made by commissioners, one for the payment of principal and the other for the payment of interest; but as it requires reference to proceedings extrinsic from the law itself the provisions of which are proposed to be carried out, the Chair is of opinion that this amendment, not coming from a standing or select committee, is not in order.

Mr. PRATT. The amendment cannot be considered, then, under that decision at all?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the Senator appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PRATT. I am an unlettered man in the rules of this body, but it occurs to me as a most remarkable proposition that where a claim belongs——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator appeal from the decision of the Chair on the question of order?

Mr. PRATT. If I appeal can I give my reasons?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal is debatable for five minutes under the rule of the Senate.

Mr. PRATT. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I wish to address some remarks to that appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained?

Mr. PRATT. I was about stating, Mr. President, that that is a most remarkable rule, and if it be the rule it deserves abrogation or essential modification, that will deny to a sovereignty with whom the United States have treated, appealing to Congress for justice against a debtor party, founding its claim upon treaty stipulation, and cannot be heard in this body in the presentation of its claim, notwithstanding it gave notice ten days ago of the presentation of it, and the nature of it, and had that notice served on the Committee on Appropriations. The effect of this rule, as I understand it to be announced, is that though we serve notice on this committee in the most solemn form, unless they see proper to report in favor of this claim there is no chance for this poor tribe of Indians at all. Although they stand here with these treaties in their hands, stand here with reports made by the authorized agents of the Government showing that there is a quarter of a million dollars due them, they cannot be heard upon this floor unless the Committee on Appropriations see proper to ingraft this amendment upon their bill and bring it before the Senate. Is that the interpretation of this rule by the Chair? If it be, I must say that the rule ought never to have been made, and if made it ought to be abrogated.

Now, Mr. President, I have had my say, if this thing must go out of court.

Mr. WINDOM. If in order, all I desire to say is that there was a wide open door for the Senator through the Committee on Indian Affairs to have been heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The question being put, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. PRATT. What is the status, then, of this claim?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. PRATT. I rise for the purpose of inquiring if there is no mode known under heaven or among men by which this claim that I stand here to manifest by the highest order of proof may be heard by this body, after having given the notice I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware that it is in his province to instruct the Senator from Indiana, but he might suggest that the introduction of a bill making provision for it or the introduction of an amendment with the sanction of the Committee on Indian Affairs would relieve him of the difficulty which he suggests.

Mr. INGALLS. The matter is now pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SARGENT. In order that this claim may receive the full benefit of whatever comment it deserves, I desire to say that the Committee on Indian Affairs at the last Congress examined the case and made an exhaustive and able report against the claim.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. No, sir; that was in the Forty-first Congress.

Mr. SARGENT. The report was against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment: In line 160 strike out "20" and insert "40;" so as to read:

For contingencies, including traveling, incidental, current, and contingent expenses of superintendents and agents and of their offices, $40,000.

The appropriation for this object last year was $50,000. In addition to that the Department expended $6,000, making $56,000. It is supposed that they can prosecute their work at a slight reduction, and in consequence of that the Committee on Indian Affairs propose to reduce it from $50,000, what it was last year, to $40,000, and raise it from the amount named in the original bill, $20,000, to $40,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know whether I desire to oppose this amendment or not. The Senator I believe has not stated the nature of these incidental expenses, and it is impossible for me to say whether the amount proposed is necessary or not.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The objects are stated in the bill itself: "For contingencies, including traveling, incidental, current, and contingent expenses of superintendents and agents and of their offices."

Mr. SARGENT. We have abolished nearly all of the superintendents, and that should authorize some reduction in the appropriation.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. But there are agents and commissioners frequently sent from the Interior Department to these tribes to make inquiry in regard to the condition of the Indians, and these expenses are regarded as absolutely necessary. It is much less—$10,000 less—than was expended last year. I do not think this is too much.

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the reduction of superintendents does not reduce these expenses; that the former six superintendents whom we have dispensed with were paid out of the incidental expenses of the Territories, and consequently the reduction of the superintendents does not reduce the expenses. I am unwilling to oppose this amendment, unless it can be very clearly shown that the amount in the bill now is sufficient. I do not know whether it is or not. I leave the matter to the Senate without making any opposition.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I understand that anything less than this will undoubtedly leave a deficiency.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted after line 624:

For this amount, being the sum required to pay the Delaware tribe of Indians the value of twenty-three sections of land, which by the fourteenth article of the treaty of July 4, 1866, were to be given without cost to the said Indians in their new reservation, said provision of the treaty never having been carried out in consequence of the Delawares having purchased and paid for, with their own funds, lands upon the Cherokee country upon which to locate, to be used for their benefit, $14,720.

I will say that by the treaty of May——

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to raise a point of order on the amendment. I understand it is not reported by any committee, does not come from any committee. I understand the Senator is speaking in his individual capacity, and not as instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. All the amendments which I propose are approved and recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I cannot make the point of order.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I will say that by the treaty of May 30, 1860, the Delawares were assigned to a reservation, but the boundaries of the reservation included some of the half-breed lands of Kansas, and it was afterward proved that a portion of the land set apart for them belonged to the Kaws, and it was agreed that a fair valuation of the land should be made and the amount paid to the Delawares. In the treaty of 1866 with the Delawares it was agreed that they should receive twenty-three sections of land to be included in their new reservation as a compensation for the land which they did not receive in Kansas. This is for payment for that land, at the rate of one dollar per acre.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not directly relate to any appropriation in the bill under the new rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. It is to carry out an obligation we are under by treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not directly relate to any appropriation in the bill under the new rule.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order suggested by the Senator from Vermont, that the amendment does not directly relate to any appropriation contained in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is raised that the amendment does not strictly relate to any appropriation contained in the bill. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut is one providing for carrying out a stipulation with the Delawares, appropriating a certain amount of money for that purpose. The Chair does not find any appropriation to the tribe of the Delawares in the bill, and therefore this is in the language of the new special rule legislation which does not relate directly to the appropriations contained in the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Chair say there is nothing referring to the Delawares contained in the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator point out anything?

Mr. INGALLS. On page 26, commencing with line 617.

Mr. WINDOM. The question is whether this relates to that appropriation contained in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair finds that this item referred to does relate to the Delawares, but under the treaty of 1829; and the amendment which is proposed relates to the treaty of 1866—two entirely different treaties. For that reason the Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Does the Chair rule it out of order because it is an appropriation to carry out the treaty of 1866?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Because it proposes to carry out a different treaty from that to which the appropriation in the bill relates. It is new legislation.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted after line 1629:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to purchase from the Omaha Indians in Nebraska such quantity of land, not exceeding twenty sections, as may be required for the use of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin, and for improvements on their reservation, to be appropriated from the residue of the $1,100,000 provided to be set apart for the Winnebagoes by the fourth article of the treaty with those Indians November 1, 1837: Provided, That such amount as may be paid to the Omahas for the lands required shall be applied for their use, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for general purposes of civilization, $82,000.

Mr. SARGENT. That is an appropriation out of the money of these Indians?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think we ought to object to that.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. It takes nothing from the Treasury. I will state that the Winnebago Indians are unwilling to go to the Indian Territory. The Omahas propose to sell them a portion of their land. The Winnebagoes are willing to buy it and go there. This is a proposition to take twenty sections and pay the Omahas $2.50 per acre for the twenty sections, which will amount to some $32,000. The provision is that the sum of $82,000 shall be taken from the fund now in the hands of the Government which belongs to the Winnebagoes, and shall be used in payment for the land and then for civilization, and that the amount which is paid to the Omahas shall be used in the same way by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1786:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the erection of buildings, fencing, and opening farms; the purchase of teams, farming implements, tools, and seeds; for the erection of saw-mills, school-houses, blacksmith-shops, &c., for the Indians of the Siletz agency in Oregon, $50,000: Provided, That there shall be set apart for the said Indians the lands now occupied by them on the Alsea and Siletz reservations, described as follows:

Alsea:

Beginning on the shore of the Pacific Ocean, at the mouth of a small stream about midway between the Umpqua and Sinslow Rivers; thence easterly to the ridge dividing the waters of the streams and along said ridge and highland to the western boundary of the eighth range of townships west of the Willamette meridian; thence north on said boundary till it intersects the Alsea River; thence down the Alsea River to the Pacific Ocean; thence southerly along the shore of the Pacific Ocean to the place of beginning.

Siletz:

Commencing at a point two miles south of the Siletz agency; thence easterly to the western boundary of the eighth range of townships west of the Willamette meridian; thence north on said boundary to a point due east of Cape Lookout; thence west to the Pacific Ocean; and thence southerly along the coast to a point due west of the place of beginning; thence east to the place of beginning: And provided further, That allotments of said lands may be made to such Indians as may desire them and patents issued therefor, upon condition, however, that said lands shall not be sold, leased, or otherwise disposed of until further legislation by Congress.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall have to raise the point of order that this is new legislation, and does not relate to any appropriation contained in the bill.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I do not know as to the point of order, but I know it is very important that this legislation should be had.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it will be better for the Senator to bring it in here as a separate measure from his committee and pass it. I am afraid we shall load down this bill with general legislation.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. If it is ruled out, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment contains a number of legislative provisions which do not relate to any appropriation that the Chair is able to find in the bill; and, the point of order being made, it is ruled out of order.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1818:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be required, for the erection of suitable buildings to be used for the purpose of an industrial school for the Otoe and Missouria tribe of Indians on the Otoe reservation in the State of Nebraska, $5,000; and for the establishment and support of said school, $8,000; said amounts to be refunded out of the proceeds from the sale of lands of said Indians provided for by the third section of the act of June 10, 1872, entitled "An act for the relief of certain tribes of Indians in the northern superintendency. (17 Statutes at Large, page 392.)

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1829:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to subsist and properly care for the Kansas Indians, including agricultural assistance, pay of employés, and the erection of a mill on their new reservation in the Indian Territory, said amount to be refunded to the United States from the proceeds of the sale of their lands in Kansas, $30,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the erection of necessary agency buildings on the new reservation of said Indians in the Indian Territory, said amount to be reimbursed to the United States from the proceeds of the sale of their lands in Kansas, $10,000.

I will simply state, in regard to this amendment, that there is now to the credit of this tribe $200,000. The interest at 5 per cent., making $10,000, is appropriated annually to them for their use. They have now gone on a new reservation, and it is claimed, and I believe justly, that the necessities of the tribe demand a larger expenditure than that at this particular crisis, and therefore it is proposed, and I think very justly and properly, that we shall take this amount from the income which will be derived from this fund hereafter and use it now—anticipate its receipt. That is the amount of it.

Mr. HAGER. I have no disposition to interfere with this bill as reported by the committee, but I think we ought to rely somewhat upon the judgment of the committee. I have had some opportunity of acquiring knowledge on this subject, and I do not believe that the Indians are ever going to put up saw-mills or make use of them if you put them up for them. It may benefit somebody, but it will not benefit the Indians. It is well-known in our State that appropriations have been made sometimes year after year not one dollar of which ever went to the Indians; and so it is with a great many of the appropriations for the Indians; the money does not reach them; it adheres to the hands of those who manipulate it, who are charged with its distribution. I am satisfied that no Indians will ever undertake to put up saw-mills, or that if they are put up for them, they will undertake to operate them. They are wandering tribes, as a general thing, going from one place to another. The most direct way of getting the benefit to the Indian is to bring him as near to the appropriation, whether it be of property or money, as you possibly can. When it goes through the hands of an agent, whether it be clothing, property, or anything else, directly to the Indian, it may perhaps benefit him; but if it is to be absorbed in the erection of saw-mills to be run in the interest of other parties and by other parties, it will never go to the benefit of the Indian.

For that reason I would prefer to have this bill referred back to the committee, that they may arrange it in such a way that it will operate beneficially, or else to oppose any change in it here. I think that when a committee have acted upon a bill of this importance we ought to rely upon them, and have some respect at least for their judgment and be governed by it to some extent.

Mr. BOGY. The committee has acted.

Mr. HAGER. But here are propositions to change the recommendations of the committee, as I understand.

Mr. BOGY. Not at all.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. This is a recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Here is a tribe of Indians just located in a new country, and it is evident that in order to establish themselves there, in order to place themselves in such a position that they can make rapid progress, it is essential that they shall receive more than their ordinary annuities, and it is essential that they shall receive it to-day, because if they do receive it to-day, they can make such a use of it as to be a great deal more benefit to them than if it shall be withheld from them now and given a few years hence. This is an appropriation from their own fund, not from the funds of the Government; and the only question is whether we shall withhold from them that which belongs to them because we may think it may be improperly used. If I knew it would be improperly used I would not give it, as a matter of course; but it seems to me the necessities of the case are such that we ought to run the risk and do more for them. If you put them on a farming country to-day, but do not give them the necessary plows and horses, they will not be able to do much toward raising a crop. If you put them there to-day and you can take from their fund that which will give them the implements by which they can earn their living, you will improve their condition much more than if you delay it.

Mr. WINDOM. I have not felt disposed to resist this amendment for this reason: the Committee on Appropriations had it referred to them, but not having the papers nor the facts before them they relied upon the Committee on Indian Affairs on this subject, and where an appropriation such as this is to be taken out of the funds of the Indians is a matter of Indian policy, and has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, I do not feel myself called upon to resist it. The responsibility is upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it is for them to convince the Senate that their amendments ought to pass, and it is only in cases of legislation which are improper in the bill that I feel like resisting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a further count insisted upon?

Mr. HAGER. As I fear the result will be to show that we are without a quorum, I will not insist upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope if we are without a quorum we shall find it out. I am not in favor of doing business without a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California withdraws the call for a division. Does the Senator from Vermont re now it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the Senator from California gave as a reason for withdrawing the call that there was not a quorum here, I insist upon it. I do not need to renew it; it was an order of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will count the other side.

The noes being counted, there were 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Chandler Clayton, Cooper, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Ingalls, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Sargent, Saulsbury, Scott, Tipton, and Washburn—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Edmunds, Hager, Johnston, Ransom, Robertson, Wadleigh, Windom, and Wright—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Pratt, Ramsey, Schurz, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and West—36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I move to amend the bill by striking out from the word "Montana," in line 1839, to the word "that," in line 1844, in the following words:

In accordance with the second section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the removal of the Flathead and other Indians from the Bitter Root Valley, in the Territory of Montana," approved June 5, 1872, $5,000: Provided.

And in lieu thereof inserting:

Five thousand dollars: Provided, That the proceeds of the sales of land in Bitter Root Valley, Montana Territory, referred to in the second section of the act of Congress approved June 5, 1872, entitled "An act to provide for the removal of the Flathead and other Indians from the Bitter Root Valley, in the Territory of Montana," (United States Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 226,) shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States in the same manner that other moneys derived from the sale of other public lands are now paid in: And provided further, That in lieu of the amount provided to be set apart therefrom by the act of Congress of June 5, 1872, hereinbefore referred to, there shall be annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, for the period of ten years, to be expended, under the direction of the President, in the manner deemed for the best good of the Indians who have been removed from Bitter Root Valley: And provided further.

This is a very slight change in the original bill. Fifty thousand dollars is already appropriated and therefore can be used without any action on the part of Congress, it being used at the rate of $5,000 a year. This amendment proposes to have the $50,000, as it shall be received, paid into the Treasury; and then that the $5,000 taken out this year for this purpose, and so hereafter, may be appropriated each year. We think that under the present law the Secretary of the Treasury can use $5,000 this year of the money which is now in the Treasury, and that the clause in the bill gives him an additional $5,000. This amendment is designed to correct that, and give him the opportunity to use only one $5,000.

Mr. WINDOM. Does the treaty provide for $5,000 a year for ten years?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Yes, sir. It provides that when the land shall be surveyed and sold at $1.25 an acre, a fund from the sale shall be reserved of $50,000 to be expended in annual installments of not over $5,000 in any one year, under the direction of the Secretary.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to the amendment, then.

The question being put, it was declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I call for a division.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. What is the objection, I should like to know?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 22, noes not counted.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1846:

For this amount, to idemnify the Pawnee Indians for forty-eight hundred acres of land erroneously excluded from their reservation by the survey of the boundary line thereof, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for their benefit, $6,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to inform us how that amount is ascertained.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. This tribe of Indians had set apart for them by treaty a reservation measuring thirty miles by fifteen, but on a resurvey it was ascertained that the reservation was only fifteen miles by twenty-nine and one-half. Therefore it left a deficiency of half a mile for fifteen miles. That amounted to forty-eight hundred acres, which at $1.25 an acre—which we regarded as justly due the Pawnee Indians—makes the sum appropriated.

Mr. WINDOM. This can be nothing more than a claim. The value of those lands is estimated. They may be worth one dollar an acre; they may be worth twenty-five cents an acre; they may be worth five dollars an acre. It seems to me this bill is no place on which to put claims of this character. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I suppose it would be very proper if the Pawnees could get all that the Government received for these lands. I do not know how much it was. Very likely it was $2.50 instead of $1.25 an acre.

Mr. WINDOM. There seems to have been a mistake of half a mile in running this line, and somebody estimates this land at $1.25 an acre. The Senator from Connecticut thinks it may be worth $2.50. If so, we ought not to cheat the Indian. Therefore I think the Senator had better withdraw this amendment at present, refer the matter back to the Indian Committee, and when they have ascertained the amount of damages they can bring in a bill, and we can act upon it separately.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I will say that this amount has been regarded by those who are more capable of judging perhaps than I am as a just and proper amount. If the Senator desires any information from the Department in regard to it, I have the papers here. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BOGY. There is a conflict here between the action of two committees, and the public service is likely to suffer because there is a misunderstanding. The Committee on Indian Affairs have acted upon all these subjects as matters specially belonging to that committee. They are presumed to be familiar with the subject, and after they had agreed to recommend many of these appropriations, the papers were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it seems, for reasons I have no doubt that may be good to the Committee on Appropriations, they have ignored certain of these appropriations; and I will say from conversation with the chairman of that committee that the subject has not been very thoroughly examined by that committee, because he informs me himself that the papers were not laid before the committee.

The Committee on Indian Affairs have performed their duty, have examined all these matters laboriously. This very subject is one involving a large number of reports from the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommending this appropriation, because half a mile of country belonging to these Indians has been unjustly and improperly taken by the Government of the United States in Government surveys. If we cannot trust the officers of the Government, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whom, in the name of the Lord, can we trust? It comes to us as a matter of plain justice. By the treaty these Indians were entitled to a territory fifteen miles in width by thirty miles in length. The surveys of the United States have been made since the adoption of the treaty, and by those surveys that territory was encroached upon to the extent of half a mile. About that fact there is no doubt. The survey is exhibited to us; everything is acknowledged to us. That land is known to be worth more than $1.25 per acre.

The matter has been investigated by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and not investigated by the Committee on Appropriations; and because it has not been investigated by that committee they are opposed to it. The other committee come here and affirmatively say, "We have investigated this thing, and we recommend it as being just;" and yet the Committee on Appropriations, without any examination, oppose the appropriation, because to oppose appropriations is always very popular with the people. If the Senate are to follow the Committee on Appropriations on these matters, we may as well abandon the Committee on Indian Affairs and let it be disbanded. If they are to have no weight because they call for an appropriation, there is no use in having such a committee. This to me and to the committee appeared to be a very plain matter. The committee were unanimous in recommending the amendment; and I repeat what I believe I am authorized to state in the presence of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the subject was not investigated by that committee.

Mr. WINDOM. A very large number of amendments was sent to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Indian Affairs. No papers accompanied them. The Committee on Appropriations had no means, as the Senator from Missouri says, of ascertaining whether certain of these amendments should pass or not. Those that they could not inform themselves about thoroughly they have simply instructed me to say they did not recommend; I am not instructed to resist them; but certain of them the committee have instructed me to resist. The Committee on Indian Affairs must take upon themselves the responsibility of convincing the Senate as to each one of these amendments which they have examined and which we have not had the opportunity to examine.

This is one of that class of cases, and I simply suggest certain facts in answer to the argument of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Missouri. This very case, it seems to me, shows conclusively that the character of amendment offered here is not such as to justify us in placing it upon this bill. The Senator from Missouri reiterates the statement of the Senator from Connecticut that these lands are worth more than they have been estimated at here. If so, we shall have a claim at the next session of Congress from these Indians that we have only appropriated $1.25 per acre for these lands when they were worth $2.50 an acre. There ought to be some mode of ascertaining precisely what this claim is, for it is nothing more nor less than a claim; and it seems to me the Committee on Indian Affairs have the opportunity that every other committee has in this body to introduce bills and to have them acted upon separately, instead of loading down the appropriation bill with all the private claims which may come before that committee.

Complaint has been made of me in regard to amendments offered this morning by the honorable Senator from Connecticut, that I was not sufficiently resisting the amendments, that I was not doing it with sufficient earnestness; the Senator from Missouri now complains that I am resisting them all. I simply stand here to suggest any objections that I see to the amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and to submit to the Senate whether those amendments ought to be adopted or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WRIGHT in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected, the ayes being 12—less than a majority of a quorum.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment to come in after line 1863:

For this amount, being the unexpended balance of sums due the Pillager band at Leach Lake under treaty stipulations, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for the civilization and benefit of said Indians, $23,096.23.

Mr. BOGY. This is merely carrying out a treaty stipulation. This money has accumulated and belongs to the Indians, and it ought to have been expended from year to year; but for some strange reason the Indian board did not do it. It is an accumulation, and was brought to the notice of the board by Bishop Whipple, who is an exceedingly zealous and faithful educator of these people. The object is to appropriate the money belonging to the Indians and which has accumulated under treaty stipulations for the purpose of education, and in the main to be paid out under the authority of Bishop Whipple.

Mr. WINDOM. Is it recommended by the Department?

Mr. BOGY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know how this amount accumulated for the Indians. If it accumulated from small sums not expended from the amounts appropriated, I do not know what right we have to take it in lump and say it shall be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for educational and other purposes. It either had a specific designation under the treaties (and that was the universal rule) by which it should be expended for particular objects and no others, or it is not due at all. If it is not due at all, of course we ought not to appropriate this money. If it is due for specific objects, and we appropriate it in this general way under the pretense of its being for general civilization purposes, we are liable at the next session or at some subsequent time for a claim to be made for this very amount on the ground that we had no business to appropriate it for these objects; that the treaties named the objects for which it should be appropriated; and if it had not been appropriated to those objects, our expending it, even for their benefit, for some other purpose was not a compliance with the treaties. Now, we have in this bill appropriations in exact compliance with treaties, under specific articles of treaties, and then we find side by side with them half or two-thirds of the same amounts, or even exceeding the same amounts, given for the purposes of civilization to the Indian; it being held that we have not the right to divert one dollar from the specific objects named in the treaties for the necessary objects of civilization; that the treaties determine the manner in which the money shall be spent.

If it be said that this $23,000 (and I presume that will be the answer) has not been spent from year to year, that there has not been an exact expenditure under the treaty, and these amounts remain as unexpended balances from former years, then I say they should be appropriated specifically for the objects for which they were originally appropriated, or you do not clear the Government of the United States from being liable to pay this money again. It will be another Pottawatomie claim coming in here for so many pounds of soap and so many pounds of steel, &c., running over a century, and we shall have to pay the claim or resist it with great difficulty year after year. I therefore think this amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. BOGY. The opposition of the Senator from California is a general one, that the treaties provided for the amount of money to be paid to these Indians to be expended for specific objects. That is not so. A portion of the money due to these Chippewas of Leach Lake was to be expended for education, a portion for civilization, and another portion for such purposes as might be designated by the President of the United States, which means virtually the Secretary of the Interior. Under these different appropriations small sums have been accumulating for several years until they amount to over $20,000. I am authorized by the committee to state that this amendment is simply carrying out exactly the terms of the treaty. It is not diverting any of the money which belonged to specific purposes for the purpose here named, but it is carrying out the terms of the treaty in regard to the accumulation of money in small sums from year to year. It does not take a cent from the Treasury. This is the money of the Indians, which is in the Treasury to their credit, and the object now is to use it for educational purposes.

Mr. SARGENT. Why has it not been spent before? It has been appropriated.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator might ask that question of a man who was here. I believe he was; I was not; I cannot tell. It is very easy to ask why it has not been done before. I only state the fact that this money has not been expended; it is in the Treasury; and we want to expend it now for this purpose; and I am authorized by the committee to state the further fact that it is in accordance with the treaty. If that be not satisfactory to the Senator, I cannot answer him more definitely.

Mr. SARGENT. Those are mere general remarks. We have the right to have the specific information that I ask for. We have the right to know how much was unexpended each year, and why it was unexpended, and why it is that this large amount, over $20,000, equal to the whole amount due them for a year, now remains unexpended. If the Committee on Indian Affairs or the Senator who takes charge of this amendment is not prepared to give us information of that kind, the matter had better be recommitted to the committee. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I hope the question will be taken on the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. SARGENT. I am willing to take the question in that form. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question recurs on the adoption of the amendment.

The question being put, a division was called for; and there were 11 ayes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Less than a majority of a quorum voting in the affirmative, unless a further count is demanded the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I ask for a further count.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those opposed to the amendment will rise.

Eighteen Senators rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I ask for the yeas and nays on this question. I deem it important.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have voted for the amendments which have been presented by the Committee on Indian Affairs pretty generally, but I am going to change my position, and it is on that account that I rise to state my reasons for doing so.

The Committee on Indian Affairs have offered several amendments, and I have believed there was justice in them; but I have come to the conclusion that no committee of this body should load down an appropriation bill with that which belongs specifically to separate legislation. This is an Indian appropriation bill. If all the legislation that comes before the Committee on Indian Affairs be loaded upon this bill, I ask why may not all the matters that come before the Committee on Commerce be reserved and put upon an appropriation bill relating to the revenues of the country? And so you may travel through every committee of this body, and you will find some legislation that will be adapted to the subjects which they will have to consider before them, and you may make what? Your appropriation bills general legislative bills.

Now I insist, and I do it with regret, that these propositions, if they have merit in them, should be reported and considered in separate bills, that we may consider them by themselves, and not make an appropriation bill the pack-horse to lug them through. That is my judgment; and it is for that reason—not that there is anything particularly objectionable in this amendment—that I shall be compelled to vote against these appropriations.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I ask the Senator from Maine if the amendment under consideration is not a proper amendment to go on the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. HAMLIN. I would answer that perhaps they are all proper, if you will allow every other committee of the Senate to put its measures upon the various appropriation bills. My idea of an appropriation bill is that it should provide for nothing in the world but just what is required under existing laws, and that an appropriation bill for this year should not be loaded down with what really belonged to the appropriation bill of last year. It comes rather in the nature of a deficiency and not on an original appropriation bill. That is my objection. You could put almost every bill we pass here on some appropriation bill with just as much judgment; and I think the committees ought to report separate bills to meet their separate cases. That is my idea.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I have no objection to the general idea which the Senator from Maine has, but this is an amendment which proposes to expend that which we owe this band under treaty stipulations, and I do not know how we can get an appropriation of that money in any other way than on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to have the amendment reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after line 1863:

For this amount, being the unexpended balance of sums due to the Pillager band at Leach Lake under treaty stipulations, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for the civilization and benefit of said Indians, $23,096.23.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My attention has been called to this amendment within a few moments. I cannot speak of the merits of it, but I desire to say something in a general way.

I happen to be upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, but my other engagements are of such a character as not to admit of much attention on my part to the business of that committee; but having been in that committee when some of these propositions were before it, I must say that my own judgment then was what it has been from my experience heretofore, that the only attainable way for the Committee on Indian Affairs to get the attention of the Senate to that portion of the Indian service which properly belongs upon this bill is to consider the matter itself. By the course of business it is known that we are in the habit of sending amendments to the Committee on Appropriations. It does not turn out as a general thing that it is practicable for the Committee on Appropriations to consider any amendment which involves a service or which involved an unsettled balance. That properly belongs to other committees.

Now, Mr. President, what is the nature of this general proposition? I speak of it in a general way, for I am not to speak of its merits, for they having been examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs my own action would be governed by that. The only question is whether this in a general way is of that nature which may properly be put upon this bill. This is a bill providing exclusively for the Indian service. This proposition relates to the Indian service, and it relates to the Indian service growing out of a treaty stipulation; it is for a balance due, so to speak, to these Indians arising under treaty stipulations not performed. That I understand to be the general statement of the proposition itself.

I am very free to say that I agree entirely with my colleague in regard to the impropriety of the practice of putting general legislation upon appropriation bills; but I think the distinction is most obvious in this case. This is in no sense general legislation. This is legislation to a particular effect, to the effect of providing what ought to have been provided last year under your treaty stipulations—no more, no less. It is germane; it is within the very object and scope of this bill; that is, it is to provide for the Indian service; and everybody who knows the Indian service knows that we are not so particularly careful in providing for the service each year as always to avoid having these claims lying around in the committees; and I know of no way that you can meet them except by distinct bills which would take up a great deal of the time of the Senate. Unless when this bill, which is devoted exclusively to the Indian service, comes up the rule can be regarded so broad as to embrace such claims as the Indian Committee present to us relating exclusively to the Indian service, and not in the nature of private claims, but in the nature of balances due the Indians under treaty stipulations, I do not see how otherwise you are to regulate it.

Why, Mr. President, what is the difference between this and a proposition providing for any other branch of the service? We do not hesitate to make amendments on any other bill touching the branch of the service to which the bill relates; that is to say, any amendments which relate to specific appropriations necessary for that service; and this, it seems to me, in a general way is precisely the character of this proposition. In addition to that, I am satisfied that the uniform practice upon this bill has been the one which the Indian Committee are attempting to pursue now. Therefore, unless there is some objection to the general character of this proposition, I am inclined to favor it.

Mr. SARGENT. I have only a word to say. Here is a little tribe of Indians. The appropriations for them annually are I think about $20,000. They are on Leach Lake. It seems to me exceedingly strange and something not explained in this debate that while we have been making appropriations of $20,000 to which they are entitled each year, the unexpended balances can have run up to $23,000, requiring to be reappropriated now in addition to the amount in the bill. To my mind it is an unexplained circumstance. Furthermore, here is a grouping of this whole amount for a specific object, when certainly only a portion of the amount was discretionarily to be applied to education. I think it is an extremely bad system. I want a little more thorough understanding of the workings of the Department which will make these large balances, when they ought to have been expended and were appropriated to be expended each year for these Indian purposes.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. It may be difficult for the committee to ascertain why certain amounts appropriated are not expended. Let me say to the Senator, however, that there was last year appropriated $100,000 for purposes of education; and of that $100,000 only $60,000 was used. I do not know nor can I determine why it was not used, except that the Department did not think it wise or advisable to go beyond $60,000.

Mr. SARGENT. That $100,000 to which the Senator refers was appropriated several years ago, not last year, and that was for general purposes. I am now speaking of a treaty which says that there shall be $5,000 expended for a particular purpose, and $5,000 for such another purpose, and Congress has appropriated those amounts year after year. That is not a question of discretion; it is the duty of the Department to expend the amounts for the objects named in the treaty and in the law.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I think there is a great deal in a treaty which is to be expended according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior or the President. Where a treaty provides that so much shall be appropriated or may be appropriated for agricultural purposes or for the purpose of promoting civilization, then I think it may be a matter of discretion whether the President will expend the entire amount each and every year or not.

Mr. OGLESBY. The treaty says "under the discretion of the President."

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Yes, sir. I think it is difficult always to determine where the deficiency is.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham. Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Texas, Ingalls, Logan, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Ramsey, Scott, Tipton, Washburn, and Windom—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Chandler, Cooper, Davis, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Kelly, Lewis, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Wadleigh, and Wright—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Gordon, Harvey, Howe, Johnston, Jones, Mitchell, Norwood, Patterson, Pratt, Schurz, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and West—30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment:

After line 1871 insert:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to relieve the necessities of the Chippewa Indians attached to the Red Cliff and Bad River reservations in the State of Wisconsin, $2,000, to be available immediately.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to have an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. There is no explanation to be made, except that reports come from that section of country that these Indians are actually suffering and in distress for food; and it is to meet that demand and supply them that the committee proposes the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted after line 1871:

For this amount, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the fourth section of the act entitled "An act for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin," approved February 6, 1871, by causing to be credited to said tribe the estimated value, at sixty cents an acre, of 11,803 acres of land remaining unsold of the two townships referred to in said act: Provided, That the expenses of enrollment and payment required by the provisions of said act shall be defrayed from the amount hereby appropriated, $7,081.80.

Mr. SARGENT. I think we ought to have some explanation of these amendments.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. In 1871 an act was passed authorizing the sale of certain lands belonging to the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians, and it was proposed that after a certain time the lands which were not sold should be taken by the United States and credited to those Indians at the rate of sixty cents an acre. A portion of those lands has been sold and those remaining unsold are about eleven thousand acres, and it is proposed to credit this amount at the rate of sixty cents an acre to them. That is the object of this amendment, and it is in accordance with a treaty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted after line 1835:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to pay the sum of $100,000 from the proceeds of the sales of land known as the Cherokee strip in Kansas to the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation, to be used for the payment of outstanding claims against the nation and for the erection of suitable buildings for a penitentiary.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope that will be explained.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Under a former treaty with the Cherokees it was stipulated that all funds due the nation or that might thereafter be due from the sales of lands should be invested in stocks to their credit; but at that time it was determined that a certain amount should be paid over to them that they might cancel certain debts which they owed, and that amount was limited to $150,000. That was an estimate of the amount due, but not the actual amount. Since then it is ascertained that there was a larger amount due than that which was stated, and now the Indians themselves ask that from the fund which is to their credit in the hands of the Government there shall be taken money to pay their debts and also to enable them to build a penitentiary which they need. It is their own money.

Mr. WINDOM. The whole amount of this money is now in the Treasury, do I understand?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. I will state to my colleague on the committee that I have looked carefully into this matter, and I am satisfied the proposition is right.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask if this is recommended by the department?

Mr. BOGY. It is.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the end of section 8:

And provided further, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by act of July 15, 1870, for educational purposes for the Indians, be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated; and the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for their education and civilization.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to know what amount of money is involved in that.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Seventy-five thousand dollars is the amount. It appropriates $35,000 out of the Treasury now, and reappropriates the unexpended balance, which is $40,000, making $75,000.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it recommended by the department?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Yes, sir; and sustained by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator be kind enough to have the letter read which recommends it?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I do not know that I can put my hand on it now.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, for almost every tribe named in it has an appropriation for educational purposes, and then there is a general appropriation. Now this amendment asks for $75,000 additional. I think when the Senate understands the amount of money that is involved, when all of the tribes have been provided for as the committee thought, it will hardly put on this amendment.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I hope the Senate will give us this appropriation. I do not find at this moment the letter of the department, but the amendment is regarded as important. There are three classes of schools established among the Indians; one for children, another called industrial schools, a place where the women can learn those arts which are necessary for civilized and domestic life, and another where the men learn the same arts in relation to those industries which are necessary to advance them to a condition of self-support. Now I do claim that it is necessary to leave a portion of money at the discretion of some wise man that shall be used in the different localities, which cannot be defined in exact terms. I hope the amendment will be sustained.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for a division of the amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. That the question may be understood by the Senate, I will say that this is an appropriation of $75,000 out of the Treasury for general school purposes among the Indians. I doubt very seriously whether this is the time to appropriate money so generally for Indian education. We have been cutting down in every direction, trying to economize; and while it may possibly be of use, I doubt the expediency of it, and hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the amendment be divided. One clause reappropriates an amount heretofore appropriated—$40,000. The amount of $100,000 originally was appropriated four years ago, and during that time they have succeeded in expending $60,000 of it. If the other $40,000 was put at their disposal, it would be a pretty liberal allowance; but in addition to that it is proposed to add $35,000 more. I ask for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proper way to reach the end is for the Senator to move to strike out the part to which he objects.

Mr. SARGENT. I move, then, to amend the amendment by striking out the last clause, in these words: "And the sum of $35,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for their education and civilization."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. On line 729 I move to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. ROBERTSON. How will it read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. If amended as proposed the clause will read:

For settlement, support, and civilization of Kickapoo Indians in Indian Territory, lately removed from Mexico and such as may be removed hereafter, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment, to be inserted after the word "dollars," in line 1908:

And the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury all stocks and evidences of indebtedness that may be due or held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior or of record in his office on account of the Creek orphans' fund arising under the provisions of the treaty with the Creek Nation of March 24, 1832, whereupon it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to issue in lieu thereof United States 5 per cent. registered bonds, with interest accruing on the same from July 1, 1874, and which said bonds shall be held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior, who may, on the request of said orphans or their legal representatives, cause the same to be converted into money, to be applied for the benefit of the Creek orphans of 1832, or their legal heirs and representatives, in accordance with the provisions of said treaty, in such sums and at such times as may be required.

Mr. SARGENT. I raise the point of order that this is not required by any existing law, and that it is not germane to anything in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BOGY. I will state that this arises under a treaty made in 1832, and I think the rule covers that. It is carrying out the treaty made with the Creek Indians in 1832, and I think it is within the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That depends upon a question of fact about which the Chair is not informed.

Mr. SARGENT. The question of fact is considerably complicated. In the first place it is a mere claim, and not a direct obligation on the part of the Government. Furthermore, the Government itself assumed by several laws to expend this money for the benefit of the Indians, and the question is raised in avoidance whether it had the power to do it or not. If there is any claim at all, it rests in an equity that is not very clearly deducible from the legislation. There certainly is no law requiring the appropriation.

Mr. BOGY. It rests positively on the treaty made in 1832.

Mr. SARGENT. I am aware of the assertion in the amendment that it is so, and I have no doubt there was at one time a claim of this character; but I simply say it has entirely passed away; it was forfeited by the conduct of these Creeks, by their going into rebellion, by their making a treaty with the Confederate States, and by a subsequent treaty the former expenditure of this money was recognized when the new treaty was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the amendment is out of order. He thinks it does not come within the meaning of the recent special rule as directly relating to an appropriation contained in the bill. The special rule for this session provides that "no amendment to any such bill making legislative provisions other than such as directly relate to the appropriations contained in the bill shall be received." The Chair thinks this does not relate to the appropriations in the bill in the sense the rule requires. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I think I have omitted one amendment which I had to propose. In line 1818 I move to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty," so as to increase the appropriation "for carrying out the work of aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization, in providing clothing, food, and lodging for the children attending school, in caring for the orphans, the sick, and the helpless, and in assisting the Indians generally to locate themselves in permanent homes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life," from $10,000 to $50,000.

Mr. WINDOM. It will be found by reference to page 86 of the bill, section 8, that the sum of $24,480.86, being the unexpended balance of an appropriation of $40,000 to carry on the work of aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization, is reappropriated, and by reference to the closing paragraph of the same section the sum of $10,000 is appropriated for the support of schools in the central superintendency, making in all $34,480; and with this $10,000 already appropriated in the bill there is $44,480 appropriated for that purpose. The gentleman who has charge of that branch of the service was before the Committee on Appropriations, and to him these amounts were read and he was consulted about them, and he did not urge this appropriation now moved. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. In the eighth line of section 2, I propose to strike out the words "and all examinations of vouchers and accounts shall hereafter be performed in the city of Washington."

The section provides that the accounts shall be examined by certain men connected with the peace commission—Mr. Dodge, Mr. Bishop, and Mr. Stewart. If they are to examine all the bills and all the accounts before they can be paid by the Secretary of the Interior, they must reside here the greater part of the time, and if they should reside here all the time it appears to me it would be an unnecessary work. I hope the amendment will be made.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is entirely mistaken in reference to the law and what effect this section has upon it. By express provision of law it is not made a prerequisite to the payment that the accounts shall be examined by this commission. The object of the law on this point is not to make these men auditing officers whose approval shall be necessary to the payment of a voucher, because that would be putting a very great power in the hands of these men, besides degrading the Interior Department. The law does not so provide. The law expressly says that their pre-examination shall not be necessary to the payment of accounts; and the only provision is that these gentlemen shall examine the vouchers in the course of the year and make a report of any irregularities they find. It is in the nature of an examination rather than an auditing of the accounts; and of course the accounts of the Government cannot be scattered all over the country. They cannot be sent to Saint Louis, to Portland, or to New York, and elsewhere, because a great many valuable papers would be lost.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. They should be examined here, if anywhere.

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly, and that is all the section provides for; but I do not want to make an objection to striking out these words because that will leave the law in full force. My only object was to call attention to the fact that the law does not require this examination as a prerequisite to payment. I have no objection to the words going out. As the rest of the section is stricken out down to line 14, this might as well go with it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. This seems to be a bill for general purposes, and I would ask leave to offer the following amendment to come in at the end of section 8:

Provided, That all laws and parts of laws prohibiting recruiting to fill up the Army to the maximum are hereby repealed.

I hope that will be adopted.

Mr. SARGENT. I raise the point of order on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to reserve the amendments made on pages 9, 31, and 79 from the vote of concurrence.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to reserve the amendment on page 3, which was passed over. I understand the Senator from Minnesota does not insist upon the amendment, and the vote can be taken at once by common consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole which have not been reserved for a separate vote.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first reserved amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first reserved amendment is on page 3, lines 51 to 54, to strike out the following words in the clause appropriating for the tribes in Iowa:

And $1,200 to build a school-house: Provided, That no salary be paid to the agent unless he lives near enough to the agency to teach and care for the tribe every day.

Mr. WINDOM. The Committee on Appropriations recommended that those words be stricken out for the reason that they supposed on a salary of $500 for the agent it would be very difficult to find one capable of teaching a school, and that consequently it was not worth while to build a school-house as provided in the House bill. But I am informed by the Senator from Iowa that the school is kept by those in the neighborhood; and consequently I have no objection (and I have consulted other members of the committee) to the provision contained in the House bill.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next reserved amendment is on page 9, line 198, to strike out "3" and insert "5."

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to call the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendments proposed in that section in full, being in relation to the Apaches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has not yet been reported in full.

Mr. SARGENT. We took the yeas and nays on that matter, I believe, and the Senate by something like a three-fourths vote in Committee of the Whole agreed to the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I think not.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the record will show it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported in full.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment made in Committee of the Whole makes the clause read:

For this amount, to subsist and properly care for the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico and Arizona, namely, for those in Arizona, $550,000; and for those in New Mexico, $150,000, $700,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be expended only in behalf of those Indians who go and remain upon said reservations and refrain from hostilities.

Mr. INGALLS. As it appears from the record of the Clerk that the yeas and nays have once been called on this proposition, I withdraw the demand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in this amendment?

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next reserved amendment is on page 31, line 740. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "sixty" and inserted "ninety;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That the expense of removing said Indians shall not exceed ninety dollars for each Indian removed to the reservation.

Mr. INGALLS. No explanation was given by the Senator having this bill in charge of the necessity for this increase. Before the Senate passes on it I should like to hear from him.

Mr. WINDOM. The only explanation I have to give is this. The Kickapoo Indians who are to be brought on the reservation are now roving in Mexico, and they are some four hundred miles in the interior. The only trouble is that if we let them rove in Mexico they steal cattle, maraud back and forth over the border, and are a great annoyance to people living near the line. It has been deemed expedient to bring them back. If they are brought back it is believed this sum is not sufficient, for the reason that it is four hundred miles from where they are to the nearest railroad. If they are to be brought at all their consent must be obtained, and if they prefer to come in that way they must be permitted to do so, or else they will not come at all. It is estimated that it will cost at least fifteen dollars to bring them to the nearest railroad station, and then from that by rail the actual charge is forty-eight dollars, and when they reach the point nearest the reservation they are two hundred miles from the place to which they are to be taken, and it is estimated that that will cost ten dollars more, making in all seventy-three dollars. Wagons have to be procured in Mexico to bring them to the railway, and they have to be transported from the railway to the reservation, and it is believed that fifteen dollars for the four hundred miles in Mexico and ten dollars for the two hundred and odd miles at this end of the railroad line is not too much, and the charge on the railroad being forty-eight dollars, the amount is as stated, seventy-three dollars. To this must be added the expense of taking care of them on the way, and the committee after careful investigation believe that ninety dollars is not too much if they are to be brought.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On pages 78 and 79 the Senate struck out, commencing in line 1911, the following words:

For this amount, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the children of the Delaware Indians who became citizens of the United States under the provisions of the ninth article of the Delaware treaty of July 4, 1866, and the children of Betsey Zeigler, who died before completing her citizenship under the provisions of said article, their proportionate share of the money and stocks held in trust by the United States for the Delaware tribe of Indians, $54,514.23, of which $21,448.07 shall be deducted from the money credits of said tribe, and $33,066.16, to be taken equitably from their several kinds of stock, shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury and become the property of the United States: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall so determine, the whole amount hereby appropriated shall be taken from the money credits of the tribe, the Secretary of the Interior to designate the funds from which said amounts shall be taken: Provided, That in the case of deceased persons, the Secretary of the Interior shall make payment to their legal representatives; and said Delaware children are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause patents to issue in fee-simple to said persons for the lands allotted to them; and in case of the decease of any of said persons, the said patents shall issue in the names of such deceased persons, including the said Betsey Zeigler, and the title to the lands designated in such patents shall inure to and become vested in the heirs, devisees, or assignees of said deceased patentees, as if the patent had issued to the deceased person during life; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to be issued in fee-simple in the names of Barbara Zeigler, Martha Zeigler, Samuel Ketchum, Nathan S. Tublow, and Francis H. Grinter, who belonged to the families of the citizen class, and who died prior to the census of said Indians made by the agent under the provisions of the treaty of July 4, 1866, for the lands allotted to them; and the lands designated in such patents shall inure to and become vested in the heirs, devisees, or assignees of said deceased patentees as if the patient had issued to the deceased person during life.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood from the Senator from Minnesota that he would probably withdraw his objection to allowing that clause to stand.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator was mistaken, I think. I did not mean to be so understood. I stated yesterday that the Senator would lose no rights by reserving this amendment for a separate vote in the Senate. The clause was stricken out by the Committee on Appropriations, simply for the reason that it contains legislation covering nearly two pages of the bill, in which a large number of facts are involved, about which the committee had no means of ascertaining the truth. Believing it to be the proper subject of a separate bill, and not to be appropriate in the appropriation bill, it was stricken out without reference to its merits. The committee know nothing about them. It seems to me still that the proper place for it is in a separate bill to be acted upon after a full discussion by the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Committee on Appropriations have no means of knowing whether the facts stated in this clause are correctly stated or not, and I doubt very much whether the Senate has any means of ascertaining those facts.

Mr. INGALLS. I think if the committee understood the objects and purposes of this clause they would withdraw their opposition and allow it to remain in the bill. I will call the attention of the Senate to the treaty made with the Delaware Indians July 4, 1866. Under that treaty a large number of the Delaware Indians, adults and heads of families, have become citizens; they have received patents for their lands which are now held in severalty, and have received their portion of the tribal funds. In regard to the minor children of the Delaware Indians, the treaty provides as follows, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to this provision. After reciting the provisions heretofore mentioned by me in regard to the Delaware Indians themselves, it provides:

Whereupon all of the minor children of those who have become citizens shall be construed to have elected to sever their connection with said tribe for the time being, and be entitled to their just proportion of the annuities of the tribe, to be paid to the head of the family to be expended for their support and education until they shall attain the age of twenty-one years, after which each shall elect to remove to his tribe or to become a citizen of the United States, as hereinbefore provided, and if thus admitted to citizenship, shall be entitled to all the privileges and interests herein provided for the head of the family. Should any minor as aforesaid arriving at the age of twenty-one years, and electing to become a citizen of the United States, or any adult Indian having so elected, fail to be admitted, he shall not be compelled to remove, but the Secretary of the Interior shall provide proper guardianship for the protection of his rights and interests and those of his family. There shall be granted to each of the Delawares who have thus become citizens a patent in fee-simple for the lands heretofore allotted to them, and, if they do not remove with the nation, their pro rata share of all annuities and trust property held by the United States for them, the division to be made under the direction of the President of the United States, after which such persons shall cease to be members of the Delaware tribe, and shall not further participate in their councils, nor share in their property or annuities.

Under this provision of this treaty a large number of the minor children of the Delaware Indians have arrived at the age of majority, have become citizens, and are entitled to a distribution of land and to their proportion of the tribal fund. They are an intelligent and industrious class of people living in the thickly settled portions of the State of Kansas. The measure that is proposed has the sanction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and has been favorably considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the House and by them incorporated in this bill.

With regard to the funds that are held by the Treasury for the Delaware tribe of Indians, I invite the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the following statement:

The amount placed to the credit of the Delawares on the books of the Treasury per act of July 12, 1862, in cash is $423,990.26; the amount set apart for school purposes per fifth article treaty of May 5, 1854, is $46,080; making a total of money credits of $470,070.26. Add to this stocks that are held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior to the amount of $724,700.

The total number of the Delaware Indians as appears from the enumeration on file in the Department by the census under the treaty of July 4, 1866, is one thousand and fifty-two, and the number of beneficiaries named in the proviso which is now being considered is forty-eight; so that they will be entitled to $\frac{48}{1052}$ portion of each of the amounts above stated; that is to say of the money credits $21,448.07, and of the stocks, $33,056.16, being a total of $545,514.13 as provided in this bill.

The reason why this subject properly belongs to an appropriation bill is that these stocks and this money are in the Treasury of the United States; but they have not been placed on the books of the Treasury under heads of appropriation so that they can be drawn by the officers of the Government, as is provided by law as the method in which this shall be done. If the Senator will turn to the Indian appropriation act of 1870, he will find that action identical to this was taken in that bill. A certain number of the minor children of the Delaware tribe, entitled to annuities and stocks and money under the provisions of the treaty that I have read, were there declared to be entitled to a certain share of these funds. Upon page 343 of the sixteenth volume of the Statutes the provision is as follows:

For this amount, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provisions of the ninth article of the treaty of July 4, 1866, with the Delaware Indians, by a division of money and stocks held by the United States in trust for them, between the twenty Delawares who have elected to become citizens and the residue of said nation, $22,714.25; of which $8,930.69 shall be deducted from the money credits of said nation and $13,777.56, to be taken equitably from their several kinds of stock, shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury, and become the property of the United States.

So the Senate will see that under the Indian appropriation act of 1870 action precisely identical with that proposed by this proviso was taken in accordance with law, and I hope that the Senator will withdraw his opposition and allow the proviso to stand in the bill as reported from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WINDOM. I have made no opposition to the provision on its merits. I know no reason why it should be opposed. I simply submit the proposition to the Senate on the statement made by the honorable Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on concurring in the amendment as made in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reserved amendments are now concluded.

Mr. WINDOM. I find that I have omitted one amendment on page 49. On line 1182 I move to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,500;" so as to read:

For interest on $800,000 at 5 per cent. per second article treaty of October 11, 1842, $40,000, of which sum $1,500 shall be paid for a physician for the agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAGER. There was an amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations on page 70, which was adopted in Committee of the Whole. I was not present at the time, but I should like to have that amendment passed on now if there be no objection.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope by unanimous consent that amendment will be considered as reserved, as the Senator from California wishes to make some remarks about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to regarding that amendment as pending on the question of concurrence.

Mr. HAGER. The amendment is in line 1700; the provision stricken out is:

That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to set aside a reservation for the Indians roaming in Northern California upon which they may establish their homes and retain the same.

I understand from the Commissioner that as the law now stands the Department may set aside a reservation at any time for the Indians, and that the power now exists whether this provision be retained or not; but if any portion of a proposed reservation is already occupied by settlers or others, they are not at liberty to do so as to such portions occupied, and in such event this legislation becomes necessary.

I am informed this is an important provision for a certain portion of the Indians in California, principally half-breeds that are now engaged to a considerable extent in agricultural pursuits, and that this is more than an ordinary case, which addresses itself to the Government, inasmuch as years ago an arrangement was made with the Indian agent of California by which they disposed of their possessions to the Government on condition that something of this kind should be done for them on the part of the Government. This understanding took place while Mr. McKee was the Indian agent in California. I am not prepared to say of my own knowledge the proposed reservation is going to be a great benefit to the Indians, but I am told that in justice they are entitled to it, and that a great portion of them are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and will continue them if the Government makes the necessary provision for them. If that be so, something of this kind ought to be done in conformity to what has been the policy and custom of the Government. I hope, therefore, the amendment of the committee to strike out the proposed reservation will not be agreed to, and the provision of the bill as it passed the House will be retained.

As I said on a previous occasion, I have been inclined to think that there is a great deal of deception and misrepresentation in the administration of our Indian affairs, and that a great many frauds have been practiced on the Government in the name of humanity and of doing acts of charity to the Indians. But that perhaps is a criticism which might apply to various governmental acts directed by humanitarian views. I am not disposed to discuss the system, but this provision was in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. It has been stricken out by the committee here. I do not know that there is any good reason for it, and although the power to establish this reservation may exist in the present law, I hope this may be restored with a modification to this extent: "That the Secretary of the Interior may at his discretion set aside a reservation for the Indians roaming in Northern California," leaving it with the Department to say whether it ought to be done or not. I hope that my colleague will agree with me that it should be placed in the bill in that form, giving the power to the Secretary of the Interior at his discretion to make this reservation if in his judgment he shall think proper to do so.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I think the legislation proposed is exceedingly injudicious, and I think my colleague himself has given good reasons why it should not be enacted. If he will reflect for a moment he will understand that if the half-breeds and other Indians here spoken of are engaged in agriculture and are cultivating the earth where they are, it would be improper to take them away from the place where they are engaged in agriculture and pen them on a reservation. They cannot desire to lose control of their own movements and go to a reservation. If they did, there is the Round Valley reservation, capable of containing five thousand more Indians than it now has, or there is the Hoopa Valley reservation, or the Mendocino reservation, or the Tule River reservation, on each of which there is ample room for them.

The bill as it came from the House of Representatives appropriated but $40,000 for the whole Indian service in California, for which last year $85,000 were appropriated. Believing it much better to improve the reservations we have than to buy out the improvements of settlers and go to an enormous expense to establish others that are unnecessary, the committee proposed to increase the appropriation to $80,000, which, if properly expended, will go very far toward making the Indians comfortable.

There never has been a treaty made with Indians in California that was ratified by the Senate, and I do not know what lands they ever gave up or that were ever accepted by the Government. In California it has not been held that the Indians had title to the soil. The Mexican government had gathered them about pueblos or missions and had recognized certain rights in those localities, but for the general body of the land of the State it was always treated differently from the land in some of the other Territories where the treaty system prevailed. In California the treaty system never has prevailed. Of course there could not be a treaty made by a simple traveling agent of the Government, never submitted to Congress and never ratified by them. My impression is that the Indians in Siskiyou County and other places where it is proposed to establish these reservations are employed to assist the farmers and are getting along very well, and I would not think it was judicious for the Government to attempt to stretch out the strong hand and endeavor to transport them away from the homes where they are now situated.

We have generally pursued a very different system in our Indian policy there from that alluded to yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ALCORN] of taking the Indians and deporting them forcibly from the places where they had been born and desired to stay and putting them off by themselves in places more or less barren and then being compelled to supply their necessities. In Canada they have pursued exactly the opposite system. The waves of European emigration coming on would envelop and go beyond the Indians. The Indians would be left in the possession of the little homesteads which they were found in possession of; and the result has been that they have become civilized and almost all distinctions of race have been obliterated. The system there has worked admirably, certainly a great deal better than ours which has had a great many inconveniences and especially those which arise from cramping the Indians into a small territory, where they have not the means of subsistence, where we have to feed them or they have to fight for a living. In California we have come nearer to following the Canadian system than in any other State of the Union or in any of the Territories. We have enveloped and surrounded the Indians with a few exceptions, and the system has worked pretty well, as is shown, because it is a matter of choice with the Indians to remain where they are rather than to be carried away and put upon reservations where they are kept by force and put in pursuits uncongenial to themselves. I think myself it is very much better to continue the system which we have in California. We have never had there any Indian wars of any account. There were some in the early time which were very expensive to the Government, from which very expensive claims were made, but very few people were killed on either side, and there was little necessity for the trouble. But up on Mad River and on the borders of Oregon, recently, there were troubles; for instance, the recent Modoc war, arising directly out of the reservation system. If your Indians are peaceable where they are, with freedom of movement and occupation, let them remain so. Certainly they have as much right of locomotion and residence when not guilty of crime as the Chinese or any other race not homogeneous with our people. A reservation is in some sort a prison, and should be resorted to only as a necessity.

I think that it is very much better that we allow this bill to stand as it has been arranged in the Committee of the Whole with a liberal appropriation for the support of the Indian service in California, with the power which resides in the Department to establish a reservation if it shall deem it absolutely necessary, and not requiring or expressly hinting to the Secretary to establish such a reservation. I hope, therefore, the amendment of the Committee of the Whole will be concurred in.

Mr. HAGER. Perhaps my colleague did not understand the modified form in which I proposed to incorporate the proposition.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand my colleague perfectly, and it does not change the existing law. Under the present law, as he admits, this power does reside in the Department. Why repeat it in this bill?

Mr. HAGER. One reason is in case any portion of the Territory should be occupied. If any portion be occupied, then it requires the passage of this law. If none of it be occupied, then this provision would not be necessary. I have no doubt that the Department have heretofore had the power to make this reservation if they had seen fit to do so. That is an argument why it is not important that it should be done, inasmuch as they never have done it heretofore. But in case any portion of the land be occupied, then, as I understand from the Commissioner, this law would be necessary to enable them to do it, and without it they could not do it if so disposed.

My colleague referred to the reservation in Mendocino. That is too remote from this section. This is in the extreme northern portion of the State, and it is too remote from the Mendocino reservation to be of any benefit to these particular Indians unless they are transported from their section to a distant portion of the State of California. This portion of the Indians of California are the most warlike of any we have. They are up in the Modoc section. The Modocs, if we are to believe what we see in the papers, have recently been converted to Christianity, and I presume we shall have no more trouble with them. The Indians in this portion of the State, the most northern portion, are the most warlike of any we have, and were very troublesome and hostile in the early day. As my colleague will recollect, we had quite a number of Indian wars in the early day there, and it was dangerous for a man to ride through the country without running the risk of losing his life, as we all experienced in the early days.

Mr. McKee was the Indian agent in the early days who did, as I understand, procure a relinquishment of title on the part of the Indians, so far as they had any, to the lands in Northern California on condition that a reservation should be made for their benefit. Now the question is, first, whether it should be done in accordance with that agreement; and second, whether it is necessary that it should be done at all. If it be not necessary I am quite sure the Department will not undertake to set aside a reservation there, and therefore I see no objection to giving the Interior Department authority to make the reservation if in its judgment the interests of the State and Indians demand it. In other words, in order to get rid of this difficulty I would give discretionary power in case any of the land is occupied that the reservation may be declared. As I understand it, under existing laws they may declare this reservation, but not if it is occupied land. By retaining this provision in the bill the reservation may be declared under this law if existing laws prove inadequate to accomplish such purpose.

I rely mostly on the information that I get from our Representative of this section of the State in the House. He resides in that portion of the State and informs me a great many of these Indians are engaged in agricultural pursuits and that this would be a beneficial measure to them. All I ask here is to have the clause restored to the condition it was when it came from the House with the amendment that I propose leaving it discretionary with the department to set aside this reservation or not.

Mr. SARGENT. I consider the expenditure entirely unnecessary, and furthermore I have letters from people in the portion of the State where it is proposed to put this reservation, who say that it is a mere speculation. The name of the valley which is mentioned in connection with it, "Quartz Valley," implies mining. My colleague himself says it is necessary to buy out settlers. I do not believe we ought to go blindly into such a matter. If the Department intelligently will name to us the place they want to set aside as a reservation and the amount it will cost to buy people out, then we can legislate on it; but I do not wish to involve the Government in an expense of one hundred or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars for a new reservation when we have three or four almost unoccupied now and where we keep up a host of employés.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House resolution of December 18, 1873, requiring the Congressional Printer to furnish to each member of the Senate and to each member and Delegate of the House of Representatives twenty-four copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, after full and free conference thereon, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments to said resolution, and agree to the same.

H. B. ANTHONY,
ELI SAULSBURY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
BENJ. F. BUTLER,
R. M. SPEER,
W. G. DONNAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Some Senators may be interested in knowing that that gives to each Senator forty copies of the RECORD.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 600) to amend the several acts in relation to the northern judicial district of the State of Mississippi, and to provide for the times and places of holding the district courts of the United States therein in future;

A bill (H. R. No. 2104) to confirm an agreement made with the Shoshone Indians (eastern band) for the purchase of the south part of their reservation in Wyoming Territory; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3572) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 3407) to change the name of the schooner Jacob Faithful to Eyvor;

A bill (H. R. No. 3022) granting a pension to Sarah A. Timmons;

A bill (H. R. No. 2216) granting a pension to Cornelia A. Washburn;

A bill (H. R. No. 2800) for the relief of Benjamin Crawford;

A bill (H. R. No. 1791) granting a pension to Augustus L. Yaeger;

A bill (H. R. No. 2209) granting a pension to Louisa H. Canby, widow of the late General E. R. S. Canby; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1145) granting a pension to Martin Lafflin.

THE BANKRUPT ACT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 792) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereto.

On motion by Mr. EDMUNDS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WRIGHT, and Mr. THURMAN the conferees.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the chief clerk of the War Department, communicating, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of May 19, 1874, information in relation to the Presidio reservation at San Francisco; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to submit a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business when the business on the table is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate certain bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 3573) making additions to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862;"

A bill (H. R. No. 600) to amend the several acts in relation to the northern judicial district of the State of Mississippi, and to provide for the times and places of holding the district courts of the United States therein in future;

A bill (H. R. No. 3581) to protect persons of foreign birth against forcible constraint or involuntary servitude;

A bill (H. R. No. 2911) to adjust costs, fees, and allowances in Federal courts;

A bill (H. R. No. 1859) authorizing commissioners of the United States circuit courts to take depositions under commission; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1639) to provide for the holding of an additional term of the United States district court for the southern district of Mississippi.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. No. 3574) explanatory of the act of June 30, 1864;

A bill (H. R. No. 3582) to provide for stamping unstamped instruments, documents, or papers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3282) providing for the collection of moneys due the United States from the Pacific Railroad Companies; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3572) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

The bill (H. R. No. 3575) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in certain portions of the States of Minnesota and Iowa was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 2104) to confirm an agreement made with the Shoshone Indians (eastern band) for the purchase of the south part of their reservation, Wyoming Territory, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I am told there is a bill precisely like that on the Calendar recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that being so, I think there will be no objection to putting this House bill on its passage now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better not be passed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 2069) for the relief of the sureties of John L. Robinson, late United States marshal for the district of Indiana, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change of reference will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS subsequently said: I wish to suggest that House bill No. 2069, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, is respecting the discharge of a suit that is pending under the charge of the Attorney-General, it appears, and therefore I think it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, although I know nothing whatever of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, if not advised by the Senate, would have referred it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PRATT. I am not tenacious about the matter. My colleague in the House came to my desk this morning and told me of the passage of the bill in the House last evening and wished me to look after it, and it occurred to me that it would be natural enough to refer it to the Committee on Claims; but if the Senator from Vermont prefers that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, I have no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no preference except to observe the ordinary order of doing business. I see by reading the bill that it relates to a suit pending between the United States and the sureties of Mr. Robinson, and therefore I suppose it is properly within the cognizance of that committee that has a good many similar subjects under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 3359) fixing the time for the election of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania to the Forty-fourth Congress was read twice by its title, and referred, on motion of Mr. SCOTT, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHEAP TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senate now to take up the resolution offered by myself on the 13th of May, 1874, with reference to the subject of transportation.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Whereas cheap and ample means for the interchange of commodities between the different sections of our country constitute essential conditions of the national advancement and prosperity; and whereas the Select Committee on Transportation, after full investigation of the subject, report that in their judgment cheap transportation can only be obtained through competition under governmental control, and operating through cheaper means of transport than are now provided; that such cheaper means of transport can only be provided by the construction of double-track freight railways or by the improvement and creation of water-routes; and that after a most careful consideration of the merits of various proposed improvements, taking into account the cost, practicability, and probable advantages of each, the committee have come to the unanimous conclusion that the following are the most feasible and advantageous channels of commerce to be created or improved by the national Government, in case Congress shall act upon this subject, namely:

First, the Mississippi River;

Second, a continuous water line of adequate capacity from the Mississippi River to the city of New York, via the northern lakes;

Third, a route adequate to the wants of commerce through the central tier of States from the Mississippi River, via the Ohio and Kanawha Rivers, to a point in West Virginia, and thence by canal and slack-water, or by a freight railway, to tide-water;

Fourth, a route from the Mississippi River, via the Ohio and Tennessee Rivers, to a point in Alabama or Tennessee, and thence by canal and slack-water, or by a freight railway, to the ocean;

And whereas the said committee express the opinion that among other benefits and advantages the completion of the system of improvements suggested by them will effect a permanent reduction of 50 per cent. in the cost of transporting fourth-class freights from the Valley of the Mississippi River to the sea-board, and a similar reduction in return freights, thereby insuring remunerative prices to the farmer of the West, cheaper food to the manufacturer and laborer at the East and the cotton-planter of the South, the enhancement by many hundreds of millions in the value of western and southern lands, and a large increase in the exportations of cotton and cereal products; and whereas the report of said select committee recommends that careful surveys and estimates be made upon such portions of said routes as may be necessary to determine accurately the cost of each, and to enable Congress at its next session to enter upon the said system of improvements if upon the completion of such surveys and estimates the same shall be deemed practicable and expedient: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and hereby are, instructed to report amendments to the pending river and harbor bill making appropriations for completing the surveys and estimates for each of the improvements recommended by said select committee upon the four routes indicated in said report.

Mr. RAMSEY. That resolution being before the Senate, I desire to give notice that as soon as it is disposed of I shall call up the postal-telegraph bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I rose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is already pending, it having been submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CONKLING. Then let us have a vote upon it.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. CLAYTON. I desire to submit a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the report.

The report was received and read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution of the House of Representatives for the suspension of the joint rule of the two Houses No. 6 so far as it relates to the bills of the House No. 1215, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873; No. 2879, revising and embodying all the laws authorizing post-roads and in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; and No. 3349, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia in force on the 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1873, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

Strike out of the resolution as passed by the House of Representatives the words "as engrossed in the House of Representatives and passed in the Senate," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "printed upon paper, and duly examined and certified by the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills provided by the joint rules."

POWELL CLAYTON,
H. B. ANTHONY,
T. F. BAYARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. P. POLAND,
E. R. HOAR,
R. M. KNAPP,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The report was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I renew the motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-seven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at five o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 2, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 196) granting a pension to Peter J. Cratzer;

An act (H. R. No. 240) granting a pension to John C. Farnam;

An act (H. R. No. 551) granting a pension to Alfred Bolder;

An act (H. R. No. 1228) granting a pension to Mary Storrs;

An act (H. R. No. 1335) granting a pension to Guadaloupe Torres;

An act (H. R. No. 1394) in relation to the centennial exhibition;

An act (H. R. No. 1414) granting a pension to Susan Bennett;

An act (H. R. No. 1439) granting a pension to John Folger;

An act (H. R. No. 1582) for the relief of C. C. Spaids;

An act (H. R. No. 1719) granting a pension to Ezra H. Foster;

An act (H. R. No. 1770) for the relief of Jonathan L. Mann, late a chaplain in the volunteer service of the Army;

An act (H. R. No. 1832) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hackleman;

An act (H. R. No. 1843) granting a pension to Lucinda Jones, widow of Thompson M. Jones, late a private of Company G, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 1866) granting a pension to Dennis McCarthy, a soldier of the Mexican war;

An act (H. R. No. 1907) granting a pension to Henry B. Havens, late a private of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 1934) for the relief of Pat. O. Hawes;

An act (H. R. No. 1949) granting a pension to Ann M. Brackett;

An act (H. R. No. 2081) to facilitate the exportation of distilled spirits, and amendatory of the acts in relation thereto;

An act (H. R. No. 2090) for the relief of Jacob Harding;

An act (H. R. No. 2116) for the relief of Magdalena Docks;

An act (H. R. No. 2214) granting a pension to Ann Humphreys, of Philadelphia;

An act (H. R. No. 2217) granting a pension to Henry Bruckner, late a private of Company F, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2220) granting a pension to Andrew J. Baldwin;

An act (H. R. No. 2353) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Cummings;

An act (H. R. No. 2356) granting a pension to Edward Jardine, late colonel and brevet brigadier-general United States volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2452) to equalize pensions in certain cases;

An act (H. R. No. 2538) to legalize and establish a ponton railway-bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa;

An act (H. R. No. 2669) granting a pension to Deborah A. Swan;

An act (H. R. No. 2672) granting a pension to Mary A. S. Loomis;

An act (H. R. No. 2676) granting a pension to Thomas McKinster;

An act (H. R. No. 2678) granting a pension to Charles Herbert;

An act (H. R. No. 2692) to change the name of the schooner-yacht Quarantine to Welcome;

An act (H. R. No. 2790) granting a pension to Nancy Abbott;

An act (H. R. No. 2792) granting a pension to Llewellyn Bell;

An act (H. R. No. 2899) granting a pension to Harriette A. Woodruff;

An act (H. R. No. 2925) granting a pension to Dorothea Irons, mother of Lieutenant Joseph W. Irons; and

An act (H. R. No. 3169) changing the time of holding circuit and district courts in Vermont.

FOURTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask consent of the House that House bill No. 1196 to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States in the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes, be recalled from the Senate. I do this at the request of quite a number of members from that judicial circuit.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

LANDS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. CLYMER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3584) to grant title to certain lands in the Territory of Arizona; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. COTTON. I ask consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia Senate bill No 571 to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch and change the location of its track within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

No objection was made, and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

JAMES W. CROWLEY.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3585) granting a pension to James W. Crowley, late surgeon of the Thirteenth Regiment of Missouri Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE H. PLANT.

Mr. RUSK, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Invalid Pensions House bill No. 3321 for the relief of George H. Plant, surety for Robert Clarke, formerly pension agent for the District of Columbia, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its disagreement to the concurrent resolution of the House proposing to suspend joint rule No. 6 so far as related to the enrollment of certain bills named therein, had agreed to the conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. ANTHONY, and Mr. BAYARD.

COURTS IN UTAH.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, which was authorized to report it at any time, reported back, with amendments, House bill No. 3097 in relation to courts and judicial officers in the Territory of Utah.

The bill, as proposed to be amended, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the United States marshal of the Territory of Utah, in person or by deputy, to attend all sessions of the supreme and district courts in said Territory, and to serve and execute all process and writs issued out of, and all orders, judgments, and decrees made by said courts, or by any judge thereof, unless said court or judge shall otherwise order in any particular case. All process, writs, or other papers left with said marshal, or either of his deputies, shall be served without delay, and in the order in which they are received, upon payment or tender of his legal fees therefor; and it shall be unlawful for said marshal to demand or receive mileage for any greater distance than the actual distance by the usual routes from the place of service or execution of process, writ, or other paper, to the place of return of the same, except that when it shall be necessary to convey any person arrested by legal authority out of the county in which he is arrested, said marshal shall be entitled to mileage for the whole distance necessarily traveled in delivering the person so arrested before the court or officer ordering such arrest. Said marshal is hereby authorized to appoint as many deputies as may be necessary, each of whom shall have authority, in the name of said marshal, to perform any act with like effect and in like manner as said marshal; and the marshal shall be liable for all official acts of such deputies as if done by himself. Such appointment shall not be complete until he shall give bond to said marshal, with sureties, to be by him approved, in the penal sum of $10,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties; and he shall also take and subscribe the same oath prescribed by law to be taken by said marshal; and said appointment, bond, and oath shall be filed and remain in the office of the clerk of the supreme court of said Territory. In actions brought against said marshal for the misfeasance or non-feasance of any deputy, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff, at his option, to join the said deputy and the sureties on his bond with said marshal and his sureties. Any processes, either civil or criminal, returnable to the supreme or district courts may be served in any county by the sheriff thereof or his legal deputy, and they may also serve any other processes which may be authorized by act of the territorial Legislature.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the United States attorney in said Territory, in person or by an assistant, to attend all the courts of record having jurisdiction of offenses as well under the laws of said Territory as of the United States, and perform the duties of prosecuting officer in all criminal cases arising in said courts; and he is hereby authorized to appoint as many assistants as may be necessary, each of whom shall subscribe the same oath as is prescribed by law for said United States attorney; and the said appointment and oath shall be filed and remain in the office of the clerk of the supreme court of said Territory. The United States attorney shall be entitled to the same fees for services rendered by said assistants as he would be entitled to for the same services if rendered by himself. The territorial Legislature may provide for the election of a prosecuting attorney in any county; and such attorney, if authorized so to do by such Legislature, may commence prosecutions for offenses under the laws of the Territory within such county, and if such prosecution is carried to the district court by recognizance or appeal, or otherwise, may aid in conducting the prosecution in such court. And the costs and expenses of all prosecutions for offenses against any law of the territorial Legislature shall be paid out of the treasury of the Territory.

SEC. 3. That there shall be held in each year two terms of the supreme court of said Territory, and four terms of each district court, at such times as the governor of the Territory may by proclamation fix. The district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction in all suits or proceedings in chancery, and in all actions at law in which the sum or value of the thing in controversy shall be $300 or upward, and in all controversies where the title, possession, or boundaries of land, or mines or mining claims shall be in dispute, whatever their value, except in actions for forcible entry or forcible or unlawful detainer; and they shall have jurisdiction in suits for divorce. When a bill is filed by a woman to declare a marriage or pretended marriage void, on account of a previous subsisting marriage of the defendant to another woman, the court or judge thereof may grant such reasonable sum for alimony and counsel fees as the circumstances of the case will justify; and may likewise, by final decree, make such allowance for the maintenance of the complainant and her children by the defendant as may be just and reasonable. And whenever, in any proceeding for divorce, or in any civil cause, or in any criminal prosecution, it is necessary to prove the existence of the marriage relation between two persons, it shall not be necessary to prove the same by the production of any record or certificate of the marriage, but evidence of cohabitation between the parties as husband and wife, and the acts, conduct, declarations, and admissions of the parties shall be admissible, and the marriage may be established like any question of fact. Probate courts, in their respective counties, shall have jurisdiction in the settlement of the estates of decedents, and in matters of guardianship and other like matters; but otherwise they shall have no civil, chancery, or criminal jurisdiction whatever; they shall have jurisdiction of suits of divorce for statutory causes concurrently with the district courts; but any defendant, in a suit for divorce commenced in a probate court shall be entitled, after appearance and before plea or answer, to have said suit removed to the district court having jurisdiction, when said suit shall proceed in like manner as if originally commenced in said district court. All judgments and decrees heretofore rendered by the probate courts which have been executed, and the time to appeal from which has by the existing laws of said Territory expired, are hereby validated and confirmed. The jurisdiction heretofore conferred upon justices of the peace by the organic act of said Territory is extended to all cases where the debt or sum claimed shall be less than $300. From all final judgments of justices of the peace an appeal shall be allowed to the district courts of their respective districts, in the same manner as is now provided by the laws of said Territory for appeals to the probate courts; and from the judgments of the probate courts an appeal shall lie to the district court of the district embracing the county in which such probate court is held in such cases and in such manner as the supreme court of said Territory may, by general rules framed for that purpose, specify and designate, and such appeal shall vacate the judgment appealed from, and the case shall be tried de novo in the appellate court. Appeals may be taken from both justices' and probate courts to the district court of their respective districts in cases where judgments have been heretofore rendered and remain unexecuted; but this provision shall not enlarge the time for taking an appeal beyond the periods now allowed by the existing laws of said Territory for taking appeals. Whenever the condition of the business in the district court of any district is such that the judge of the district is unable to do the same, he may request the judge of either of the other districts to assist him, and, upon such request made, the judge so requested may hold the whole or part of any term, or any branch thereof, and his acts as such judge shall be of equal force as if he were duly assigned to hold the courts in such district.

SEC. 4. That within sixty days after the passage of this act, and in the month of January annually thereafter, the clerk of the district court in each judicial district, and the judge of probate of the county in which the district court is next to be held, shall prepare a jury-list from which grand and petit jurors shall be drawn, to serve in the district courts of such district, until a new list shall be made as herein provided. Said clerk and probate judge shall alternately select the name of a male citizen of the United States who has resided in the district for the period of six months next preceding, and who can read and write in the English language; and, as selected, the name and residence of each shall be entered upon the list, until the same shall contain two hundred names, when the same shall be duly certified by such clerk and probate judge; and the same shall be filed in the office of the clerk of such district court, and a duplicate copy shall be made and certified by such officers, and filed in the office of said probate judge. Whenever a grand or petit jury is to be drawn to serve at any term of a district court, the judge of such district shall give public notice of the time and place of the drawing of such jury, which shall be at least twelve days before the commencement of such term; and on the day and at the place thus fixed, the judge of such district shall hold an open session of his court, and shall preside at the drawing of such jury; and the clerk of such court shall write the name of each person on the jury-lists returned and filed in his office upon a separate slip of paper, as nearly as practicable of the same size and form, and all such slips shall, by the clerk in open court, be placed in a covered box, and thoroughly mixed and mingled; and thereupon the United States marshal, or his deputy, shall proceed to fairly draw by lot from said box such number of names as may have previously been directed by said judge; and if both a grand and a petit jury are to be drawn, the grand jury shall be drawn first; and when the drawing shall have been concluded, the clerk of the district court shall issue a venire to the marshal or his deputy, directing him to summon the persons so drawn, and the same shall be duly served on each of the persons so drawn at least seven days before the commencement of the term at which they are to serve; and the jurors so drawn and summoned shall constitute the regular grand and petit juries for the term for all cases. And the names thus drawn from the box by the clerk shall not be returned to or again placed in said box until a new jury-list shall be made. If during any term of the district court any additional grand or petit jurors shall be necessary, the same shall be drawn from said box by the United States marshal in open court; but if the attendance of those drawn cannot be obtained in a reasonable time, other names may be drawn in the same manner. Each party, whether in civil or criminal cases, shall be allowed three peremptory challenges; and in the trial of any prosecution for adultery, bigamy, or polygamy, it shall be a good cause of principal challenge to any juror that he practices polygamy, or that he believes in the rightfulness of the same. In criminal cases, the court, and not the jury, shall pronounce the punishment under the limitation prescribed by law. The grand jury must inquire into the case of every person imprisoned within the district on a criminal charge and not indicted; into the condition and management of the public prisons within the district; and into the willful and corrupt misconduct in office of public officers of every description within the district; and they are also entitled to free access, at all reasonable times, to the public prisons, and to the examination, without charge, of all public records within the district.

SEC. 5. That there shall be appointed by the governor of said Territory one or more notaries public for each organized county, whose term of office shall be two years, and until their successors shall be appointed and qualified. The act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah entitled "An act concerning notaries public," approved January 17, 1866, is hereby approved, except the first section thereof, which is hereby disapproved: Provided, That wherever in said act the words "probate judge" or "clerk of the probate court" are used, the words "secretary of the Territory" shall be substituted.

SEC. 6. That the supreme court of said Territory is hereby authorized to appoint commissioners of said court, who shall have and exercise all the duties of commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States, and to take acknowledgments of bail, &c.; and, in addition, they shall have the same authority as examining and committing magistrates in all cases arising under the laws of said Territory as is now possessed by justices of the peace in said Territory.

SEC. 7. That the common law of England, as the same is defined and modified by the courts of last resort in those States of the United States where the common law prevails, shall be the rule of decision in all the courts of said Territory so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the existing statutes of said Territory.

SEC. 8. That the act of the territorial Legislature of the Territory of Utah entitled "An act in relation to marshals and attorneys," approved March 3, 1852, and all laws of said Territory inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby disapproved. The act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, is extended over and shall apply to the fees of like officers in said Territory of Utah.

Mr. CESSNA. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to offer a substitute for the fourth section of this bill proposed by the committee.

Mr. POLAND. It was agreed to in the Committee on the Judiciary that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CESSNA] should have the right to offer the amendment he has indicated. I yield to him for that purpose.

The proposed substitute for the fourth section was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That whenever a judge of any district court of said Territory shall determine that a grand or petit jury will be needed at a term of such court, the said judge, the clerk of such court, and the United States marshal shall, without regard to the religious, political, or social opinions of such citizens, make a list in writing of two hundred male citizens of the United States, above the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been residents in such district for a period of six months next previously, and shall affix thereto their certificate to the effect that the same is the list from which the grand and petit jurors are to be drawn for the terms of such court to be holden within the year next following, and shall cause the same to be filed in the office of the clerk of said court; and whenever the judge shall order the clerk to issue a venire, the clerk, in the presence of the said judge and marshal, or his deputy, shall write the names contained in the said list each on a separate slip of paper, all the slips being of the same size and kind, and shall fold them uniformly so that the name written thereon shall be concealed, shall then place them in a covered box and thoroughly mix and mingle them, and shall then not select, but shall draw, as by lot, therefrom the requisite number of names. If a grand jury be required, it shall be drawn first, and consist of the number before provided. The number of petit jurors thus drawn shall be such as, in the opinion of such judge, is needful to discharge the entire jury duty for such term, so that there shall always be three more jurors than the number required for each separate panel; and the panel in each trial shall be twelve men. The clerk shall make a list in writing of the names of the persons so drawn, and the clerk and the marshal shall affix thereto their certificates of the time and place of such drawing, and file the same in the office of said clerk, who shall forthwith issue a venire to the said marshal, commanding him to summon the persons so drawn to attend and serve as such jurors at the time and place previously designated by the said judge, and such jurors shall constitute the regular jurors for such term of the court for all cases, whether arising under the laws of the United States or under the laws of said Territory. If at any time a talesman or talesmen shall be required, his or their names shall be drawn from the said box by the clerk in open court, and if the attendance of such juror or jurors cannot be procured in a reasonable time other names shall be drawn, and so from time to time until the jury is obtained. No challenge shall be allowed on the ground that a juror had been summoned or had served at a previous term of court. Each party, whether in civil or criminal cases, shall be allowed three peremptory challenges; and in the trial of any prosecution for adultery, bigamy, or polygamy, it shall be a good cause of principal challenge to any juror that he practices polygamy, or that he believes in the rightfulness of the same. In criminal cases, the court, and not the jury, shall pronounce the punishment under the limitation prescribed by law. The grand jury must inquire into the case of every person imprisoned within the district on a criminal charge and not indicted; into the condition and management of the public prisons within the district; and into the willful and corrupt misconduct of officers of every description within the district; and they are also entitled to free access, at all reasonable times, to the public prisons, and to the examination, without charge, of all public records within the district.

Mr. POLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BARBER] to offer an amendment.

Mr. BARBER. I move to amend by adding to the last section these words:

But the district attorney shall not by fees and salary together receive more than $3,500 per year; and all fees or moneys received by him above said amount shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. POLAND. I move to recommit the bill and amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I shall take but a very few moments in explaining this bill. I should be very glad to give more time and have a more extended discussion of it than the condition of business in the House will at this time allow.

The bill that has been presented by the Judiciary Committee is mainly remarkable for its moderation when compared with previous bills that have been before the House upon this vexed subject of the Territory of Utah. Every gentleman in the House knows more or less of the history of this Territory, of its very peculiar origin and settlement and the difficulties that have attended the execution of the law there. While that Territory was aloof from all the rest of the United States, while it was almost inaccessible, the officers of the United States who were sent there were at times driven away; they were never allowed to exercise any authority as officers of the United States over that Territory. I have no time to go into the history of those matters. Gentlemen have doubtless given them attention; and if any gentleman desires particular information on that subject, I would refer him to the debates that took place in this House and the Senate upon this subject four years ago, and also to documentary evidence connected with the contest for the seat as Delegate of that Territory four or five years ago, in which all the facts and the whole history of this subject are given.

Since the building of the Pacific Railroad and since the discovery of mines in Utah which have induced an influx of population termed there "Gentiles," the state of things in that Territory has been somewhat different from what it was at an earlier period. The ruling powers in Utah have not ventured within a few years to drive out the United States officers or to molest them personally; but having the whole power of the local Legislature, they have contrived effectually to checkmate the authority of the United States officers. We send out a district attorney of the United States; the territorial Legislature of Utah, filled entirely by Mormons controlled entirely by Brigham Young and the "twelve apostles," elects a territorial attorney general and invests him with full power and authority. We send out a United States marshal; this territorial Legislature elects a territorial marshal investing him with full power; and although two or three years ago the supreme court of that Territory decided that this marshal was illegally appointed and that the office was vacant, yet in spite of the supreme court and its decision, that territorial marshal continues to hold the office until this day and to execute his authority.

Mr. CROUNSE. Will the gentleman allow me a single remark?

Mr. POLAND. Not a word. We send out United States judges to hold court in that Territory; the territorial Legislature elects probate judges in the various counties and invests them with full power and authority in all judicial matters—in all cases civil and criminal, law and equity. Men are tried for murder in the probate court. So that by this duplication of all the authorities that we send out into that Territory, the power of the United States is effectually checkmated and all its officials are the merest figure-heads

Now, Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to stop this proceeding, and to put the legal machinery in motion in that Territory. That is the whole scope and purpose of the bill; and as I have but a few moments, I will call attention briefly to its provisions. It provides in the first section for the exercise of the duties and powers of the United States marshal; and for the purpose of enabling him to execute the duties of his office it provides that he may appoint deputies who are to give bonds, &c. To that section there is a written amendment which is now a part of the bill, in which, in order that it may not be said on the part of the Mormon population that they have not officers of their own persuasion to serve process if they please, we have provided that the sheriffs of the several counties may serve any process returnable to the district or any other court within their respective counties.

The second section of the bill provides for the performance of duty by the United States district attorney, who is authorized to appoint assistants for that purpose; but to this also we have added, as in the first section, a provision that the territorial Legislature may provide for the appointment of a prosecuting attorney in every county who may prosecute for all offenses under the laws of the Territory; and if any of those cases go by appeal, or otherwise, into the district court, this local attorney may be associated in the prosecution of those cases in that court.

The third section relates to the respective jurisdictions of the courts and giving jurisdiction to the district courts which are held by the judges appointed by the President, and taking away the jurisdiction of the probate courts; that is, confining the jurisdiction of these probate courts to the proper business of the settlement of estates.

And I think the gentleman who sits here as Delegate of that Territory knows as well as I know the Supreme Court have agreed upon a decision, and it was only deferred in consequence of the pendency of this bill, wherein they have decided the territorial Legislature had no authority to confer this kind of jurisdiction which these probate courts have heretofore exercised; that the conferring of general, legal, civil, and criminal jurisdiction upon the courts was a usurpation and their acts are void. We provide in this bill for taking away that jurisdiction from these probate courts, but at the same time we have taken care to validate the proceedings which have become executed.

The fourth section, Mr. Speaker, provides for the selection of jurors, and upon this we have had great difficulty. The bill, as originally reported from the committee, contains the provision offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CESSNA] as a substitute for the present fourth section. We provided the district judge and clerk and marshal should select two hundred names from which the jurors were to be drawn. The committee were impressed with this idea that a jury should be drawn from the body of the people, and we were not satisfied with a provision which would put the whole power of drawing juries into the hands of persons who were not Mormons and who might be hostile to them. Therefore we have substituted the present provision of the fourth section that the clerk of the district court and the judge of probate of the county where the district court sits shall select a list of two hundred names, each selecting the names alternately, so the fair prospect would be that one-half of the two hundred names selected would be Mormons and the other half would not.

We have then provided that the drawing of the jurors shall be in open court; shall be public, so everybody may have an opportunity to see it is fairly done. The majority of the Judiciary Committee thought this provision was one nobody could complain of; one which would be entirely fair to all parties.

But, in addition to that, we have a provision that in any prosecution under the law of Congress against polygamy, the fact of a person's practicing polygamy or believing in the rightfulness of it should be good cause of challenge to his sitting on a jury to try that sort of offense.

Mr. DEWITT. Grand as well as petit juries?

Mr. POLAND. Yes.

The fifth section of the bill provides for the appointment of notaries public by the Government. Notaries public are now elected by the Mormon Legislature.

The sixth section of the bill provides for the appointment of commissioners by the court with the same powers of commissioners appointed by the circuit court of the United States.

The seventh section provides the common law of England as defined by the courts of last resort in those parts of the United States where the common law prevails shall be the rule in that Territory. The necessity for that, Mr. Speaker, grows out of the fact that this Territory was acquired from Mexico, and therefore it may be a very grave question, though comparatively an unsettled Territory when we acquired it, whether the common law prevails unless adopted by special act of Congress.

The eighth and last section of the bill repeals those acts of the territorial Legislature providing for the appointment of a territorial marshal and a territorial attorney-general, and also extends the act of Congress in relation to fees of United States officers over the Territories. This I find was an unnecessary provision, for it is the law already.

Mr. MCKEE. Does it repeal the law by which the Mormon probate judges are elected by the territorial Legislature?

Mr. POLAND. No, sir; it allows them to elect probate judges, but confines the authority and duty of probate judges to the settlement of estates. It takes away from the probate judges the trying of all cases, criminal and civil.

Mr. MCKEE. But it still leaves them the power to select jurors, and every one of these probate judges is a Mormon bishop.

Mr. POLAND. That is, it leaves them conjointly, the clerk of the district court and the judge of probate, to select a jury alternately.

Mr. MCKEE. Then these Mormon bishops will still have the power to select jurors.

Mr. POLAND. The bill provides, as the gentleman would know if he had listened to me, that in prosecutions for bigamy it will be good cause of challenge that the party practices or believes in polygamy.

Mr. MCKEE. None the less polygamous bishops will have the selection of the jury.

Mr. POLAND. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said in the outset, at this period of the session but little time can be devoted to this bill. I now propose, having used fifteen minutes, to call the previous question; and if it shall be seconded I will then yield of the remaining hour three-quarters of it to the Delegate from Utah to use himself or to give to others, as he pleases.

Mr. CROUNSE. I hope the previous question will not be sustained. This bill is too important to be forced through under the previous question. It ought to be amended before it passes, if it passes at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont withdraws the motion to recommit, and asks the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCKEE. Will not the gentleman from Vermont permit me to move as a substitute for the pending bill one of his own bills?

Mr. POLAND. No, sir.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I appeal to the gentleman from Vermont not to insist on the previous question. The gentleman from Utah is here, and has a right to be heard upon a measure affecting his own people, as this does.

Mr. POLAND. I will give the gentleman from Utah three-quarters of the remaining hour. I would be glad to allow more time for discussion on this bill, but at this stage of the session it is impossible.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Three-quarters of an hour would scarcely give the gentleman from Utah time to review the provisions of this bill. It is one that vitally affects the interests of his people, and I think he ought not to be cut off from the opportunity of debate.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 63, noes 58; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. POLAND and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 62.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont now has one hour to close debate.

Mr. POLAND. I yield three-quarters of the remaining hour to the Delegate from Utah, either to use himself or to yield to others.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska, [Mr. CROUNSE.]

BILLS IMPROPERLY PASSED.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Journal clerk that House bill No. 1273 and House bill No. 1995, the first being an act to regulate proceedings in mandamus and the second an act to amend the act approved June 18, 1838, entitled "An act to require the judge of the district courts of East and West Tennessee to hold a court at Jackson, in said State," which were passed last evening, were both passed some time since and are now pending in the Senate—the same bills, with precisely the same numbers. Under the circumstances the Chair requests that the passage of those bills last evening be stricken from the Journal.

Mr. POTTER. When were they passed before?

The SPEAKER. The act to regulate proceedings in mandamus was passed on the 19th of February, on the report of Mr. JEWETT, from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MCKEE. It was the same Judiciary Committee that reported and had passed those bills that reported this bill in relation to Utah.

Mr. DAWES. The matter should be referred to the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business.

The SPEAKER. That committee has been merged into the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. And those were the only two bills that the committee got through last night.

No objection being made, the Journal was ordered to be corrected by striking out the record of the passage of the two bills referred to.

COURTS IN UTAH.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill in relation to courts in Utah.

Mr. CROUNSE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Territories I have had some opportunity to consider the questions involved in this bill, and I did hope that the opportunity would present itself when I might present to the House some of the considerations which are here involved and which relate to the details of this bill. In the consideration of a question so important as this the House cannot afford to be swayed or governed by passion or prejudice. Standing up here in defense of what I believe to be a proper system of law for the government of this Territory, I wish to disclaim in advance any disposition to defend the system of polygamy. I am not here for that purpose, but I am here to join hands with all who wish to put down this system by proper and legitimate means.

Sir, we should not confound this question of polygamy with the question of framing a proper system of laws to govern the Territory of Utah. Our action upon this bill will become a precedent for the future. If to-day we can under the guise of an assault on Mormondom frame a system of laws which in the future may be evoked as a precedent in order to oppress people of other Territories, it would be indeed a dangerous step for us to take. I regret, sir, the sentiment that I see displayed around me. Within the hearing of my voice, when I was contending here that this bill should be submitted to proper consideration by the House and that the previous question should not be insisted on without full discussion of its several provisions, I heard gentlemen say that they did not care what was in the bill; that they were going for it anyhow. Sir, if we act in such a spirit as that, what hope is there for any people who are to be run down by the United States Government?

Upon this question in relation to the government of the Territory of Utah the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] seems to have identified himself with the subject from the very outset. The annals of Congress show that each session a "Poland bill" has been introduced. It is generally introduced on the first day of the session, and is referred to the Committee on the Territories and to the Committee on the Judiciary. It seems that this gentleman has taken, in familiar language, "the job" of fixing up the affairs of Utah. And when I respectfully asked the liberty to propound a question while the gentleman was making a statement here, he found it convenient to deny me the right of propounding interrogatories or correcting what I regard misstatements, when he would tolerate other gentlemen whom he knew to be in sympathy with the bill. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MCKEE] could get up and interrogate him at pleasure, and it was entirely convenient and pleasant for this to be done; but the gentleman knew from my connection with the bill that it would perhaps not be profitable to tolerate any questions on my part.

Mr. POLAND. I certainly intended no discourtesy to the gentleman. I had only fifteen minutes in which to explain the bill, and I had no time to yield for interrogatories. If the language I used to the gentleman appeared to be discourteous, I beg his pardon.

Mr. CROUNSE. I accept the apology, but the facts are there and the inference can be drawn. When I wanted to make an inquiry and to correct a misstatement, at that time the gentleman could not tolerate a question; no, sir; not a bit of it. But when others propounded inquiries, then there was opportunity, and a disposition to allow them to do so.

Now, in order to make this bill palatable to the House, if I may use the term, it must be prefaced with some imaginary grievances, or the statement of a condition of affairs which really does not exist. It becomes necessary to refer away back to the early history of this people, when they were isolated, away off, and when they had imposed and inflicted upon them United States officials who by their arrogance became intolerable. At such a time they may have rebelled, and such circumstance must be made a pretext for calling forth action on the part of Congress to-day. But I say look over the Territory of Utah to-day and see where is the rebellion which is talked of here, where is the defiance of law. Canvass and scan the organic act organizing the Territory and by which the people are allowed to make laws for themselves. Look over those laws and compare them with the laws of any other Territory of the United States, and then see where they fall short. Not one word is brought forward here, beyond general assertion that things are all wrong there, for the foundation of this action on the part of Congress.

The gentleman says that while the United States appoints its marshals, the Territory, in defiance of law, appoints its marshals. Why is this? The office of United States marshal is as distinct from the office of territorial marshal as is day from night. Their offices run in different directions. One is charged with the execution of the writs, processes, &c., emanating from the United States courts and in United States cases. I have the record of a case here where the judges who were sent out to Utah attempted to set aside the territorial marshal. That Territory saw fit under its laws to appoint a marshal; for what? For the disposition of matters arising under their laws, and in no way in conflict with the laws of the United States.

Now, that they have a right to do. If that is denied them, then one of the first principles of a republican system of government is gone and wiped out. When a people in a Territory cannot be accorded the right to enact their own laws, those that relate to themselves, as long as they do not conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and if they cannot select their own officers to execute those laws, then I say you are striking down the very first principles of American liberty. You are taxing men without representation, you are demanding obedience to laws which they have no voice in making, and you foist upon them officers to execute the laws under no responsibility to the people governed. It is a proposition unheard of in the history of American law-making or jurisprudence.

I say then that the charge brought here was that they elected a territorial marshal in defiance of the laws of the United States, which provided a United States marshal. Judge McKeon, of the supreme court of that Territory, took that position; a position never taken before in any other Territory of the United States. That case was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, and how was it terminated there? I have the record before me, but cannot take time to read it. Here is the information filed by the United States officer and the answer of the territorial marshal, where he distinctly says that he disclaims any right to interfere in the control of United States affairs; that he is elected under the organic act relating to the affairs of Utah, is elected by the Legislature of Utah, and in pursuance of that election he acted in the discharge of his duties as such in serving writs and processes which emanated from the court as far as they related to territorial matters; for instance, the crime of larceny, murder, or any offense which is made such by the laws of the Territory of Utah. In those cases, where the processes went forth through the territorial marshal, he executed the writs and processes, as he had a right to do, and as he should do, they involving no infraction of any law of the United States. But that, I say, is made an offense. When I asked from the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] the privilege of interrupting him that I might inquire whether or not the United States had not sustained that position, I was denied that courtesy. This bill must be pushed down our throats as though this House were a lot of willing subjects only too ready and anxious to go to any length that gentlemen may dictate. This measure is to be put through under the whip and spur of the previous question. But an hour—one poor hour—is given to the discussion of matters involving the rights of one hundred and thirty-five thousand people, whose only fault is that they entertain religious convictions differing from those entertained by gentlemen here. I tell you, sir, it will not do for this Congress to assume a mock regard for particular laws while unmindful of others. Let every man turn his sight inward; let him stand before the forum of his own conscience; let him ask himself whether he has any religious convictions at all. Men who have none at all are perhaps too apt to be intolerant toward those who have. I say that while I deplore the system prevailing in Utah, while I am not in sympathy with that form of religion, while I desire and hope that in the progress of civilization it will be wiped out, I hope the American Congress will not act hastily in this regard.

As I wish to be sparing of the time of the gentleman from Utah, [Mr. CANNON,] I can only say that I did hope to assail this bill in its details. There are several views I would like to submit in which I am satisfied this House would concur with me. I am satisfied that this House would not upon deliberation enact the seeming anomaly of having one set of people make laws while officers appointed by another and distinct authority are to execute those laws. Why, sir, by this mode of proceeding you strike down the very law-making power itself. If those people cannot have their own marshals and their own prosecuting attorneys to proceed against offenses arising under their own laws they will make no laws. They will wipe out their laws entirely if they cannot have a voice in executing them. Examine all the laws that have been passed since the organization of this Government, and where will you find that any like this has been enacted?

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman will allow me to suggest to him that the marshals selected by the local authorities of Utah sustain precisely the same relation to that Territory that our sheriffs bear to the respective States. There is no difference or distinction in that regard.

Mr. CROUNSE. Precisely. That is what I wish to have understood by the House; that we are asked to enact a law which is in defiance of all precedents in our legislation, and for no sufficient reason; because the system of polygamy, if it is to be assailed at all, is to be assailed under the laws of the United States. Congress should not, and I say cannot in consistency with the principles underlying our institutions, enact laws which will thrust upon that people a set of Government officials responsible to no one except the Government here at Washington.

I say that this people does not deserve such treatment. Aside from the question of their religion they are entitled to the same rights, immunities, and privileges which would be claimed in behalf of any other people. They have shown themselves law-abiding and industrious. You may look over all the States and Territories of this Union, and nowhere will you find the rate of taxation lighter than in that Territory. In this respect the people of that Territory have made a record which ought to be the envy of the General Government and of every State government. I say that people who have behaved in this manner should not bring down upon their heads the enactment of laws which must simply operate to enrich United States officials and turn the people over bound hand and foot to the tender mercies of officers whom they have no voice in choosing.

While I would not antagonize the bill in gross, I hope that as presented here and sought to be forced through it will be voted down, and that the opportunity may be given to correct and modify it in those essential particulars which I know this House upon calm consideration would not approve. As a Congress we cannot afford to act upon the principle which I intimated at the outset appeared to be influencing many members here. I fear that principle operates too largely. I have never known a case in which the law for the government of a great people who are asking to become a State of this Union has been passed in such haste, and with so little apparent necessity.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER.]

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, any bill that provides for the selection of jurors is a bill that deserves the attention of the House, not only as regards the citizens particularly to be affected by it, but because of the precedent it may establish for other sections of the country and other times. In regard of this bill I think the House ought to understand the legislation of Utah out of which the demand for this bill has grown.

In 1859 the territorial Legislature of Utah passed a law, which was approved by Congress, providing for the selection of jurors by the local authorities; that is to say, a full list of the tax-payers and citizens of full age was to be made out in each county, from which the county court was to select the panel of jurors. Under this territorial law juries were drawn in that Territory without difficulty for something more than ten years. But the judges of the territorial court—that is those appointed by the President, who came into office after that time—regarded the existing law as invalid, and held the panels of jurors thus drawn were improperly drawn. There has never yet been such a controlling decision by the Supreme Court of the United States as constrained the action of those judges: and they have therefore, most if not all of them, continued to hold the panels of jurors drawn under the existing laws were unlawfully drawn. I contend that there were therefore no lawful juries sitting in the Territory. Then it followed naturally that delegations from both sides came to Congress from Utah and said, "Pass a law in regard to the selection of juries." The non-Mormons complained that the difficulty with the existing law was that it enabled the Mormon officials to pack the juries with Mormons, and that they ought not to be compelled to try their cases with this peculiar people, with juries made up entirely of those of their own faith. On the other hand the Mormons said, "We have no litigation among ourselves, and the records of the courts will show that non-Mormons have been given the fullest opportunity to recover against us; and if Congress shall pass such a law as the non-Mormons recommend, you will enable the men who have come into the Territory with the railroads recently constructed to get control of the courts and the juries, and to imprison and convict all of us or drive us out of the Territory, so that they can thus get our lands for nothing." This indicates briefly the two sides of the question as urged before our committee.

The bill as first brought before the Judiciary Committee contained the clause my colleague on the committee from Pennsylvania [Mr. CESSNA] has suggested as an amendment to its present form. That clause provided the United States judge should himself select the jury. To that I was and am utterly opposed. It did seem to me it would be better to drive this Mormon people out of the Territory without color of law at the point of the bayonet than to establish a precedent of this character, by which the Federal official would be able of his own will to pack a jury against that or any other people; for that is exactly what the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if it becomes a law, will lead to. In the state of feeling that has existed in that Territory between the mass of the people and the Federal judges, to give those judges or the clerks or marshals of their courts the right of selecting jurors could not in that community be followed by any other result than the grossest injustice under the form of law. The committee took the same view I had of this provision. As we first agreed upon the bill, it provided that a list should be made out of all the citizens in the Territory otherwise eligible who could read and write, and that their names should be put into a box, and the jury drawn from that by lot. That provision was subsequently changed to the present provision, by which it is required the probate or local judge shall select one-half and the clerk of the Federal court shall select the other half of the jurors.

Mr. MCKEE. How are they selected now in other States and Territories?

Mr. POTTER. In most of the States and Territories by the local officers, I believe; by the sheriffs of the counties in very many of the States, and by the territorial marshals, I believe, in all the Territories except Utah.

Mr. MCKEE. In most of the States they are selected by the marshal. Do you call that packing a jury?

Mr. POTTER. You are speaking of the juries of the Federal courts of the States, where there is no such division among the people. In the South it may be the marshal can now pack juries.

The present bill provides, Mr. Speaker, that the juries shall be chosen one-half by the judge of probate, that is to say by the county judge or local authorities, and the other half by the Federal authority. This perhaps is as fair under the circumstances as it is practicable to make a jury for Utah.

My difficulty with the existing bill is this: on page 10 the House will see that it is provided that in all prosecutions for adultery, bigamy, or polygamy no person shall be entitled to serve on the jury who has a belief in polygamy. As three-fourths of the men who reside in the Territory now do believe in polygamy and practice it, the result will be they will all be absolutely excluded from the juries in such cases, and the jury in all prosecutions for bigamy or polygamy will therefore necessarily be made up of persons who are non-Mormons. I do not see why under such a provision every Mormon cannot be convicted of polygamy, for undoubtedly they are guilty under the Federal statute passed years ago. I do not see, I say, why they all may not be, the whole Mormon people, convicted and locked up under this provision and the Territory be thus left bare to the non-Mormons to take possession of and keep. If I am told that a whole community cannot be punished for violating a law, then the answer indicates the needlessness of passing laws which cannot be enforced. Many years ago we passed a law against polygamy which we never have enforced. Here now is another law which, if it can be enforced, will have the effect of driving these people out of the Territory, leaving the lands to those there who are not Mormons, and which we propose to enforce by giving to the non-Mormons the control of the juries that may sit upon that question. If polygamy could be broken up by mere law it would have been done before this. At any rate I shrink from doing it by a method which is not calculated to insure that impartial trial by jury which the Constitution guarantees to every citizen.

I have felt, besides, sir, that it could not be long in any event before these people would have to move on; that the railways coming into the country would introduce into it not only new people but new ideas. In a far-off place like the Salt Lake settlement it was easy to carry out for a time the patriarchal system, and for men who had great families and many wives to provide for. But with the railroad came new ideas and new wants—the shop-keeper, the dressmaker, the milliner, and the modiste. Think, sir, of a man with twenty wives going out of a morning to buy back-hair and crinoline and silk dresses. Nothing could meet the cost of supporting their families in such style, and it therefore seems to me as if these changes will have a certain and growing effect in breaking up this system, so at variance with our race and time. Indeed it seems to me these influences will have more effect in destroying and rooting out polygamy than any legislation we can adopt providing for packed juries, which is in effect the proposition that the gentleman from Pennsylvania recommends as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a single question. I desire to know whether the Committee on the Judiciary, in reporting this seventh section of this bill, in which they say "that the common law of England, as the same is defined and modified by the courts of last resort in those States of the United States where the common law prevails, shall be the rule of decision in all the courts of said Territory," inadvertently left out the provision that where the decisions differed they should adopt the decision of Vermont?

Mr. POTTER. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, formerly the Attorney-General of the United States, and especially familiar with the laws and statutes of the United States, should address this question to the gentleman from Vermont reporting this bill, who can answer it better than I can. He must bear in mind, however, that this Territory was originally a part of Mexico, and that it has been claimed the common law did not apply to it.

I do not, Mr. Speaker, so much object to the other provisions of this bill; my main objection is to the amendment moved by the gentleman from Pensylvania, and to that provision in the bill as reported that in all prosecutions for polygamy no man shall be a juror who believes in or practices polygamy. I understand, however, that my friend from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] proposes to offer an amendment which will cure that evil, and I hope his amendment will be admitted to be voted on and will be adopted, and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be voted down.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. Mr. Speaker, the reasons which have been assigned by the gentleman who has introduced this bill for its passage are that in the Territory of Utah the people have chosen a territorial marshal, who, he says, has endeavored to wrest power from the United States marshal, and have also elected a territorial attorney who has endeavored to interfere with the duties of the United States district attorney, and also that they have conferred upon their probate courts concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts for the Territory.

If these be the reasons for this legislation, then the same reasons exist in favor of similar legislation for all the Territories of the United States. The Territory of Utah should not be made an exception in this respect. In every Territory, as at present organized, they have their local officers, their sheriffs, who are the ministerial officers of their courts and who execute processes; they have their county attorneys who act for the Territory and in execution of its laws.

They also have probate courts, and in some instances possessing quite an extensive jurisdiction; sufficiently extensive to be open to the same objection that is made to the jurisdiction of the court in the Territory of Utah. This is so in respect to the Territory of Colorado, and it has been the case with other Territories. Utah is not the only Territory which has amplified the jurisdiction of the probate courts.

One of my objections to the bill under consideration is that it is local in its application. If there be any reason for the enactment of a law like this, the same reason exists in regard to all the Territories as well as Utah.

It has been said that in the Territory of Utah United States judges have been driven away, have been compelled to flee. I challenge the gentleman who made that statement to adduce a single item of evidence to sustain the charge. In 1867 Judge Drummond, who had conducted himself most infamously in the Territory, left it and afterward circulated all manner of charges in the public prints against the people of Utah, among others accusing them, I believe, of using violence and driving him from the Territory. That charge was widely circulated, but upon an examination all his statements were disproved.

To return to the probate courts; was it wise and proper for the Legislative Assembly of Utah to confer upon the probate courts the jurisdiction complained of?

It will be remembered that what is now the State of Nevada once formed a part of the Territory of Utah. At the present time that Territory extends three hundred and sixty miles north and south and two hundred and sixty-four miles east and west. Its inhabitants are settled mostly in towns and villages. For this Territory and population Congress has provided three courts: first district court, held at Provo; second district court, held at Beaver; third district court, held at Salt Lake City. Of these courts the first two mentioned hold one term a year, and the last mentioned two terms a year. The time during which the first and second district courts have been in session, up to within the last three years, will not average two days in each year, and there has been a year or more at times when no district court has been held outside of Salt Lake. The district court in Salt Lake has been in session but a small portion of the time.

Some of the judges appointed in years past to the first and second districts never saw the places appointed for holding their courts. Recently the judges of these districts have held courts regularly in their districts, and the judge of the first district has a residence in his district, and probably the judge of the second in his also; but of this I am not certain. If he has, he is, I believe, the first judge who has resided there. The probate courts had therefore of necessity to be endowed with extensive jurisdiction or the people would have been compelled, to punish crime, to have had recourse to lynch law. But supposing these courts had been in regular session; Saint George, a city of two thousand inhabitants, possessing large agricultural and manufacturing interests, is situated in the southern portion of the Territory in the second judicial district, and one hundred and twenty miles from Beaver, where the court is held; the facilities for traveling would enable a citizen of Saint George to arrive at Beaver in about three days. Would it not, under these circumstances, be highly inconvenient for him to transact any business in the district court? A citizen of Boston can travel to Chicago quicker and cheaper and more comfortably than a citizen of Saint George can travel from his home to Beaver; yet the citizen of Boston would consider it something of a hardship should he be obliged to transact all his business at Chicago, and he would not be considered unreasonable should he ask for some local tribunal. Other towns in the Territory are similarly situated to that of Saint George, and, without local courts of some kind, they are wholly without protection by judicial authority in property or person. Under these circumstances, can it be said that the Legislature of Utah acted unwisely in conferring jurisdiction on the probate courts? Would they not have fallen far short of their duty had they neglected to throw around their infant settlements, so widely separated, such protection as the probate courts have afforded?

So far as the administration of justice in these courts is concerned, I have had forwarded to me from the Territory a statement of the cases which have been tried by the ordinary juries of the Territory in the probate court of Salt Lake County for several years. Out of a list of eighty-four civil cases, to which Mormons and non-Mormons were parties, fifty-nine were decided in favor of non-Mormons and dissenting Mormons, and twenty-five only decided in favor of Mormons, showing how fair the administration of justice has been in that Territory by juries and the probate courts. The parties to sixty-two cases were non-Mormons and dissenting Mormons; and yet it is urged as a complaint against these courts that the judges are Mormon bishops, &c.

Sir, there is probably no officer in Utah Territory, if he belongs to the Mormon people, who does not hold some position in the church. The mormon people do not believe in salaried preachers; but they believe it to be the privilege of every worthy man of their organization to be an elder, and, when called upon, to make himself useful in preaching. Doubtless many gentlemen about me who have visited Utah Territory will recollect, if they passed a Sabbath there, that elders were very frequently called from the body of the congregation to preach from the stand without any preparation whatever. Bishops, probate judges, men of different vocations in the community, are thus called upon to speak to the people. So that if you say that a man must not exercise political functions in Utah because he is an officer in the church you exclude from all offices in the Territory every respectable Mormon.

Sir, I repeat there are no reasons, unless they be religious, why there should be special legislation of this character for Utah. If it be the intention to strike a blow at the Mormon people, to exclude them for exercising the power of self-government, of controlling the country which they have redeemed and made valuable, of depriving them of the right to hold office, if it be the intention to wrest the government of the Territory out of the hands of the majority and give it into the hands of others who are the minority, then this bill will answer the purpose designed. But in attempting to force this bill through this House do not let it be said that there are legal reasons for its passage. The legal reasons for its passage do not exist.

Sir, you doubtless remember that at the session of the Legislature of Utah held some few months ago a resolution was adopted asking Congress to appoint a congressional commission to visit Utah and examine into the condition of affairs there. It had been alleged that legislation by Congress was necessary in consequence of the usurpations of the people who are in the majority in that Territory. They by that action plainly said they are not afraid of investigation, and are quite willing to have their affairs thoroughly examined, and if there be wrong-doing on their part to have it shown up; but they also desired to have the conduct of their accusers examined, that a fair, impartial body of men might judge between them.

Mr. McKEE. May I ask the gentleman if of those members of the Legislature who signed the petition about the violation of the laws all but three are polygamists and living now in violation of the law?

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. Then the more reason for them to shun investigation. If they are all polygamists, and therefore all sinners, then the greater reason why they should shun investigation.

Mr. McKEE. Is not that true? I have the list here.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. The very fact that they invited this investigation shows that they are not afraid to meet the light of day and have investigation of the fullest and freest character. There have been difficulties doubtless in Utah Territory as there are in other Territories. There is no Territory of the United States to-day in which there are not difficulties and disputes between the local and Federal authorities. The condition of affairs in the Territories is of so anomalous a character and so painful, that no people can live under a territorial form of government without irritation arising between the people or their local officers elected by themselves and the officers in whose appointment they have no voice. Examine all the Territories, and you will find this to be the case. The only difference between Utah and the other Territories is that her people, having an unpopular religion, afford her enemies a better chance to talk against them.

Mr. Speaker, who are the men who have brought this bill to this House and asked for its passage? Is this the product of the wisdom of the Committee on the Judiciary? No, sir; this bill is but one of seven or eight bills which have been brought to Washington by men who are interested in getting legislation passed through Congress. It is not a bill originating in the Committee on the Judiciary or in the Committee on the Territories, or in any other committee which has had these bills before it. Who have been the men who have sought to get this bill and others like it passed by Congress? The men most interested in its passage: They are the persons who have sought to get it through.

Since the commencement of this Congress we have had the United States marshal of that Territory on the floor of this House buttonholing members and doing all in his power to push forward this bill and to secure its enactment into law. We have had, too, the United States district attorney stealing on this floor whenever he could get a chance for the same purpose. These men have been here constantly pressing upon members of the Judiciary Committee, upon members of the Committee on the Territories, and upon gentlemen who are not on either of those committees the passage of this bill.

Mr. POLAND. I presume the gentleman does not mean to misstate; but neither the district attorney, the marshal, nor any one else from Utah has had anything to do with the preparation of this bill except a gentleman named Whitney, a lawyer of Salt Lake City, who holds none of those positions and who assisted me in the preparation of the bill. None of those other gentlemen had anything to do in reference to it.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, to have the gentleman make this statement, because I have it in my power to prove that the district attorney did before the Committee on the Territories claim the authorship of this bill.

Mr. POLAND. Then he claimed what was not true.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I knew that Mr. Whitney had framed the bill and presented it, as I understood him, (for he told me so himself,) to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.] But the district attorney did state—and doubtless the members of the Committee on the Territories well remember the statement made by him in their committee-room—that he had helped to get up this bill, the bill before the Committee on the Judiciary, called "The Poland bill." This is the class of persons who have been urging this measure all the time. Has any capitalist or any merchant from Utah, out of the thousands of non-Mormons who are said to be in that Territory, come here to urge the passage of this bill? Has there been any deputation from any of those men? I am told there is a list of men, forty-five in number, who have urged the passage of this bill. An analysis of that list shows that a portion of these are men who have once been Mormons, and who have an unconcealed dislike for their former brethren; the others are men who are dependent upon them for trade; and others who are lawyers, and desirous to please the court of the third judicial district.

But it may be said, "If these capitalists and other influential people of Utah do not desire the passage of this bill why have they not in person or by a committee or by petition come to the House and urged that it be not passed?" The reason is obvious. These men have important interests in Utah. If they have not cases in court, they do not know how soon they may have. It would require more than ordinary courage, therefore, for such men to come forward and take part with the weak side, however strongly their feelings may lean in that direction, especially with such a judge in the third judicial district as now sits there.

It will be observed also that the parties who are here urging the passage of this bill are those who are interested in its success. If this bill should become a law, the office of the United States district attorney in Utah would be worth as much as that of the President of the United States; the office of marshal of Utah Territory would be equally valuable. What does this bill do? In the first section it sweeps away twenty-one sheriffs, and substitutes for them a United States marshal, and twenty-one deputies in the counties; that is a deputy for each county. What does the second section provide? It gives to the United district attorney the entire control of the prosecutions in the Territory, not only under the United States laws but under the local laws.

With the feeling there is on this subject and with such a district attorney as we have now, who has shown what his designs are, we can readily understand what the fate of the Mormons would be if this bill should be made a law, especially when they are not allowed, if they even believe in the rightfulness of polygamy, to sit upon a jury, and when general reputation is made evidence in criminal prosecutions. Let an unprejudiced jurist examine this bill, especially if he has had experience in the Territories, and he cannot fail to perceive how dangerous and subversive of all republican government it is. I cannot believe that there is a member of this House who would vote for such a bill to be enforced against any other people than those who reside in Utah Territory. Let gentlemen examine it and try and forget that it is designed to be put in operation against the Mormons, and then ask themselves if they would be willing to have it go upon the statute-book.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The forty-five minutes allowed to the gentleman from Utah have expired.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I trust the House will grant me more time. It is the first time that I have appealed to the House for any courtesy of this kind.

Several MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have no sort of objection to extending the gentleman's time so long as the House may choose to extend it. I have already yielded to him and to those to whom he might choose to yield three-quarters of an hour, taking for myself only fifteen minutes in opening and fifteen minutes for closing. But I must object to an extension of the gentleman's time unless the same additional time that may be allowed to him shall be allowed to me.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Utah desire?

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I do not think I shall require much longer time. I submit this to the House.

Mr. POLAND. I do not wish to be considered as objecting to the gentleman's proceeding, but I wish the same extension given to the committee that is given to him.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Utah will specify the time he wishes the Chair will submit the request to the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I would like to have fifteen minutes longer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks for fifteen minutes, and the gentleman from Vermont asks that the same time be given to the committee. If there be no objection these requests will be granted together. The Chair hears no objection, and the extensions of time are granted.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. Mr. Speaker, the condition of Utah Territory is such that I can speak of it with a good deal of pride and without any fear in relation to the result of any examination to which its affairs may be subjected.

Utah Territory has now been settled nearly twenty-seven years. On the 24th of the coming month we shall have been there twenty-seven years. To-day we are out of debt. The counties, the cities, and the Territory are entirely free from debt. There is not a bond of any kind afloat. The affairs of the Territory have been managed in the most economical manner. The aim has been to have taxation as light as possible. There are those who wish a change, who desire to obtain the control of affairs, and this bill is in their interest. It is easy to imagaine what the result would be if it were to pass and the control of the Territory were taken out of the hands of those who at the present time have the majority there. What an excellent field there would be for—I was going to say plunder, and I do not know that it is too strong a word to use. Experience elsewhere has shown how easy it is to issue bonds and to involve a community inextricably in debt.

It is against this that my constituents protest. They wish the majority to govern. They govern elsewhere, why not in Utah? Why aid the minority by throwing congressional influence and legislation against the majority? What have the majority done that this must be inflicted upon them? It has been said, let the railroad be built across the continent and the Mormon power will soon be broken. Then it was said, let mines be discovered, so that emigration can flow in, and the overthrow of the Mormons will then be assured. The railroad has been built, mines have been opened, emigration has flowed to Utah, churches and schools have been built and organized—I believe there are five or six different denominations busily engaged there—and yet there is a class who are not satisfied. The overthrow of the majority in Utah has not been accomplished as they hoped. They now want Congress to aid them by granting hostile legislation against this majority, and thus wrest the control of affairs from their hands.

Sir, it is but another scheme for robbing that people, and it is hoped it can be done under the guise of law. Members should hesitate before they cast their votes for such a bill. Examine well what the results of such legislation are likely to be. Let members ask themselves how they would like such legislation enacted for them if they were objectionable for religion or any other reason. Put yourself, sir, in the condition of the Mormons, and ask yourself how you would like to have such a law as this passed against you.

It may be said the Mormons are heretics, but this does not justify Congress in making this bill a law. Such legislation never, in the history of the world, put down heresy. If such legislation can, then all history belies itself, for history bears testimony that no such measure as is proposed in this bill ever was successful in accomplishing such an object. It did not in the case of the Huguenots; it did not in the case of the Puritans; it has not in any case, and it never will, never, while the earth stands and human nature possesses its present features, unless, indeed, you stamp a religion out by destroying all its believers.

What is now Utah Territory when first settled was a country that nobody desired. When my constituents went there it was supposed they would either fall victims to the Indians or starve to death. But after struggling for years they succeeded in transforming it from a desert to a place of beauty. But this was only done by immense sacrifice and toil. Some of the settlements of Utah Territory have had their entire crops swept off five years in succession by grasshoppers. In 1855 the crops of the entire Territory were destroyed by those insects. I do not think I overstate the case when I say, remote as Utah then was from all help, that of any other community similarly situated hundreds would have starved to death and their settlements would have been abandoned. It was the religious sentiment, prompting them to divide with each other to the last mouthful, that saved them.

Mr. Speaker, there was no talk then about enacting laws for the Territory of Utah. No; the Mormons could struggle on and perish if they chose, and these zealous patriots who now profess such interest for Utah cared nothing about her. It is only since mines have been discovered, and city property become valuable, and railroads have been constructed—it is only since it was found that the Mormons had valuable possessions that this interest is taken by the present crusaders against Utah. You remember, sir, that four years ago it was said that unless Congress interposed there would be bloodshed in that Territory. An effort was made to convince Congress that unless legislation was enacted for Utah bloodshed would be inevitable. Four years have passed, and that Territory to-day is as peaceful as it was at that time.

But it is said that the courts are locked up and cannot execute the laws because of the difficulty of obtaining jurors. Sir, that is no more the case now than it has been for a score of years. Under the present laws of Utah courts have been held and cases tried for a long succession of years. And were it not for the obstinacy of the judge of the third judicial district there would be no dead-lock there at the present time. In the other districts of Utah courts have been held and jurors have been summoned. But it has been published in a daily paper of large circulation in Salt Lake City, the editors of which are responsible men, that the judge of the third district had said in substance "he would carry his point with Congress if he ruined the entire legal business of the Territory."

The question as to which is the rightful officer of the courts under the laws of the Territory—the United States district attorney or the attorney-general of the Territory—has been submitted to the United States Supreme Court, and the decision has been in favor of the officer created by territorial statute. The case of The United States Marshal vs. The Territorial Marshal is an analogous one. In two instances the Supreme Court of the United States have sustained the local authorities of the Territory in cases which have been carried up from this court which now complains of being locked up. The United States Supreme Court has sustained the laws of the Territory. This does not look as though the people of the Territory were usurping authority or giving their officers power not guaranteed by law and usage. Instead of a usurpation of power on the part of the Legislative Assembly of Utah, or on the part of an officer created by their act and against the United States officer, as stated by the gentleman from Vermont, the contrary has been the case—the usurpation has been on the part of the Federal officer, and the United States Supreme Court has so decided.

In one of the decisions made upon a case of importance—Clinton against Englebrecht—appealed from the district court to the United States Supreme Court, Chief Justice Chase said:

> The theory upon which the various governments for portions of the territory of the United States have been organized has ever been that of leaving to the inhabitants all the powers of self-government consistent with the supremacy and supervision of national authority, and with certain fundamental principles established by Congress. As early as 1784 an ordinance was adopted by the Congress of the Confederation providing for the division of all the territory ceded or to be ceded into States, with boundaries ascertained by the ordinance. These States were severally authorized to adopt for their temporary government the constitution and laws of any one of the States, and provision was made for their ultimate admission by Delegates into the Congress of the United States. We thus find the first plan for the establishment of governments in the Territories authorized the adoption of State governments from the start, and committed all matters of internal legislation to the discretion of the inhabitants, unrestricted otherwise than by the State constitution originally adopted by them.

That was the language used by the Chief Justice in rendering this decision, which reversed the proceedings of the judge of the third judicial district in the Territory of Utah. Associate Justice Bradley, in another decision recently given, also sustains the territorial laws, and the election of an attorney-general for the Territory by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory. Those two decisions I consider exceedingly important as showing the character of the proceedings in Utah. They show that the people themselves have maintained the law, have been intrenched within the law, have not sought to transcend the law, but have acted in accordance with the organic act of the Territory and the laws passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory, and submitted to you for your approval at the time.

I find that I must hurry on. In the short time allowed me I find it impossible to make explanations which should be made to give a correct idea of affairs in the Territory. In the third section of this bill I find this provision:

> And whenever, in any proceeding for divorce, or in any civil cause, or in any criminal prosecution, it is necessary to prove the existence of the marriage relation between two persons, it shall not be necessary to prove the same by the production of any record or certificate of the marriage, but evidence of cohabitation between the parties as husband and wife, and the acts, conduct, declarations, and admissions of the parties shall be admissible, and the marriage may be established like any question of fact.

In this connection I call attention to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Cummings vs. The State of Missouri. It will be found in 4 Wallace, and I will read an extract from pages 325 and 326:

> By an ex post facto law is meant one which imposes a punishment for an act which was not punishable at the time it was committed, or imposes additional punishment to that then prescribed, or changes the rules of evidence, by which less or different testimony is sufficient to convict than was then required.

This bill proposes to change the rule of evidence, and I submit it comes in conflict with this decision of the Supreme Court in the case I have cited.

Sir, I know the prejudices which exist on this Mormon question. I know that many men are ready to do anything that may have the effect to destroy what is called Mormonism. I implore members to reflect and not act hastily upon this bill. Such legislation will not destroy that system. Its believers have suffered themselves to be driven from their homes time and time again for their religion. They cannot be convinced by the bayonet; they cannot be convinced by violence; they cannot be convinced by any such means. Hostile legislation will not have that effect. If the Mormons are in error, reason is the argument to which appeal must be made.

At the present time and ever since Utah has been settled her people have opened their places of worship to men of every denomination to enter and preach. Sir, as you know, a distinguished divine of this city went to Utah and held a controversy before the largest congregation that could probably be convened in the United States on the question of polygamy, and so it ever has been with them. Whenever a reputable minister of any denomination or creed has gone to Utah, he has had an opportunity of speaking in the halls of the Latter-Day Saints. There has been no exclusiveness, no disposition to close their doors against reason. As I have already said, day-schools and Sunday-schools are established there by religious sects opposed to the Mormons, and if this system can be put down it will be by reason and not by compulsion and violence.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POLAND. I desire to make a verbal correction in the sixth section of the bill.

Mr. CROCKER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. POLAND. Not at present. I wish to have this correction made. In the sixth section of the bill, after the words "take acknowledgments of bail," are the words "and so forth." Those words are quite unmeaning, and I ask that they be stricken out of the section.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

Mr. POLAND. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD,] my colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary, for fifteen minutes.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA.]

Mr. CESSNA. The very brief space of time allotted me renders it wholly impossible for me to attempt to discuss the merits of the bill. I desire to say a few words, and a very few, in regard to the pending amendment.

And first, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BARBER,] because whatever may have been the intention of the gentleman, the effect of his amendment will be in the interest of that spirit which I think needs to be curbed by the operation of this bill. The Territory is very large, and the district attorney cannot perform his duty without two, three, or more assistants. And if his salary is to be limited to $3,500 per annum, it will evidently cripple and render his efforts almost useless in the enforcement of laws in the Territory.

But now in regard to the amendment which I have myself offered. The principle set forth in the bill in regard to the jurors' clause, as contained in the fourth section reported by the committee, makes, in my opinion, an unjust discrimination in favor of the Mormons of the Territory. It violates all rules of practice in every State and Territory in the United States; because everywhere else we intrust to the officers of the United States court the duty of selecting jurors for that court. In this instance the bill of the committee discriminates against the officers of the United States court, and drags in an officer of the Territory, so as to allow him to select 50 per cent. of the jurors who are to serve in the United States courts. In my judgment that is an unfair and partial and unjust discrimination. In all the other States and Territories of this Union we intrust to the United States officers the performance of that duty, and I see no good reason why that duty should not be enforced in this case.

Mr. BARBER. The gentleman is mistaken in regard to the Territory, as I can——

Mr. CESSNA. I would be very glad to allow the gentleman to interrupt me; but, in the interest of fairness and liberality, the other side has been allowed nearly all the time for the discussion of this bill, and it is utterly impossible for me to allow the gentleman any part of my three minutes to discuss that question.

I am opposed to this discrimination in favor of the Mormons of that Territory as provided for in the fourth section of the bill. I insist that the same rule which prevails in the other States and Territories should be enforced in Utah; and in any event we ought to be able to trust the United States officers in the selection of jurymen.

As I said in the outset, I have not time to discuss the principles of this bill; but there are reasons which I could give why this discrimination ought not to be made. I do not believe the Mormons of that Territory are so much better than the people in other Territories or States of this Union that this discrimination ought to be made in their favor. I believe it will not be denied—it was not denied before the committee—that they indulge in the practice of bigamy and polygamy, and that they defy the laws of the United States against these crimes. There is scarcely a penitentiary now anywhere in the United States where some poor wretch does not fill a cell, having been sent there for the practice of bigamy or some crime of that character. I am against any unjust discrimination in favor of the people of Utah. If bigamy or polygamy is a good thing for them it ought to be equally good for us everywhere throughout the Union.

Then, again, it is not denied that they have an obligation to the church, to the hierarchy; that their first and supreme allegiance is to that church and to that hierarchy; and that the doctrines and commands laid down by their hierarchy are regarded as entitled to override and subvert any contrary opinion, or belief, or practice, and are esteemed of superior authority to any law of the United States or any other law. If I had time I could show from the official records on file in this House that they entertain these views, that they practice these crimes, that they defy the Government of the United States, and in pursuance of their defiance these Mormons when selected to go upon a jury will not serve in order that there may be no jury and no court, so that the question may not be decided whether the law of the United States against polygamy is constitutional or not. It was argued before our committee that it had never been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that the law against bigamy and polygamy in Utah was constitutional or otherwise, and that until it should be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that that law was constitutional they would not obey it, because the law of their church was higher, and their first obedience was to that law, not to the law of the Government under which they live.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I should go further into the principles of this question, my time would be more than consumed. Thanking my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD,] for his courtesy in allowing me even three minutes to explain the difference between my amendment and the provision of the bill in regard to juries, I surrender the floor.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the somewhat extended discussion that has taken place upon this bill I have been led to think that perhaps false impressions were gaining ground with reference to what the bill is. I desire to call the attention of the House to it for one moment, and to point out, if need be, the fact that so far from this bill being an oppression of this peculiar people with a peculiar religion, worshiping a peculiar god, it is more liberal toward them than is the law in relation to the selection of jurors in many of the other Territories and in almost all the States.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that when this people, who had been isolated among the vast wildernesses of Utah, were reached by the tide of emigration and civilization sweeping across the continent, and which I hope shall continue to sweep against any form of despotism, any form of religion or faith that attempts to set itself against it—when that people was reached by this tide, of course a conflict sprang up. While those people were there by themselves they needed no legislation by Congress, as their representative has said. When our people went out there, as they have gone in great numbers, legislation became necessary. The people who have gone out from among us are developing the resources of that country and are building up there a civilization which we here believe to be better than that of the Mormons, notwithstanding the argument which has been made by the Delegate from Utah in relation to their peculiar faith. The population in that Territory is to-day mixed. About ninety thousand of the one hundred and fifteen to one hundred and twenty thousand people of that Territory are followers of the "prophet" and this new religion, worshipers of this to me "unknown god;" for the god that sacrifices women to the lusts of men under the form of a plurality of wives is a god that I do not worship. I belong to no particular faith; I espouse no particular form of religion; I would not in any way impose unnecessary or improper burdens on that people or any other; but when they stand up in the light of this age and tell me that their religion is better than mine, that their faith is better than mine, that their civilization is better than mine, that their institutions are entitled to protection beyond what our institutions are entitled to, I say "Hands off; I will not oppress you, but there must be fair play."

What are the provisions of this bill? Look at the section which provides for drawing juries. I ask any fair-minded man whether he can object to it, except for the reason given by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA,] that it contains a degree of sickly sentimentality, a silly dread of touching this peculiar institution represented upon this floor by the gentleman from Utah, rather than an outspoken, honest disapproval of the practices of his church, with a provision for forming juries according to the rules now existing and in force in almost every State and Territory throughout this broad land?

What does it provide? So far from there being any packing of juries against Mormons, it is a fact—and I should object to it myself for that reason if I objected to it at all—it is the fact that it is almost a packing of juries against ourselves. When I say "ourselves," I mean those who do not believe in blood atonement; I mean those who do not believe in the order of Enoch; I mean those who do not believe in this Latter-Day nonsense, as I see fit to call it; I mean those who do not believe in the sacrifice of one-half of creation to the lusts and enormities of the other half. I do not believe in these things myself, Mr. Speaker. I fully accord freedom to worship God and freedom of religious belief; but I remember in history the enormous crimes which have been perpetrated in the name of religion. It was in the name of religion and it is in the name of religion that the widow mounts the funeral pyre in India. It is in the name of religion that helpless infants are sacrificed in the waters of the Ganges. It was in the name of religion that thousands of human beings were sacrificed to the Aztec gods upon the bloody altars of Mexico. It is in the name of religion to-day, all over the world that bloody, miserable, wicked things are being done. It is in the name of religion these men come up here now and defend institutions which appal every honest-minded, pure man in all our land.

I do not speak to this Delegate from Utah as a religionist; I speak to you, sir, as a citizen of the same great country, protected by the same laws I am. I want not your property; I want not your rights;

I do not want your wives, and I will not have your institutions; and I insist those who believe as I do shall have fair play in the bright land you have seen fit to curse with a system, called religion, unworthy the darkest days since the Son of God trod the earth.

What does this bill do? It does simply this and nothing more: It provides that every probate judge in the Territory of Utah—although every probate judge there is a Mormon bishop—that each one of them shall be appointed as one of the two men who shall draw those who are to be put into the jury-box; that each judge in his own county shall be one of two commissioners to select the list from which jurors are to be drawn.

Now, gentlemen, away with your sentimentality, your fearful dread of imposing something unusual upon these Mormons. Look at it! I ask gentlemen round about me who are afraid of some infraction of the rights of freemen, of the right of trial by jury, of some right and some privilege of American citizenship, to look and see if we do not give these Mormons every right they can justly claim? But must they draw the juries and run the courts and do all this business in their own way? That practically is the issue presented to you. I wish that they like their neighbors shall follow the ways of civilization. I do not want you to oppress them, and this bill does not do it. I do not want to wrong them, and you do not by this law. I insist those who believe as I do—especially when I remember there are written in the laws of the country strong statutes against the crime of polygamy, especially when I remember the practices of those whom this Delegate represents here are such as to shock almost everybody throughout this civilized land—I insist my people, our people, the Gentiles of Utah, shall have their rights also, and be permitted to be heard in the formation of juries and in the administration of the laws.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the few moments we have to discuss a question of this kind, with such an uneasy audience as one usually addresses here, it is mighty hard to say anything when there is so much to say. I take it I have made one point at least understood by gentlemen here. I trust I have. I might go further, (and I must go a little further,) and say if I were to go outside of what actually appears in the record here I might tell of the enormities of the wicked practices, the murders, the outrages committed in Utah, which would startle everybody.

But let me come back to what this law does. What are we doing to these people? We provide in trials by jury the manner in which the jurors shall be drawn. What next? That the courts of the United States shall have their proper jurisdiction, and that the territorial Legislature shall not in the name of the Mormon god be able to cheat the courts of the United States of the jurisdiction which they ought to exercise there and everywhere else.

What other thing do we do? We provide that it shall be just cause for challenge of a juror in a trial for bigamy or polygamy if the juror believes in or practices polygamy. Do you allow a man anywhere in your courts to sit as a juror in a trial for robbery who believes in or practices robbery? Do you allow a man to sit as a juror in a case of murder who believes in or practices murder? Do you allow a man to sit as a juror in a trial for any crime who believes in or commits that crime? Would you allow a man to sit as a juror on the trial of another man charged with crimes which the juror practices? Sir, such a thing has not been heard of until, with unblushing effrontery, this representative of a deluded people, who worship a strange god, stands up in the American Congress and demands that it shall be allowed. Mr. Speaker, this is carrying the thing too far, and we ought to forbid it, and can forbid it without any infraction of the rights of American citizens.

I have said almost all I desire to say, and there are but one or two other matters to which I desire to call the attention of the House. We do not abolish the sheriffs; we do not abolish the county courts; we leave the people of the Territory free to regulate their own institutions in all local and municipal matters. We do not propose to interfere with them in any way. The United States Government has dealt with these Mormons with the utmost leniency and indulgence. We find a man here to-day representing these people who has committed the outrage of violating the law of the land upon the subject of marriage, who is the husband of more than one wife. It seems to be expected by this high priest of the Mormon Church that you should recognize the right of his people to commit this crime in the name of religion. Sir, when it comes to the doctrine of blood atonement and human sacrifice, I will not for one tolerate such practices in the name of religion. These people may believe what they please, and I will believe what I please; but I insist that their practices shall be consistent with law and civilization.

This bill in no measure or in any particular impairs the rights of this peculiar people. Reference has been made to the fact that the United States district attorney for the district of Utah has been about here. Why, sir, we have had a high priest of the Morman Church here on the floor of this House during the whole session, doing all that he can, early and late, to establish the doctrine of and gain recognition for his Church. What of it? The only question we need to decide is, is this bill just and right? I believe it to be so, and shall vote for it.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CROUNSE] was pleased to refer to me as having been a leader in reference to legislation in regard to Utah. Sir, until this session of Congress I have never introduced any bill upon the subject, nor have I taken any part whatever in any legislation or any proceeding before Congress in reference to that Territory. It was my fortune two years ago to be called to Utah upon a professional journey and to spend two or three weeks in that Territory. During that time I made the acquaintance of a considerable number of the members of the bar of that Territory, as I went there to attend to a lawsuit. I suppose that it is in consequence of the acquaintance that I made with those gentlemen that they appealed to me in reference to this matter. Four years ago a bill in reference to the affairs in Utah passed this House, I think by a vote of four to one, and I should like to have every gentleman in this House examine that bill and compare it with this, which I agree has been to a considerable extent prepared by me, was introduced by me, and the passage of which is now urged by me. That bill which passed the House four years ago provided, among other things, that in all prosecutions for polygamy the wife should be a witness against the husband; it provided that cohabitation should be prima facie evidence to establish marriage in any prosecution under the law against polygamy; it provided in another section that no statute of limitation should apply to that offense; it provided in another section that no alien who practiced polygamy should be naturalized; it provided that no polygamist should hold any office or be permitted to vote; it provided in another section that no polygamist should receive any benefit under the homestead and pre-emption laws. Another section provided that the probate judge, the sheriff, the justices, and the judges of election should be appointed by the governor of the Territory and should be removable by him; another section provided that in any prosecution for polygamy where the defendant absented himself from the Territory his property might be confiscated; and it wound up with a section providing that the President of the United States should enforce the provisions of the bill by the use of the Army.

When you come to compare the provisions of that bill with the bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary at this session and which is now before the House, it will hardly be claimed that I should be entitled to the paternity of both. I have no special hostility against this peculiar people, the Mormons. But the fact is undeniable that these people are as directly hostile to the Government of the United States as was ever any portion of this country when it was in the very darkest hour of the rebellion. Why, sir, twelve years ago the Congress of the United States passed a bill providing that in all the Territories of the United States polygamy should be a crime, and that law stands unrepealed upon your statute-book to-day. Does the Delegate from that Territory who sits upon this floor pretend that that law has in any manner been obeyed? Does he not know that it has been openly and unblushingly disobeyed?

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. As the gentleman asks me a question——

Mr. POLAND. I desire to have the gentleman say "yes" or "no."

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. It is true that law has been on the statute-book since 1862; but it is a United States law. There have been United States judges, United States marshals, and a United States district attorney in the Territory of Utah ever since its passage. If the law has not been enforced, the people of Utah are not to blame for it.

Mr. POLAND. The gentleman does not answer my inquiry at all. Everybody knows that that law has been unblushingly disobeyed, that the people there have never pretended to obey it, and that they have openly and avowedly disobeyed it. And the gentleman says that nobody has been prosecuted. Why not? For the very want of such a bill as we propose now to pass. It was because their territorial laws were such that no man but a polygamist or one who believed in polygamy was ever allowed to enter the jury-box. Every United States officer in that Territory understood well that if he undertook under this law of Congress to try anybody for polygamy, he had to stand up before twelve unblushing, undeniable polygamists. That is the reason why the law of Congress has not been obeyed.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. If there had been an attempt to enforce the law and the juries had found in favor of polygamy, then the argument of the gentleman might have some force.

Mr. POLAND. I cannot be interrupted further in the short time I have left. The question now comes before Congress, will we open the courts, will we provide the machinery by which our own laws can be enforced? Shall we longer suffer the disgrace of having upon our statute-books a law of Congress, that has been there for twelve years, openly and avowedly disobeyed by those people? We must either repeal that law, or else we must provide some kind of legal machinery by which the lay can be enforced. And that is all this bill does.

The Delegate from Utah said that this bill was to open a way by which their property should be taken away from them and by which their Territory might be plunged in debt. Now, if any gentleman will take the trouble to look at this biil he will find that there is nothing whatever of that kind in it. It merely provides that any territorial marshal or district attorney or judge that we send there shall have the same power and jurisdiction which similar officers have in all the other Territories of the United States, and that a form of legislature embodied by Brigham Young and his twelve apostles shall not be allowed to duplicate all the officers and dissipate their jurisdiction and make them mere figure-heads to stand up there in Utah and be laughed at and insulted by that people.

I say this bill is remarkable for its moderation, considering the course that people have taken and the manner in which they have defied the authority of the United States in its law and its officers. The bill is remarkable for its moderation toward this people. We simply provide for the protection and guarantee of the authority of our own officers in the Territory. We leave the people of the Territory to make their own judges of probate; and if they have any fear that anybody who is not a Mormon will not be prosecuted, we provide that they may elect a prosecuting attorney in every county who may prosecute any man under any law of the Territory, and that this local attorney may be associated with the district attorney of the United States in the prosecution of any such case in the district court. And we provide that the sheriff of ever county, who is a local officer, elected by the Mormon Legislature or by the people, may be authorized to serve within his own county any kind of process returnable to the district or any other court, or that a Gentile officer may be sent there to serve the process. In reference to these probate courts, we have provided that they shall have the same jurisdiction that probate courts have everywhere all over the States in the settlement of estates and matters of that sort; but that they shall not try cases of murder in the probate courts, as they do in Utah Territory.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA,] being a substitute for the fourth section of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CROUNSE. I would like the gentleman, if it meets the consent of the House, to allow me to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute, providing for all this class of cases and obviating the objections which I have urged.

Mr. POLAND. I cannot yield for further amendments.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CESSNA,] a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. POTTER. That amendment, as I understand, is not an amendment of the committee.

Mr. POLAND. No, sir; the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is the original fourth section of the bill, the majority of the committee having changed that section of the bill to its present form.

Mr. CESSNA. The only difference between the section of the committee's bill and my substitute is that the substitute strikes out "the probate judge" and inserts "the United States judge," and it gives the power to select jurors to the officers of the United States court; while the bill of the committee gives the selection of half the jurors to the United States court and half to the probate court. That is the only difference.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CESSNA, the Speaker declared that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. CESSNA. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. BARBER, to add to the last section the words "but the district attorney shall not by fees and salary together receive more than $3,500 per year; and all fees or moneys received by him above said amount shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to; there being ayes 63, noes not counted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. ELDREDGE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 55, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Ashe, Barnum, Barrere, Barry, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crocker, Crutchfield, Danford, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Fort, Glover, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Knapp, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Luttrell, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, McLean, McNulta, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Neal, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Perry, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Storm, Strait, Strawbridge, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Vance, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, James Wilson, Wolfe, and Woodworth—159.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Atkins, Barber, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crounse, De Witt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Giddings, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Magee, Marshall, Milliken, Mills, Niblack, Potter, Randall, Milton Sayler, Sheats, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, Southard, Speer, Standiford, Stone, Christopher Y. Thomas, Wells, Whitthorne, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, and John D. Young—55.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Archer, Averill, Banning, Bass, Begole, Benjamin F. Butler, Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Creamer, Crooke, Crossland, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, Elliott, Farwell, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hathorn, Hays, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hubbell, Hynes, Jewett, Killinger, Lamport, Lofland, McJunkin, Morey, Morrison, Negley, Nesmith, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Phelps, James H. Platt, jr., Purman, Read, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Ross, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Sener, Sherwood, Sloan, Smart, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Stephens, Stowell, Swann, Sypher, Tyner, Waddell, Marcus L. Ward, Whiteley, Wilber, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—75.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. READ. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. SCHUMAKER, who if here would vote "ay," while I should vote "no."

Mr. POTTER. In reference to the vote on this bill and also various votes yesterday, I wish to announce that my colleague, Mr. W. R. ROBERTS, is confined to his bed by sickness; and my colleague, Mr. WOOD, is detained at home by sickness in his family.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the direction of the House the remainder of this day's session is assigned to business of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. WELLS.]

GEORGE S. SHRYOCK.

Mr. WELLS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have passed now a bill to remove the political disabilities of George S. Shryock, of Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I object.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed, as part of the debates, remarks on the tariff bill passed yesterday. (See Appendix.)

CHANGE OF NAME OF A STEAMER.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce and have passed now a bill (S. No. 369) to change the name of the registered steamer Oakes Ames to Champlain.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is it proposed to take up the bill by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MAYNARD. Unless some good reason can be given for the passage of the bill, it is one to which I can never consent.

Mr. CONGER. The steamer Oakes Ames was built for transporting railroad cars across Lake Champlain; she is a stout, well-built boat. When Mr. Ames was connected with the road it was named after him. By a change in the road it is no longer needed for that purpose. It has been taken by the Champlain Company as one of their boats on that lake. It has been transferred into a passenger-boat. They desire it shall have the name of one of their line-boats to take the place of one worn out. The family of Oakes Ames say that being no longer connected with any business with which he was engaged, there is no objection on their part to the change of name.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have this to say. I conceive the family of Mr. Oakes Ames might be embarrassed by an application of this kind. If the declaration is authoritatively made by any member of the committee, and is allowed to go upon the record that this change is not intended as a personal reflection upon the memory of the gentleman who was associated with us in the House for so many years, I will not object to it.

Mr. CONGER. I say publicly here at this time that I hold in my hand a letter from the representatives of Oakes Ames that there is on their part no possible objection to it, and they request it may be done.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is not very much, if the fact be as I have stated it, for some member of the committee to say it here in the House. I will withdraw my objection, however, if it be stated that this is not intended as a reflection upon the memory of Mr. Ames.

Mr. CONGER. I say that positively, and I also say that I have here a letter from the representatives of Mr. Ames requesting that this be done.

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. POTTER. I object, because this is absolutely without reason, being in violation of the action of the House which has been against changing the names of these registered vessels. It has always been considered to be in the interest of public policy these names should not be changed. I therefore object.

SUSPENSION OF WORK UPON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2653) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work upon the public buildings, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is thereby, authorized and directed to defer operations on any public buildings that are authorized by existing laws but not actually commenced, or to proceed with the same, as may in his opinion be for the best interests of the public service; provided that all moneys heretofore appropriated for the construction of public buildings and now remaining to the credit of the same on the books of the Treasury Department, or which may hereafter be appropriated for such buildings, shall remain available until the completion of the work for which they are or may be appropriated; and upon the final completion of each or any of said buildings, and the payment of all outstanding liabilities therefor, the balance or balances remaining shall be immediately covered into the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to have some explanation of that bill.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield to me to offer an amendment.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I will yield to hear the amendment read.

Mr. McCRARY. I think there will be no objection to it. I move it as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. In the selection of a site for any public building not yet commenced, reference shall be had to the interest and convenience of the public, as well as to the best interests of the Government; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power, and it shall be his duty, to set aside any selection which, in his opinion, has not been made solely with reference thereto.

No expenditure shall be made upon any building, a site for which has been selected and work upon which has not commenced, until such of the persons who acted as commissioners in selecting such site shall make and file with the Secretary of the Treasury an oath or affirmation that he is not at the time of making the affidavit, and was not at the date of making the selection of such site, directly or indirectly interested in the property selected for the same; and a similar affidavit shall be made and filed by each and every person hereafter appointed as such commissioner, before any site shall be finally adopted. In either case a failure on the part of any commissioner to make and file such an affidavit shall render the selection void.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I see no objection to that amendment and am willing that it shall be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back a preamble and resolution in reference to the new State Department, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that the accompanying report be printed.

The Clerk read the preamble and resolution, as follows:

Whereas $3,400,000 has already been appropriated by Congress for the new State Department now in course of construction in this city under the direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury; and whereas said Supervising Architect now asks Congress to appropriate $1,500,000 more, although the south-wing wall, or one-sixth of the whole building, is not yet completed; and whereas it is evident that a very large amount of money is being spent on frivolous or questionable ornamentation; and whereas it is the opinion of competent judges that, estimating on the manner in which the work has been carried on, at least twelve years' time and $30,000,000 will be required to finish the whole building; and whereas it is also the opinion of competent judges that the plan adopted by the Supervising Architect has very serious defects in it, and that the building, if completed on that plan, will not only be a failure but a reproach to our architects:

Resolved, therefore, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint a board of three well-known and competent architects not in Government employ, residents of Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, respectively, whose duty it shall be to examine and report what means are necessary to insure a more economical method of doing the work, and also a plan for improving the external appearance and internal arrangements of the building.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I desire to state that the paper just read was the resolution which was referred to our committee. I now ask for the reading of the report of the committee upon the resolution.

The Clerk read the report as follows:

Your committee finds that the construction of the new State, War, and Navy Department was authorized by the act of March 3, 1871, which made it the duty of the Committees of Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives to determine the material of which it should be constructed; and created the Secretaries of State, War, and Navy a board to procure plans for a building for the accommodation of their respective Departments, and authorized the Secretary of State to construct the building in accordance therewith.

Your committee also finds that under this authority the plans of the building now being erected for that purpose were prepared by the Supervising Architect, A. B. Mullett, esq., in accordance with the instructions given him by said commission, and that after a careful and thorough examination they were approved by each member of the board, in accordance with the requirements of the law. They find further that the law required the building to be similar in plan to the Treasury building, and that these requirements of the law have been complied with, the building being substantially the same, and that the building will, in the opinion of your committee, be, when completed, the best arranged and most convenient public building in the United States. It appears, therefore, that so much of the allegations contained in the resolution referred to your committee as states "that the plan adopted has very serious defects in it, and that the building if completed on that plan will not only be a failure but a reproach to our architects," is not warranted by the facts in the case.

Your committee is also of the opinion that the exterior design of the building is good, and that the building will, when completed, be a credit to the Government, an ornament to the city of Washington, and be second in architectural importance and beauty to no building in the United States.

Your committee does not therefore agree with the opinions expressed in the resolution, and is satisfied that, so far from the plan being condemned by the leading architects of the United States, it has met very general approval and admiration.

Your committee is also of the opinion that it would be inexpedient in any event to make any changes in the design, the work being so far advanced that any change in the style of architecture would be impossible, any material change in the design impracticable, and would in all probability result in mutilating rather than improving the design.

Your committee has also investigated the allegations in regard to the cost of the building and in regard to the time necessary for its completion, and feels compelled to say that the statements contained in said resolution are not warranted by the facts in the case, and that the entire building and approaches can be readily completed within five years should Congress deem it desirable to make the necessary appropriations therefor. Neither is it probable that the cost of the building will exceed, in any event, the sum of $10,362,372, and it is hoped will be completed within the sum of $10,000,000. It will therefore be seen that the statement in the resolution that the building cannot be completed in less than twelve years nor for less than $30,000,000 is entirely unwaranted by the facts in the case.

Your committee desires in this connection to call the attention of Congress to the fact that the entire Treasury building contains but 327,800 superficial feet of floor space, of which 28,400 superficial feet are available only for storage purposes; and that the new State, War, and Navy Department building will, when completed, contain 459,200 superficial feet of floor space, every foot of which can be used for office purposes.

Your committee also desires to call the attention of Congress to the fact that the south, west, and north wings of the Treasury building, being the entire Treasury extension, contain 5,132,380 cubic feet of space, and cost $5,748,268, although the south wing was erected at a time when the prices of labor and material were but little over one-half their present value, showing the cost per cubic foot to be $1.12. The new State, War, and Navy Department building will contain 9,868,876 cubic feet, which at the highest estimate will be but $1.05 per cubic foot; which shows conclusively that the building will be, when completed, a cheaper one than the Treasury building. The estimated cost of rebuilding the east and center wings of the Treasury Department building, a work that must be undertaken at no distant day, will at present prices amount to $3,670,162, making the total cost of the Treasury building when completed $9,418,430, as against $10,362,320, the cost of the new State, War, and Navy Department building, which has, as above stated, a superior capacity of 1,359,566 cubic feet and 131,400 superficial feet of office room.

Your committee is therefore of the opinion that no action is necessary on the part of Congress, and respectfully request to be discharged from further consideration of the subject.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the preamble and resolution, and that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

GIRLS' REFORM SCHOOL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, a bill (H. R. No. 3498) providing for the construction of a building for the use of the girls' reform school in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I submit that that bill is subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont makes the point of order that the bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is referred to the Committe of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to move an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and under the order made for to-day, if the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that bill will be the first thing in order.

Mr. COBURN. Was it not decided the other day, in reference to the Army bill, that it would go to the foot of the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order made upon this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, June 2, next, from one hour after the reading of the Journal is concluded, be set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that it shall be in order on the same day to move that the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of reports from the said committee to the exclusion of all other orders.

Mr. COBURN. I was not aware that any such order had been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. What other bill from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are there in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I will say that there are several bills to be reported by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. But those bills have not yet been referred to the Committee of the Whole, so that the object of going into committee is to take up this bill.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to report other bills from his committee for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union he had better do it now, so as to avoid the necessity of going into Committee of the Whole and then coming out.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3539) to extend the limits as to the cost of certain public buildings, and to remove certain restrictions in regard to the construction of the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

NECESSITY FOR AND COST OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3530) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report upon the necessity for public buildings at certain places, and the cost of the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

REGULATION OF GAS-WORKS.

Mr. SESSIONS, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (S. No. 733) regulating gas-works.

The SPEAKER. Does this bill contain an appropriation which will require its first consideration in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SESSIONS. It does not. I ask that it be now considered.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The gentleman will understand that we are now reporting bills to be acted on in Committee of the Whole. If he has any such bill, and does not now present it, it may not be acted upon to-day.

Mr. SESSIONS. Then I will withdraw that bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is withdrawn.

FIRE-ALARM TELEGRAPH IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. SESSIONS, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3532) to aid in the construction of a fire-alarm telegraph in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I now move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering reports from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 68, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be a quorum voting on these questions.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

Mr. HOLMAN. There seems to be so much anxiety to get at these bills for public buildings, that I will withdraw my call for further count.

No further count being called for, the motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the House going into Committee of the Whole,

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1145) granting a pension to Martin Lafflin;

An act (H. R. No. 1791) granting a pension to Augustine L. Yaeger;

An act (H. R. No. 2209) granting a pension to Louisa H. Canby, widow of the late General E. R. S. Canby;

An act (H. R. No. 2216) granting a pension to Cornelia A. Washburn;

An act (H. R. No. 2800) for the relief of Benjamin Crawford;

An act (H. R. No. 3022) granting a pension to Sarah A. Simmons; and

An act (H. R. No. 3407) to change the name of the schooner Jacob Faithful to Eyvor.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. MYERS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House the Committee of the Whole will proceed to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Clerk will report the first bill of that character upon the Calendar.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2563) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work upon the public buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that a bill for that purpose has already passed the House. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 184) to provide for the public education of the indigent blind in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. We have been considering this morning in the House a bill which was said by some of its advocates to be in the interest and for the benefit of women in a distant Territory. I ask the committee now to consider a bill for the benefit of women here at home in the District of Columbia. The Legislature of this District has passed a bill chartering a board of trustees to take charge of an industrial home for women and children, and making an appropriation to purchase a site upon which to erect the necessary buildings, on condition that the Congress of the United States make an appropriation necessary to construct those buildings. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have had this subject under consideration and have reported a bill, which provides that $100,000 shall be appropriated from the conscience fund now in the Treasury for the purpose of erecting these buildings.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to my friend that the bill now under consideration is not the one to which he seems to be speaking.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Why not?

Mr. GARFIELD. The bills are being taken up in their order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I would be obliged if we could find out in some way what bill is before the committee.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 184) to provide for the better education of the indigent blind in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. What is the next bill?

The title of the next bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2653) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work upon the public buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read the titles of the bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds as they stand upon the Calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to this fact: I reported a bill from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which was read at the Clerk's desk, to establish an industrial home for women and children in this District. On that bill the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] made a point of order, which sent it to the Committee of the Whole. I then moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will explain to the gentleman from Virginia that by order of the House the Committee of the Whole is proceeding to consider reports from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, not only those made this morning but those heretofore upon the Calendar. They must under the rule be taken up in their order. Hence the gentleman cannot speak upon the bill to which he refers until that bill is reached. If the gentleman will move to lay aside the bills which precede that one he may accomplish his object.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I was about to do that; but before making that motion, I wish to call attention to the fact that the order which was made in regard to the action in Committee of the Whole does not cover any bills but those reported to-day. In view, however, of the construction which has been put upon that order, I will move to lay aside all prior bills to take up that relating to the girls' reform school.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that these bills must be taken up separately, and laid aside one at a time.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I shall not object to that. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is very ready to find reasons for delay.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all; this is public business, and the House is entitled to know what it is doing.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

The first business on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was the bill (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky; which, on motion of Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, was laid aside.

SHELVES FOR HOUSE LIBRARY.

The next business on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was a resolution authorizing the supervising architect of the Capitol to fit up shelves for the House library; which, on motion of Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, was laid aside.

GIRLS' REFORM SCHOOL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next bill on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was the bill (H. R. No. 3498) providing for the construction of buildings for the use of the girls' reform school in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the obstacles which I have encountered in getting an opportunity to speak upon this bill are not an omen of the manner in which the bill will be received by the House. I desire to say that should this bill become a law there will be established in this District an institution of a reformatory character as an asylum for women and girls.

The institution is to consist of three departments: An industrial home, an infants' home, and a girls' reform school.

First. A home for the immediate shelter, employment, and care of poor, ignorant, and deserted girls who are about to become mothers of children illegitimate under the law, whose reputations are thereby ruined, and who are therefore homeless, friendless, and desperate.

The humiliating truth that "society prepares the crime which the criminal commits" is nowhere more evident than here. The young girl who, however poor and ignorant, has been hitherto innocent and honest, sees directly impending over her a blasted name and a life of hopeless infamy, with no hope even beyond the grave. As her only means of self-defense, as the kindest thing she can do for the illegitimate child, she madly destroys it. Society, cruelly oblivious of her suffering, becomes instantly alive to her crime. When discovered she may be thankful if she is allowed the friendly shelter of prison walls and escapes the penalty inflicted for murder.

It is by some contended that it would encourage immorality to provide a shelter for this class of humanity. Why, it might as well be argued that to increase the number of hospitals would spread disease. What could more effectually encourage immorality than closing every respectable door to a poor unfortunate girl when she knows she may fare sumptuously every day in a house of prostitution?

Since vice is already at a premium and virtue at a discount, pecuniarily, how can morality be better secured than by saving the victim of seduction from a deeper fall; saving her from poverty by giving her an honest trade or profession; from ignorance, by giving her a good English education; from weakness and temptation, by giving her moral culture and surrounding her with purifying influences; from desperation and crime, by giving her shelter and care in her direst need and affording protection to her unfortunate child?

The extreme youth, desperate deeds, dangerous surroundings, and increasing numbers of this class of humanity as revealed by statistics, and the direct relation also shown between ignorance, poverty, and crime, have given the alarm to European governments, republics and monarchies, and they are hastening to reform past delinquencies by rearing industrial schools and reform schools for girls in every important city and town, the expense being divided between the general and municipal governments according to circumstances.

In the small province of Argovia, in Switzerland, containing only 502 square miles, there are 298 female industrial schools, and in consequence it is the most virtuous, industrious, thrifty, and well-educated community in all Europe. While the small province of Galicia, in Austria, where more than one-half of the towns have no schools whatever and industrial training for girls is unknown, furnishes 23 per cent. of all the criminals in the empire, 37 per cent. of all the murderers, and one-half of those who are condemned to suffer death.

A comparison of statistics from the various districts of Austria, Prussia, France, and England furnishes similar results, showing that immorality, vice, and crime diminish in exact proportion to the increase of facilities for mental, moral, and industrial training.

Watching the pinched, sharp, prematurely old faces of the neglected children who swarm in various sections of our large cities, it is easy to see whence comes the plentiful supply of thieves, victims for seduction, and inhabitants of brothels. Many of these creatures never had a wholesome meal to eat or a decent dress to wear until obtained at the price of shame and degradation. But it is not always the poor neglected girl who yields to temptation and continues on the downward path. The very qualities which men admire most in woman—her tenderness, her love, absolute trust in and devotion to man—too often in early youth work her deepest woe and shame, notwithstanding the influences of education, home, and kind friends; and the higher the rank, the deeper and more fatal the fall. Some cases, too sad to be described by tongue or pen, have come to the sheltering care of the women who ask us for these buildings. An indignant father or brother, swift to avenge the tarnished honor of his own name, sends the sure bullet to the heart of the seducer, and steps proudly forth acquitted by law and public opinion of all blame. But the poor victim whose honor he is also supposed to have avenged is by the rules of society driven to seek asylum under an assumed name within the only door open to her—the house of prostitution.

In this department of the institution there is immediate demand for accommodations for from sixty to one hundred inmates, some of whom may be able to pay for their rooms and attendance. In some cases the parents or guardians would be willing to pay the whole or a part of the expenses. But as a general thing these poor creatures belong to the poorer class, and would become objects of charity until able to work and maintain themselves. Labor adapted to the circumstances, education, and industrial training for some definite pursuit will be furnished to the inmate, and such strengthening moral influences as will aid them to protect themselves from future calamity.

Second. An infants' home, an indispensable adjunct to this department, should be provided for the children of the class just alluded to. The charter of the institution also provides for the care of any neglected, ill-treated infants of drunken or vicious parents, who may by due process of law be committed to the home.

The accommodations needed in this department may be partially inferred from the fact that one hundred and fifty dead infants have been found in the alleys and by-ways of Washington during the past twelve months. No definite record has been kept of the number which has been "farmed out" to the wretchedly poor and vicious, to die of slow starvation and neglect. Notwithstanding the efforts made by the Sisters of Charity and many other benevolent women, the actual destruction of life for the lack of a suitable place for the care of unprotected infants is a blot upon civilization.

Every child born upon this soil is supposed to be under the protection of the United States Government. It would seem that the Congress of the United States, so prompt to care for sufferers by fire and flood, might afford also to aid in caring for the unprotected infants born in this District, which is under the special care and management of the General Government.

When we consider the dangers to which the masses of infants are subjected owing to the poverty, ignorance, and crime of the parents, and the fact that more than one-half of the most promising are thus annually swept into the grave, we might well hope that such judicious care, healthful influences, and wise training as the State could afford to furnish would repress the hereditary tendencies to mental, moral, and physical disease; would quicken the perceptions, develop the understanding, and train the eye and hand to skillful labor, so that a larger percentage of neglected children might be reared to useful citizenship than are now furnished from the homes of the poor and vicious. Every dollar thus expended may be returned tenfold to the country in skillful, trained labor.

The kindergarten system of training will be adopted, I understand, in this department from infancy, and every latent faculty harmoniously developed. There is no danger of too much wisdom and thoughtful kindness in the training of our future citizens, however obscure or unfortunate their origin may be. There may be unwise, wicked, or illegitimate parentage, but there can be no such thing as an illegitimate childhood.

Third. The reform school for girls is the third department provided for in the charter of the institution.

The downward road of the unfortunate woman is sure and swift. The absence of all moral restraint, the constant presence of every form of temptation—vicious surroundings, barbarous treatment by law and custom, all combined have resulted in an army of abandoned, reckless women whom society secretly cherishes and openly loathes, condemns, and punishes.

The vast majority of these are young, ignorant, and either orphans or children of drunken or vicious parents.

These youthful inmates of dens of prostitution oftentimes become intoxicated, and becoming noisy and riotous are arrested, and after trial are conveyed to jail in company with criminals of all sorts, whence after serving their time they come out more desperate than ever to follow the same downward road, no opportunity for reformation being afforded them. We have but recently learned that flogging in the Army and Navy but brutalized and degraded men who might be reduced to subordination and prompted to deeds of heroism by inspiring in them respect for their superiors.

The whipping-post and the stocks, the pillory and other modes of torture, are yet in use in some of our prisons, and but serve to steep the criminal still deeper in his disposition for crime. And all this in the age of enlightenment and Christian civilization. In making a large appropriation for the care of the Indians, it was said that we must feed them or fight them, and it was easier and cheaper to feed them, as it had cost a million dollars apiece to kill forty-five Sioux Indians a few years ago.

Now it is easy to demonstrate that it will cost less to feed, educate, and redeem these poor creatures of our own race and nation within the national capital than it now costs the Government to keep them in their present degraded condition.

During the year 1870 there were arrested in the District of Columbia twenty-six hundred and thirty-seven women, mostly prostitutes. The cost of arrests, trials, imprisonments, and burials amounts to from sixty to one hundred thousand dollars annually, while not a dollar is expended in their reformation. To protect, train, and educate the same number of girls in a reform school would cost from thirty to forty-five thousand dollars per annum. Under the present system these women are social pests, poisoning the morals of the community and destroying our youth. As inmates of a reform school they are orderly, industrious contributors to the comfort of the people, producers of material wealth, and not mere idle consumers. Even if, instead of costing but half as much to save them, it cost twice as much as to destroy them, it ought to be done at any price for the welfare of the community.

But the final results of their career are even more expensive to the Government than the few years of their active dissolute life. If they are so fortunate as to die early, the pauper's burial is the end of the expense; but if they live an average of five years, the hospital, the lunatic asylum, and the almshouse must give them shelter for all the remaining years of their miserable lives.

In the cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore 90 per cent. of the paupers have never learned a trade; they are supported at public expense for ten, fifteen, and twenty years.

From two to five years' training in a reform school in youth would have given them useful trades, and would have enabled them to render valuable service to the community for years without another day's expense to the public.

This is equally true of our jails and penitentiaries, as may be readily seen by a comparison of the cost of training our youthful vagrants with tendencies to crime, and prosecuting, imprisoning, and executing one developed criminal.

Hitherto our Government has dealt chiefly with the results of immorality, vice, and crime. It is now beginning to discern the wisdom of dealing with causes; is realizing more and more the value of practical education and industrial training as a restraining force, a moral power over the appetites and passions of humanity. It is also learning the lesson of economy of time and force in the lowest as well as the highest forms of labor, designed to add to human comfort and happiness. Even a coal-heaver who has had mental training has a higher purpose in pursuing his labor, is happier, makes more money, and uses it more wisely, than his ignorant and vicious neighbor. This is equally true in regard to women.

The argument being clear on the score of economy, the community will be more likely to wisely consider the higher questions of humanity, justice, and purity.

REFORM SCHOOLS IN THE UNITED STATES.

We find upon an examination of the records of reformatory institutions in the United States that twenty-eight of these schools are in operation; fifteen have been established by State Legislatures, six by municipal authorities, and seven by private benevolence; four have been established for girls only within the past eight years, and six of those established for boys have admitted girls; eighteen have been established for boys only.

The proportion of boys discharged from these institutions known to lead orderly lives is 61 per cent. The proportion of girls discharged known to lead orderly lives is 71 per cent.

The institutions for boys were founded mainly by States, which bear the same relation to municipal government that the United States does to the District of Columbia, on the same ground that we provided for a reform school for boys in this District. The institutions mentioned as especially for girls were founded by private citizens. After repeated refusals by State Legislatures to aid in what was regarded as an unpromising enterprise, the Legislatures of these States now appropriate money to their support annually.

There are doubtless on this floor gentlemen better acquainted with the histories and results of these institutions than I; but published records show that shelter, training and proper protective influences are even more effective in the reformation of girls than boys.

But further and more ample testimony of the value of this work is found in the houses of the Good Shepherd, under the care of the Sisters of Charity. There are one hundred and thirteen of these institutions in various parts of the world, and they have now in charge seven thousand women who have been prostitutes, and eighty-five hundred little girls who have been picked up on the streets.

In the charter granted by the District of Columbia for this reform school, provision is made for the retention and care of persons committed thereto until the board of trustees pronounce their reformation complete. And the act granting the charter provides that the governor of the District shall be the legal guardian of every irresponsible vagrant girl, so that without the humiliation of an arrest and trial, subject only to the approval of one of the judges of the supreme court of the District, she may be quietly committed to the care of the reform school.

TRADES, EMPLOYMENTS, AND METHODS OF REFORMATION.

The selection of the board of trustees by the supreme court of the District, for terms of one, two, and three years, is an amendment to the original charter made by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to secure the institution from sectarian or political management. It is to be in every sense a reformatory and an industrial school, not a prison.

Thorough training will be given in every variety of household employment, the manufacture of articles for domestic use, clothing, brushes, baskets, wire-work, &c., gardening, fruit and flower culture, business training, and in whatever arts or industries are most in demand and will prove most lucrative.

Recreations will be provided with a special view to reformation and healthful development, and will consist of vocal and instrumental music, (proven to have wondrously refining and civilizing effect upon the most vicious,) hygienic exercises, dancing, literary entertainments, and such innocent games as aid and strengthen the body and mind. Education in the English branches, the use of libraries as a privilege earned by faithful performance of duty, and the cultivation of a taste for refined and elevating pursuits during intermission from labor will form an essential feature in the proposed plan for strengthening and purifying the mind and enabling it to overcome tendencies to evil.

PLANS FOR BUILDING.

The most experienced superintendents of reformatories and architects of reform schools in the country have been counseled with in regard to methods of training and buildings adapted to giving them a fair trial.

Economy, convenience, and architectural beauty are combined in the plans submitted to the present board, which plans must, however, be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury before they are adopted. We are aware that the sum provided in this bill is insufficient, but it will construct the main building and furnish present accommodations, and it is the same amount as we appropriated for the reform school for boys. While perhaps chivalry should have prompted us to first provide for the reformation of females, yet as the boys are provided for first, now let us look out for the interest of the weaker sex. If we adjourn and go home without acting in this matter, we leave a few women struggling alone against a mighty tide of ignorance, vice, and depravity, and we shall take with us the consciousness of having refused to assist them in a labor so beneficial to the cause of humanity as to enlist the sympathies of all good citizens.

It may startle the House when I state that there are wandering through the streets of this city thousands of girls who do not know their own father—many of them born here during the war. Many of these women have come here from different parts of the country, hoping to obtain employment from the Government. The arrests of this class made in this city amount to two thousand annually, and the cost for the arrest, trial, conviction, and punishment, and (where the person dies) the burial, is from sixty to one hundred dollars each. One of these girls, growing up in the streets, the victim perhaps of some scoundrel, when she commits some trivial offense, is taken before a police magistrate. There is no place to which to send her except to the station-house, where she sits on a chair or lies on the floor all night in company with the worst criminals of both sexes; or still worse, she is sent to a living death in a cell of the jail in this District, to be the companion of hardened criminals until she has served out her sentence, when she again goes out into the community to pursue her downward path of shame and crime.

Now, sir, the Congress of the United States has already established in this District a reform school for boys. Certainly, in view of this precedent, we cannot refuse to take from the "conscience fund," which now amounts to about $165,000, and which is now lying unused in the Treasury, $100,000 to be devoted to the purposes contemplated in this bill. I trust that the object of the bill may so commend it to the judgment of the committee that it will be passed without opposition and without much further debate.

Mr. McKEE. Does this bill propose to appropriate the "conscience fund?"

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. It does propose to appropriate $100,000 of the conscience fund, which now amounts to $165,000.

Mr. McKEE. There is no such thing as a "conscience fund;" that money has been paid into the Treasury in pursuance of law.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I beg the gentleman's pardon; he is mistaken.

Mr. McKEE. I am not mistaken. I make my statement upon official authority.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PERRY.]

Mr. PERRY. It is not my province to be numbered among the orators on this floor; but I take occasion at this time to say a few words in behalf of this bill which the chairman of our committee has so nobly presented to the House.

There is a general impression on the part of some of the members of Congress that the Government is already supporting a large number of the benevolent institutions in the District of Columbia, while the citizens themselves are doing very little. The truth is there are twenty-one charitable institutions in the District, of which fourteen are entirely supported by private benevolence, one by a tax on soldiers, three partially by Congress, and three wholly by Congress. Now, sir, there are two homes for aged and infirm women, four orphan asylums, a children's hospital, and seven other institutions of a benevolent character are supported entirely by voluntary contributions. And many excellent people in the District tax themselves to the utmost in this direction.

Considering that this sixty-four square miles is under the special and exclusive jurisdiction of Congress, and that a large portion of the suffering, the infirm, the ignorant, and the neglected are a direct result of national calamities, it does not appear that thus far Congress has done any more than its duty; while it is clear that citizens of Washington have shown much philanthropy and public spirit, and are not guilty as so often charged of throwing all the burdens of the community upon Congress.

But, Mr. Chiarman, among all these twenty-one benevolent institutions we may look in vain for a reform school for girls, or any place where the poor outcast females may find shelter and a chance for reformation. The virtuous poor will not tolerate the companionship of even the unfortunate ruined girl, much less the degraded outcast, and to force even a small number of them into any one of these institutions would destroy its usefulness at once.

The class of persons for whom this institution is designed are set apart from the whole earth. A mark more fatal than the mark of Cain is upon their forehead and all the forces of society combine to drive them to deeper ruin. They need a special home, special treatment, and special teachers, that the evil may be removed and good implanted, confidence in humanity restored, and the lost saved.

The District lays the foundation by purchasing the land, and we are asked to construct the buildings out of the conscience fund.

There is a precedent for using this fund for this purpose in this very District.

The National Soldiers' Home was reared from a separate fund under the charge of the Government, but not covered into the national Treasury. One hundred and eighteen thousand dollars was brought to Washington at the close of the Mexican war, being the unexpended sum of the contributions levied upon the Mexican cities. At the request of General Scott this sum was appropriated to the founding of a soldiers' home, and the comfortable retreat where disabled soldiers may live and die in peace, the beautiful home where every visitor to the capital must drive, is the result.

But who has provided for the lost girls, ruined by soldiers during our own civil war? Hundreds and thousands of soldiers and officers who were brave enough to fight for the American flag and American honor were not too brave to ruin ignorant, defenseless girls for life. Never in the history of our country were there so many reckless, deserted, abandoned girls in Washington as during and since the war. The very name "Hooker's Division," applied to the most disreputable locality in Washington, shows how much the United States Army is responsible for the present condition of these outcasts.

Now certain persons have been troubled by guilty consciences, and have attempted to appease them by sending money to the national Treasury. If every man whose conscience ought to be troubled by the life-long misery he has inflicted upon some unprotected girl had sent money to this fund, it would now be a mighty sum! But such as it is I claim that it ought to be used for these buildings, for nowhere else could it be so well applied as for the purpose of erecting this industrial home for women and girls.

I opposed in the committee the reduction from $150,000 to $100,000, for I do not think that $100,000 is enough to construct proper buildings for the three departments needed. The conscience fund as it stands would not have been one dollar too much to have laid a proper foundation for this long-neglected work. But the committee deemed it advisable to make the bill $100,000, and I acquiesced, thankful for small favors.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will meet the favorable consideration of the members of this House and the bill now reported from the committee may pass and this reform school become an institution; that every member of this Congress will feel that he has done conscientiously right in using this conscience fund for the benefit of this industrial home for women and children, one which is so much needed in this growing and populous city.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. I want to suggest two or three amendments which I think will meet with the approval of the committee and of the House.

In line 15, on page 2, after the word "site," where it occurs the second time, I move to insert the words "and title;" and after the sixteenth line to insert "and vested in the United States;" so it will read:

Which site and title shall be approved and accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury and vested in the United States before any work shall be commenced or money expended under the provisions of this act.

I will explain the reason of it in a moment.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to that. I wish to have some explanation of it.

Mr. KASSON. I will state in a single moment the reason for it. The site is a small part of the expenditure. The building is to be erected by the United States, and as such the title to the property on which it stands ought to be in the United States. The entire control of the property should be in the United States instead of being in any corporation. My amendment would vest the title to the property in the United States. It ought to be done when the Government invests this amount of money in such a building.

I will suggest one or two other amendments. In the third section, in reference to the conscience fund, I move in line 2, after the word "moneys," to insert "which have been," so it will read "from moneys which have been received from individuals and parties unknown," &c.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to ask the Chair whether this bill should not first be read by paragraphs? If that be done, the gentleman from Iowa can then move his amendments in order.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I ask that by unanimous consent all further debate be closed and the amendments of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will have to be read by paragraphs if it is insisted on.

Mr. SPEER. I do insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first section of the bill.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I ask, by unanimous consent, general debate be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. That order was not made in the House.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. There is no limit to debate in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. None by order of the House.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there will be no objection to our going on under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. If we can proceed under the five-minute rule I will withdraw my motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read by paragraphs for amendment if there is no desire for further debate.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. There is a desire for further debate.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I will tell you when I get through.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move the committee rise in order that we may close general debate in ten minutes.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I rise to a question of order. How can the gentleman take me off the floor? The Chairman directed the Clerk to read the bill by paragraphs. I rose to the point of order that general debate had not been closed. The Chair sustained that point of order, and I was on the floor addressing the Chair. How can I be taken off the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had not the right to the floor to speak on anything but to the point of order.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I had the right until general debate was closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was decided in the gentleman's favor by the Chair.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. But I remained on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia had previously made the motion that the committee rise in order to close debate. In regard to the next point made by the gentleman from Vermont, it is true that the Chair directed the Clerk to read the bill by sections, but the demand for that had been withdrawn, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. PLATT,] who makes the motion which the Chair entertains, that the committee rise for the purpose of making an order in the House to close all debate on the bill.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. PLATT, of Virginia; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RANDALL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MYERS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3498) providing for the construction of buildings for the use of the girls' reform school in the District of Columba, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and pending that motion I move that all general debate on the bill pending in committee be closed in five minutes.

The question to close debate was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. MYERS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill in relation to the girls' reform school in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Recognizing the extreme courtesy of the gentleman from Vermont in his reply to the question I addressed to him, I yield him the time allowed for debate.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I decline the courtesy.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Then I ask that the bill be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill has not yet been read through. I call for its reading.

The Clerk read the bill.

The first section authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be erected in the District of Columbia, on such site as may be purchased by the said District and approved by him, suitable buildings for an industrial home for women and girls for the purposes described in the act of the Legislature of the said District entitled "An act to establish an industrial home for women and children," approved June 26, 1873; provided that the cost of said buildings shall not exceed the sum of $100,000; and provided further that the trustees of said industrial home for women and children shall secure full possession with perfect title of a site for said buildings; which site shall be approved and accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury before any work shall be commenced or money expended under the provisions of this act; and provided further that all plans, drawings, and specifications for said buildings shall be approved and accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The second section provides that a board of trustees, to consist of nine citizens of the District of Columbia, not less than three of whom shall be females, shall be charged with the management of the said industrial home for women and girls, and three of whom shall serve for one year, three for two years, and three for three years, to be appointed by the supreme court of the said District; and all vacancies in the said board of trustees, occurring by death, resignation, refusal to serve, expiration of term, or other cause, shall be filled in like manner by the said supreme court of said District; provided that the said board of trustees shall report annually to Congress the actual condition of said institution, the amount of receipts and expenditures, investments, real and personal, and such other information as Congress may require.

The third section appropriates for the purposes of the act, from moneys received from individuals and parties unknown, and designated the conscience fund, now in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury, the sum of $100,000.

The fourth section provides that the chairmen of the Committees on Appropriations and on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses of Congress shall be ex officio members of the board of trustees of the industrial home for women and children in the District of Columbia provided for in the act, and shall have all the powers and privileges pertaining thereto.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by sections for amendment.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to amend the first section by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 12, the following:

And no money shall be paid out of the Treasury in pursuance of this law until a contract shall have been made by responsible parties, with sureties to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the erection and completion in every respect of the buildings herein provided for, at a cost not exceeding the sum of $100,000.

I presume there will be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I have none.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. While I am on the floor I would be glad to say a word or two in regard to this bill. I cannot conceive that any one can have any objection to such an appropriation of money as is provided for in this bill, if after fair consideration and examination of the subject it appears that the Treasury of the United States ought to be charged with such an appropriation. No one of course doubts the beneficial character of such a home as is here contemplated, and no one would hesitate one moment to give any money that could properly be given for such an object to establish such a home. Whether the District of Columbia is any more in need of such a home than any other equally populous community, I confess I am unaware. Sufficient facts have not been brought before us to show that it is; but this question was brought to the attention of the Committee of the Whole on a former occasion when a bill providing for the erection of a new bridge across the Eastern Branch was under consideration, the question how far the Government of the United States should be charged with doing in the District of Columbia what they would not do in Maryland, Virginia, or any other State. I understand that the Committee on the Judiciary have made a report, which if not already in print soon will be, setting forth, so far as their examination of the question has gone, what in their judgment are the legal relations subsisting between the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States, and I suppose their report will cover the point how far the United States ought to be chargeable for any public works within the District of Columbia.

Now I can understand, Mr. Chairman, that we may reasonably be charged for some expense for public works here; that the United States Government may be reasonably charged with all the additional expenses entailed on the District by reason of its being the capital of the United States. I am not prepared to say that we cannot be reasonably and fairly charged with all that ought to be paid by reason of its being the capital of the United States; but how far we ought to be charged with work of this kind, eleemosynary in its character, for the benefit of whomsoever the trustees may see fit to introduce into this institution, is a question worthy of consideration. I think myself that the practice ought not to be encouraged of resorting to such a device as that which is resorted to in this bill, as though by taking this conscience fund we were not taking money out of the Treasury of the United States. This conscience fund is just as much the money of the United States as any money in the Treasury collected by taxation, and we have no more right to appropriate this money than any other.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I see no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of the amendment would be to allow this whole sum to be drawn at one time after a contract was made, and we have seen the evil consequences of such a policy. I therefore move to amend the amendment by adding to it the following words:

And then only in such sums as may be necessary from time to time to pay for the work done under the contract.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move to amend the first section by inserting after the word "site," in line 15, the words "and title;" so that it will read:

Which site and title shall be approved and accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury before any work shall be commenced or money expended under the provisions of this act, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a word upon that amendment.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Let me first suggest another amendment, and then the gentleman can address his remarks to both of them. I move to insert after the words "Treasury" in line 16 the words "and the title thereto vested in the United States."

Mr. KASSON. The clause will then read:

That the trustees of said industrial home for women and children shall secure full possession with perfect title of a site for said buildings; which site and title shall be approved and accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury and the title thereto vested in the United States before any work shall be commenced or money expended under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That all plans, drawings, and specifications for said buildings shall be approved and accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to both amendments and desire to say a word upon them. I ask that the second section of the act incorporating this company may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the District treasury not otherwise appropriated, to purchase ten acres of land in a pleasant and healthful location, within five miles from the city limits, for the purpose named in the previous section: Provided, That Congress makes an appropriation sufficient to erect the necessary buildings.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee of the Whole will see the exact effect of this legislation. This company has been incorporated under the legislation of this District. It is proposed to purchase the site for this institution for the sum of $5,000, appropriated by the District; and it is proposed of course that the title to that site shall be vested in the corporation which the Legislature of this District has created. It is proposed by this bill at the outset to appropriate $100,000, and allow this company to build the building, and to make it not an institution of the District of Columbia but an institution of the Government of the United States. It is proposed that the title of this property which is paid for by the District shall be vested in the United States. The law organizing this institution contemplates the purchase of the site by the District of Columbia and the vesting of the title to the site in this corporation.

Now, while I think my friend from Virginia [Mr. PLATT] makes a great mistake, and places us in a false position in talking about appropriating this sum out of the conscience fund, which can be but a mere pretense, I think perhaps it is but reasonable that we should appropriate the sum of money here named, $100,000, for the purpose of erecting this building. I do not know an object that would more justify an appropriation. Still I know that in every town in this broad land where a similar institution has been founded, in all our cities, the citizens themselves pay the necessary taxes for the purpose.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. There is not a city in this land where there is an institution of this character the expense of which is not borne by the State in which the city is situated. And the General Government bears the same relation to the District of Columbia that a State bears to a city within its limits.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that argument is not correct. I think, as a matter of course, the local governments should manage their own affairs at their own expense. I think it is wrong for us to tax our constituents to build up this institution here. But in view of the great humanity there is in such an act of legislation, I shall not object to this appropriation of $100,000.

What I do object to, however, is the making this institution a permanent institution of the Federal Government by vesting the title of this property in the United States. It should be vested in a board of trustees, and we can appropriate out of our Treasury the sum of $100,000 to erect the necessary buildings. I trust it will not be insisted that the title of this property shall be vested in the Government of the United States, and that it be made in fact, in every conceivable sense, an institution of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. I desire to say a word, for I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and myself can hardly differ so widely except by mistake. As the bill now stands, without amendment, the title to the ground upon which the building is to be erected remains in a private corporation. And as soon as the money appropriated by the United States shall be put in a public building on that ground both the building and the ground of course become the property of a private corporation.

Now, suppose that the Government, which by this bill has the control and management of this institution through a board of trustees, should desire to use it for some other public purpose from any cause which the future may develop; they will be estopped from any other use whatever, or any control over the grounds or their improvement, from the fact that they are private property. We expend $100,000 to improve property which will immediately go out of our control. I think we ought not to do that. The object of the amendment is simply to leave this institution in the control of the United States. The chairman of the committee [Mr. PLATT, of Virginia,] and others seem to consider that a proper thing to do; and unless there is some reason why it is unsafe for the United States to accept the title to this property to the value of which they contributed nearly the entire amount, I certainly think this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman think it proper that the Government of the United States should assume the entire responsibility for this institution and all of the appropriations necessary to keep it up hereafter to the entire exclusion of the District, thereby relieving the people here entirely from taxation for that purpose?

Mr. KASSON. In answer to that I will say that from conversation with very responsible people in this District, gentlemen and ladies who have taken some interest in this question, I know that they desire to sustain this institution by their charities as they have done heretofore; but they cannot raise the money to erect the buildings. They are willing to trust the United States to give them shelter, and then to trust themselves for furnishing means to carry on the institution. While giving them that shelter, this amendment simply proposes that the United States shall retain the ownership of the property.

Mr. DAWES. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] must give up the idea that we can go on and make this appropriation and not become so identified with this institution as to take its support upon ourselves. If it be worthy of this appropriation, we must meet the matter here at this time, whether the Government of the United States should establish and maintain this institution. There cannot be kept up any such joint proprietorship and joint obligation of the United States with private benevolence for the support of this institution, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana. We have had in this District very many such instances, and the result in all cases has been sooner or later that the United States has taken the matter wholly upon its hands; and I suggest to the House that it had better make up its mind at once to do that in this case. I will say at the outset that I propose to vote for this appropriation; but I do it with a full conviction that by this proceeding the United States takes this institution upon its own hands. As I say, this matter has been tried over and over again in this District. Take the case of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, which commenced in a charity of a few thousand dollars. The United States contributed to the support of that institution as a charity from time to time. There was a constant struggle and a vain effort upon the part of those who looked to the contributions of voluntary benevolence to supply what was necessary for the support of that institution. There were applications to Congress again and again for additional aid in obtaining grounds and erecting buildings, until at last the managers of the institution voluntarily came here and surrendered their whole title to the United States upon a trust, never to be violated, that the real estate should be devoted forever to the purposes of the institution. That is now one of the finest institutions in the country, located upon what is among the finest real estate in this whole District; and it is so consecrated by the title conveyed to the Government that the United States even by an act of Congress cannot part with that title without a violation of its faith.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CROCKER obtained the floor.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CROCKER. I believe I was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. But the point of order has been made that debate upon the pending amendment was exhausted.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CROCKER] will of course have an opportunity to speak on the next amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the pending amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I object; I desire to have the amendment voted upon.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 60, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. PLATT of Virginia, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 123, noes 28.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend by inserting after the amendment just adopted the following words:

In trust for the sole purpose and use indicated and set forth in the said act of the Legislature of the said District.

Mr. COBURN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has well said that this is merely the beginning of an institution which is to be saddled upon the Government, which we shall be bound to support henceforth and forever. We may make up our minds that if we now establish this institution we shall be bound to sustain it. The appeal will regularly be made to Congress to add to the buildings, to keep them in repair, to support the officers, and to bear all the other expenses.

I remember very well that when I first came here the institution for the deaf and dumb located in this District cost the Government very little. It was founded, as this institution is to be founded, with private trustees; but it has grown, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has said, to be a great governmental institution. If you now give the sanction of the Government to the institution proposed to be established by this bill, you may expect twenty, thirty, or forty thousand dollars a year to be drawn from the Government regularly to support it.

This city is destined to be a great city. It is destined to furnish hundreds of people of the class for whose benefit this institution is about to be established. These are not children alone; they are women; they are grown persons. When this bill contemplates a "home for women and girls, for the purposes described in the act of the Legislature," it embraces a large class; and if we pass this bill we shall be bound hereafter to support a great institution of this kind. Are we prepared for such an expense?

I live in a State capital which is more than half as large as this city, which has seventy or eighty thousand inhabitants; and the citizens of that place would be ashamed to ask from the State one dollar to assist in supporting any of their local charities. They take care of their own poor; they support and furnish homes for persons of the class contemplated by this bill, and they do it liberally, asking neither help nor credit for what they do. It is a shame that the people of this District are continually knocking at the doors of the national Treasury asking us to support their poor and other unfortunates, demanding in every quarter assistance from the General Government. They are just as able to take care of themselves as are the people of any other metropolis; and I think it is time they should do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] by striking out the last word. I make this motion for the purpose of saying that I am anxious to do something for what I deem a highly humane purpose, and I will go further in behalf of the institution now under consideration than upon any other suject of legislation concerning this District, unless it might be a measure for the benefit of those unfortunate boys wandering uncared-for upon our streets, who could perhaps by proper care on the part of the Government be reformed and trained to good citizenship.

But I see that both the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] are intent on making this a national institution. All that the District of Columbia has asked from us is a reasonable sum of money to assist in the beginning of this work—to enable the trustees to erect the building. Nothing more is asked of us. But instead of doing this it is proposed that we shall assume the whole responsibility, that the title of this property shall be vested in the Government, and that Congress shall become responsible for the future maintenance of the institution. The city of Washington has asked no such thing; and so far as I am concerned I object to appropriating one dollar for the purpose of making this a permanent Government institution, to be supported out of the national Treasury. I will not vote for any such new enterprise.

Mr. MAYNARD. Suppose that the city of Washington had not asked for a dollar of appropriation for this institution and had not taken any step toward establishing it, would not the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] as an American citizen interested in the welfare and prosperity of the national capital, initiate such a movement as due to the honor of the American name?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am interested in relieving the wants of the distressed everywhere, but no more here than in other cities in the prosperity of which we feel a kindred interest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I do not speak as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Debate has been exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I think not. I merely intimated to the gentleman from Indiana what his own experience would corroborate. He cannot have this institution upon the shoulders of the United States, to be supported from the United States Treasury, and still let the title to the property remain in the name of others.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not propose the Government shall have anything to do with it except to make it this donation.

Mr. DAWES. I know the gentleman wishes to relieve those who are in distress, but I wish to act fairly and squarely in reference to this whole matter. I am in favor of the object of the bill. I have long taken an interest in various institutions indicated in several of the provisions of this bill. I do not think it is asking too much of the Government to do for this class as we have done for the insane; but if we undertake this double work, as provided for in this bill, we shall certainly fail. I do not wish to see fifty or a hundred thousand dollars of the people of the United States put on lands belonging to others, nor do I wish to see these lands put under the United States generally, so it may be disposed of by act of Congress at any time. Let the United States hold this property in the relation of a trust for this purpose or let the United States not touch it at all.

Let us decide it fairly and squarely. I am not here in disguise to oppose the bill. I hope it will pass, but not until the United States takes this real estate into its own possession, and holds it as trustee against all contingencies and all adversities and all hostile legislation which may come hereafter. If it be a work we ought to engage in at all, it is a work worth taking hold of in earnest, and in such a way it will never come to naught. If you build your house upon another man's land, if you let another organization control it, then by and by it may not be as now in harmony with Congress, and there will be an antagonism which must be fatal to the institution.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts unwilling to trust the wisdom of a subsequent Congress?

Mr. DAWES. When the United States holds it in trust for these parties the United States cannot wrench it away, nor can any one take it from the United States. It would require the joint action of the two to dispose of it. Therefore any hostile feeling which may come hereafter in Congress could not overthrow the institution. So long as Congress is true to the trust can it part with the property? It is better, therefore, if we touch it at all, to touch it in the way I suggest. Members would hold in trust in any other institution as a board of trustees, and would fix it so that it would not depend upon the trustees only as to the purpose for which the institution should be devoted. I look into the purposes of the institution; I see they are worthy of my support, and I wish, if we are to erect an institution here, to make it a permanent one like that over on our left, the Deaf and Dumb Institution, or this one in front of us, the Insane Asylum, and other institutions which Congress has felt it its duty to patronize and protect. I would have it unlike the orphan asylum to which Congress voted money, the title of which was not left in the United States. What has been the consequence? There has not been an orphan in it. The building has been rented to the United States for the State Department ever since it was built. We are to-day paying rent to an institution we built with our own money.

Mr. MAYNARD. Was the title of the Deaf and Dumb Institution vested in the United States?

Mr. DAWES. It was a donation to a private institution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. At half past four the House ordered a recess to be taken until half past seven this evening. It is so near that time now that it is impossible we can come to a vote on the pending bill unless this discussion stops at once. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the vote be taken.

Mr. SHANKS. I object.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPEER. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw his motion.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I should like to accommodate my friend from Pennsylvania, but I cannot withdraw my motion. I insist on my motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MYERS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 3498) providing for the construction of buildings for the use of the girls' reform school in the District of Columbia, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 822) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, returned to the House in accordance with its request the bill (H. R. No. 1196) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 773) to reduce the area of the military reservation of Fort Sanders, and providing for the survey of said reservation as reduced;

A bill (H. R. No. 955) for the relief of J. L. Tedrow, of Clarke County, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1936) for the relief of Dewight Desilva, of Deposit, New York.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I yield what time I have remaining to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SPEER. How does the gentleman retain possession of the floor?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. By order of the House.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I make the point of order that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is entitled to the floor to-day.

Mr. COX. Is it not in order to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor.

REGULATION OF GAS-WORKS.

Mr. SESSIONS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 733) regulating gas-works.

Mr. RANDALL. That bill has to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SESSIONS. There is no appropriation in the bill at all.

Mr. COX. I ask again, is it in order to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order, but the effect of the motion would be to vacate the order of the House for an evening session.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to vacating that order.

CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. POLAND. I rise to a privileged question. I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution in relation to the printing of the statutes as revised.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Can that be done under the order of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is a question of the highest privilege.

The Clerk read the report of the committee of conference, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution of the House for the suspension of the joint rule of the two Houses No. 6, so far as it relates to the bills of the House (H. R. No. 1215) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; (H. R. No. 2879) an act revising and consolidating all the laws authorizing post-roads in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; and (H. R. No. 3349) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States general and permanent in their nature relating to the District of Columbia in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

Strike out of the resolution as passed by the House the words "as engrossed in the House of Representatives, and passed in the Senate," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Printed upon paper and duly examined and certified by the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills, provided by the joint rules.

L. P. POLAND,
E. R. HOAR,
R. M. KNAPP,
Managers on the part of the House.

POWELL CLAYTON,
H. B. ANTHONY,
T. F. BAYARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BUCKNER. There is a special assignment for to-night for reports from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The SPEAKER. Nevertheless the House has a right to adjourn.

Mr. BUCKNER. I hope the House will not adjourn.

The question was taken on Mr. COX's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 64, noes 59.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PACKARD and Mr. COX were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 80.

Mr. PACKARD. I make the point of order that the hour of half past four having arrived the House must now take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The trouble is that the hour had not arrived when the motion to adjourn was made. Had the hour of half past four o'clock arrived, the motion could not have been entertained.

Mr. PACKARD. The hour has arrived before there is any decision on the question.

The SPEAKER. O, yes; but the House is dividing. This question has been frequently adjudicated.

Mr. PACKARD. Then I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The point made by the gentleman would have been good if the vote had been the reverse of what it is. It would then have been the duty of the Chair to have declared that the hour for taking a recess had arrived. But inasmuch as the vote is to adjourn, the gentleman has a right to call the yeas and nays upon it. Had the vote been the reverse, the recess would have been taken.

Mr. PACKARD. I ask that next Friday evening be allowed to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The SPEAKER. That evening is already assigned for the business of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. PACKARD. Then I must insist on the yeas and nays.

Mr. MYERS. Is there any assignment for to-morrow night?

The SPEAKER. There is not.

Mr. PACKARD. Then I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow night be allowed to the Committee on Private Land Claims in lieu of to-night.

Mr. MOREY. I object.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Pending the call for the yeas and nays, would it be in order to move that the House now take a recess until half past seven?

The SPEAKER. It would not, because the motion to adjourn, which is now pending, is of higher privilege than the motion for a recess. The question is upon ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 125, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Bell, Berry, Blount, Brown, Buffinton, Burchard, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Caldwell, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Stephen A. Cobb, Corwin, Cox, Crittenden, Crocker, Crossland, Danford, Davis, Eldredge, Fort, Freeman, Garfield, Giddings, Gooch, Gunckel, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, John B. Hawley, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Hyde, Lawson, Lowndes, Magee, Martin, McLean, Mills, Neal, O'Neill, Pelham, Perry, Purman, Robbins, James W. Robinson, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sloss, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, St. John, Storm, Taylor, Whitehead, Whitthorne, and George Willard—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barnum, Barrere, Bass, Beck, Bland, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Buckner, Bundy, Burleigh, Cain, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Coburn, Comingo, Conger, Cook, Cotton, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Darrall, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Durham, Farwell, Field, Glover, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, E. Rockwood Hoar, Kelley, Kellogg, Lawrence, Lynch, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McNulta, Merriam, Milliken, Monroe, Morey, Morrison, Myers, Niblack, Niles, Orr, Orth, Packard, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pendleton, Phelps, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, George L. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Standiford, Stone, Strait, Strawbridge, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Vance, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, White, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Woodford, Woodworth, and John D. Young—125.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Barber, Barry, Begole, Biery, Bowen, Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Creamer, Crooke, DeWitt, Eames, Eden, Elliott, Foster, Frye, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, John T. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hynes, Jewett, Kasson, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Luttrell, Marshall, McJunkin, McKee, Mitchell, Moore, Negley, Nesmith, Nunn, O'Brien, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Phillips, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, Ross, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Shanks, Sheats, Sherwood, Sloan, Smart, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Starkweather, Stephens, Stowell, Swann, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Todd, Tremain, Waddell, Waldron, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wilber, Willie, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, and Pierce M. B. Young—100.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House ordered that at half past four to-day a recess should be taken till half past seven o'clock, and that the session of this evening should be exclusively for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. SPEER. Is it in order to give notice that there must be a quorum present to-night for the transaction of business?

The SPEAKER. A quorum is required by the rules.

Mr. SPEER. I give that notice now.

The House then (at four o'clock and fifty minutes) took a recess until half past seven p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session, Mr. HOSKINS in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session this evening is exclusively for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Private Land Claims. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PACKARD] is entitled to the floor.

GRANTS IN NORTHWESTERN AND INDIANA TERRITORIES.

Mr. PACKARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2188) for the relief of persons to whom the governors of Northwestern and Indiana Territories confirmed lands, and that the same be now considered in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases where any claim to land in the Northwestern and Indiana Territories has been confirmed, according to law, by Arthur St. Clair, governor of the Northwestern, or William H. Harrison, governor of the Indiana Territory, and the land covered by said claim, in whole or in part, has been sold by the United States since the date of said confirmation, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon satisfactory proof that the claim so confirmed cannot be located in place by reason of the land covered by said claim having been sold by the United States, to issue a certificate of location to the confirmee, or his legal representatives, for such part or parts of said claim as cannot be located in place for the reason aforesaid, which certificate may be located upon any of the public lands of the United States subject to sale at private entry at a price not exceeding $1.25 per acre, and, when so located, patent shall issue therefor: Provided, That said certificates shall be located in legal divisions and subdivisions: Provided further, That no certificates of relocation shall issue, under the provisions of this act, where certificates of relocation have already issued, or where the claim has been otherwise satisfied by the United States.

SEC. 2. That all certificates and patents issued thereon, under this act, shall designate the number of claim upon which the same are issued, and shall state that their acceptance is in lieu of original claim to the land, and in satisfaction of all further claims against the United States for having sold said lands, and subsequently patented the same; and shall operate a release, to the subsequent purchaser from the United States, of all title derived from confirmation made by the governors in the Northwestern and Indiana Territories to said parties: Provided, That the aggregate of such certificates shall not exceed forty-three thousand acres.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to object to that bill being taken out of Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PACKARD. I ask my colleague to withdraw his objection until I can make a statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will reserve my objection for the present.

Mr. SPEER. Did the Chair announce that there was a quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not make any such announcement; he did not think it his duty to do so.

Mr. PACKARD. The bill which has just been read is a bill providing for the confirmation of certain land claims which arose from confirmations made by certain governors of the Northwestern and Indiana Territories. In the year 1790 Governor St. Clair became governor of the Northwestern Territory; he went into the Territory, organized it, instituted a territorial government, and proceeded to confirm to settlers certain grants under ancient French claims, certain military donation grants, and grants of different kinds. Some two years after that Governor Harrison, of Indiana, succeeded to his power, and also made certain confirmations. Those confirmations were reported to and approved by the Department to which they were referred—I think the Treasury Department then had charge of matters pertaining to lands.

It was understood until 1812 that these confirmations made by the governors were valid, entitling the holders to the land. Up to 1812 there had been a continuous recognition of the validity of these grants. In that year a commission was organized to go to these Territories and re-examine the confirmations that had been made by the governors. That commission did so and made its report, adhering to some of the governors' confirmations and approving them, and rejecting others. It is these rejected claims that are contemplated by this bill.

The reason for now proposing this bill to provide for these claims is this: Many of these grants arose under treaties; all of them arose in such a way that every department of the Government has held them to be valid. I say every department, because up to the year 1812 the executive department had so held them, and since 1812 Congress has over and over again revoked the rejection of a number of these claims. In each case when one of these old rejected claims has been brought before Congress it has revoked the rejection. The Government having sold the lands, in every instance where the lands had gone into the hands of other parties Congress, where application had been made, has paid the original grantee.

On looking over the United States statutes I find that one act of this kind was passed in 1836, when James O'Hara, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, who held sixty-six hundred acres of these rejected governor's confirmations was paid by Congress the full amount of his claim. His claim having been rejected by the commission, and the claim being brought here, Congress indemnified him for the loss. A bill of the same kind was passed by Congress December 31, 1848, and another August 4, 1854, both providing for the payment of persons who held these governor's confirmations.

While some of the claimants have been relieved by Congress, a number of these claims are still unprovided for—claims in precisely the same situation. The committee thought it best, instead of providing for each case individually, to introduce a general bill which should cover the whole of them. The amount is limited in the bill so as not to exceed forty-three thousand acres altogether.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I must insist on my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This statement can only proceed by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] insists upon his objection.

Mr. PACKARD. I hope I may be allowed to make one further statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course I have no objection to my colleague completing his statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objects, the Chair will rule that his colleague [Mr. PACKARD] cannot proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am perfectly willing to withdraw my objection until my colleague has concluded his explanation; but I still reserve my right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is proceeding by unanimous consent only.

Mr. PACKARD. Now I come to the judicial decisions, and with this part of the statement I shall conclude my remarks. A case arose in Illinois where most of these lands were claimed. The supreme court of Illinois decided that this rejection was invalid; that the original grantee was entitled to the land; that the governor having confirmed the land to the grantee, that confirmation must stand. The case is reported in Breese's Illinois Reports, page 236. Another case arose wherein one Hall had purchased from the United States as public lands some of these governors' confirmations, and had occupied the land, paying to the United States $1.25 or $2.50 per acre. The case was carried by the original grantee or his representative to the supreme court of Illinois. That court ejected the Government holder. He appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which in a case reported in 6 Wallace confirmed the decision of the supreme court of Illinois. I base this claim more especially upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and I call the attention of my colleague especially, and of any others who may be inclined to object to the consideration of this bill, to this language of the Supreme Court:

> Congress is bound to regard the public treaties, and it had no power to organize a board of revision to nullify titles confirmed many years before by the authorized agents of the Government. And Congress became, afterward, so well satisfied itself of this, that it passed an act returning to the purchasers the money which they had paid for titles obtained upon the assumption of such right.

That is the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I do not know that I need say any more. I have given a short history of these claims. As I have said, every department of the Government—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial—have in succession recognized the validity of these claims. A part of these rejected claims having been provided for, the question is whether we shall now provide for the remainder.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PACKARD] asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. SPEER. I must object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist also on my objection.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN THE STATE OF MISSOURI.

Mr. BUCKNER. I now call up Senate bill No. 32, obviating the necessity of issuing patents for certain private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; which has been reported back from the Committee on Private Land Claims with an amendment.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all of the lands in the State of Missouri which have at any time heretofore been confirmed to any person or persons by any act of Congress, or by any officer or officers or board or boards of commissioners acting under or by authority of any act of Congress, shall be, and the same are hereby, granted, released, and relinquished by the United States in fee-simple to the respective owners of the equitable titles thereto, and to their respective heirs and assigns forever, as fully and as completely, in every respect whatever, as could be done by patents issued therefor according to law.

The second section provides that nothing contained in the first section of the act shall in any manner abridge, divest, impair, injure, or prejudice any valid right, title, or interest of any person or persons in or to any portion or part of the lands mentioned in said first section; and the act shall in nowise affect any lands or lots heretofore relinquished to the United States; and all persons who, under the statute of limitations of said State would be protected in their possessions had patents for the lands or lots occupied by them been issued at the date of the confirmation of the claims thereto as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have the equitable title to the lands so occupied by them within the meaning of this section, and the release herein provided for shall be as effectual in their favor as in cases where the owner derives title from the original claimant or confirmee.

The third section provides that whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall be of the opinion that the public interest no longer requires the continuance of the office of recorder of land titles in Missouri, he may close and discontinue the same; and all the records, maps, plats, field-notes, books, papers and everything else concerning, pertaining, or belonging to said office of recorder shall be delivered to the State of Missouri; provided, however, that said State shall provide by law for the reception and safe-keeping of said records, maps, plats, field-notes, books, papers, and everything else belonging to said office of recorder, as public records, and for the allowance of free access to the same by the authorities of the United States, for the purpose of taking extracts therefrom or making copies thereof without charge of any kind; and provided further, that when said office of recorder shall be closed and discontinued as aforesaid, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall forever thereafter possess and exercise all of the powers and authority and perform all the duties of said recorder.

Mr. STORM. I rise to a point of order. This disposes of property of the United States, and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCKNER. That point of order will not hold good to this bill.

Mr. STORM. It contains an appropriation of land.

Mr. BUCKNER. There is no appropriation of land in it, and if I have an opportunity I will satisfy the gentleman it does not come within the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion this bill will divest the United States of certain property, and therefore sustains the point of order. If insisted on the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCKNER. Speaker BLAINE decided this bill was not amenable to that point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is decided, and cannot now be discussed.

Mr. BUCKNER. I hope the Chair will now entertain a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole. On two different occasions I have tried to get this bill passed, but on both occasions objection was made. It is an important bill in the interest of my State.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but will inform the gentleman, after the House does go into the Committee of the Whole, it will go into the Committee on the whole Calendar, and every other bill will have to be taken up before this one.

Mr. STORM. Inasmuch as my friend from Missouri has labored so long to have this passed and as no other gentleman seems disposed to object, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being withdrawn, the bill is now before the House.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask that the amendment reported from the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the following words in the second section:

And all persons who, under the statute of limitations of said State, would be protected in their possessions had patents for the lands or lots aforesaid occupied by them been lawfully issued at the date of the confirmation of the claims thereto as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have the equitable title to the lands so occupied by them within the meaning of this section, and the release herein provided for shall be as effectual in their favor as in cases where the owner derives title from the original claimant or confirmee.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. What is the purpose of the amendment? Wherein does it change the purpose of the bill?

Mr. BUCKNER. The Senate bill attempts to apply the statute of limitations to be put in force at once. The committee thought that was going beyond their power and authority, and therefore they have stricken that out. This is equivalent to a legislative grant, and affects nobody's right whatever.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understood on the first reading of the bill it provided all right and title which the United States may have in these lands should be released to the person having the equitable interest.

Mr. BUCKNER. That is stricken out.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understand the amendment declares who has the equitable interest.

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Read the amendment again.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 792) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereto; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WRIGHT, and Mr. THURMAN.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution of the House of Representatives requiring the Congressional Printer to furnish to each member of the Senate and each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives twenty-four copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the House on the resolution of the House for the suspension of the sixth joint rule so far as it relates to certain bills revising and consolidating the statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 452) for the relief of John McHarg, late collector of internal revenue for the fifth collection district of the State of New York.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. DEWITT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3340) to amend and further to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes."

The bill was read.

The first section provides that any title or land claim the confirmation of which is claimed under the act of Congress of June 22, 1860, or March 2, 1867, or June 10, 1872, relating to the final adjustment of land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, may be prosecuted in the district court of the United States for the district wherein the land is situated, according to the provisions of the eleventh section of the aforesaid act of Congress of June 22, 1860, and in such case such claim shall not be prosecuted before any other tribunal or officer; provided that this section shall not apply to cases heretofore prosecuted or determined before the commissioners provided by said act of June 22, 1860.

The second section provides that in all cases where the confirmation of a land claim is prosecuted under the second section of the aforesaid act of Congress of June 10, 1872, satisfactory proof of the continuous, exclusive, and adverse possession under claim of ownership of the land so possessed from the date of the cession to the United States of the territory out of which the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri were formed, as required by said act of June 10, 1872, shall be prima facie evidence of title; provided that in the cases presented under said section of the act of June 10, 1872, no judgment shall be rendered for scrip or the right of entering on any other public lands of the United States subject to private entry.

The third section provides that whenever in any case prosecuted under the aforesaid acts of Congress of June 22, 1860, March 2, 1867, and the first section of the act of June 10, 1872, the validity of the claim has been recognized by the court, and the court has decreed that the plaintiff or plaintiffs is or are entitled to enter a certain number of acres upon the public lands of the United States subject to private entry, or to receive certificates of location for so much of the land the title to which has been established as has been disposed of by the United States, certificates of location shall be issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, attested by the seal of the General Land Office, and to be located as provided for in the sixth section of the aforesaid act of Congress of June 22, 1860; and said certificates of location or scrip shall be subdivided according to the request or the claimant, and as nearly as practicable in conformity with the legal divisions and subdivisions of the public lands of the United States, and shall be delivered by the General Land Office on the receipt of the parties recovering judgment or their legal representatives, and shall be, and are hereby declared to be, assignable by deed or instrument of writing made and executed after the taking effect of the act, according to such form and pursuant to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so as to vest the assignee with all the rights of the original owners of the scrip and to a patent in his own name.

The fourth section provides that all such scrip shall be received from actual settlers in payment of pre-emption claims or in commutation of homestead claims, in the same manner and to the same extent as are now authorized by law in case of military bounty land warrants.

The fifth section provides that the provisions of the act respecting the issuing, assigning, locating, and patenting of scrip and its application to pre-emption and homestead claims shall equally apply to the indemnity certificates of location provided for by the act of Congress of the 2d of June, 1858, entitled "An act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes," (United States Statutes at Large, volume 11, page 294, chapter 81,) on proof satisfactory to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the applicants for the benefit of said provisions are the confirmees of the land claims in behalf of which they apply, or the legal representatives of such confirmees.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to raise the question of order upon this bill. I think it contains an appropriation. I do not desire, however, to press the point of order if the gentleman from New York desires to be heard.

Mr. DEWITT. I wish to make a statement to show that this bill is not liable to the point of order.

Mr. SPEER. I raise the point of order that this bill provides for divesting the United States of title to real estate in a way not now authorized by law.

Mr. DEWITT. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will hear me he will find that no question of order can attach to this bill. The object of the bill is threefold. First, it transfers jurisdiction in these cases from the register and receiver of the land office in the State of Louisiana to the district court of the United States for confirmation of land claims. By the act of 1860, which this bill proposes to amend, it is provided that in cases where land is claimed under a grant from Spain before the cession of the Territory of Louisiana to the United States, the party may go before the registers and receivers of the land office, who by the act of 1860 are appointed commissioners, and file their proof, and that the registers and receivers may transmit their proof with their approval or disapproval to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, and that he with his approval or disapproval shall transmit the claim to Congress.

By the eleventh section of the act of 1860, where the parties have not been in possession for twenty years they may go before the district court of the United States for the district of Louisiana and there try their claim as in other States, and the United States district attorney is directed, in case of an adverse decision, to take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and upon the affirmation by the Supreme Court of the United States of the judgment of the district court, then where lands have been sold or have come to the United States, scrip is directed to be issued to the plaintiff in judgment.

Now, the object of the first section is this: that instead of having two jurisdictions, the parties going before the register and receiver and then Congress being troubled by the claim, they shall all go before the district court of Louisiana with the same direction, that there shall be an appeal from the decision of that court, if it be unfavorable to the United States, to the Supreme Court, thus making these claims a matter for adjudication by the courts and not by a committee of Congress. That is the object of the first section of the bill, and it provides that any claim presented and prosecuted before the commissioners may be reviewed in the district court. There is a proviso, which is very broad in its terms, attached to the section, which is that it shall not apply to cases heretofore prosecuted or determined before the commissioners provided by said act of June 22, 1860. There can be no point of order as against that section. It simply gives to the district court of the State of Louisiana jurisdiction of these cases. They had jurisdiction of every single case where the party had not been in possession for twenty years.

The second section is a mere re-enactment of the second section of the act of 1872. The last Congress passed an act that written proof should not be necessary in these cases; that where the party had been in adverse, continuous, and exclusive possession of the land from the time of the Spanish grant up to the time when he presented his claim, it was not necessary to have written proof of the grant. That bill was passed by the last Congress. It was the second section of the act of 1872. It provided that "in all cases where the confirmation of a land claim is prosecuted under the second section of the aforesaid act of Congress of June 10, 1872, satisfactory proof of the continuous, exclusive, and adverse possession under claim of ownership of the land so possessed from the date of the cession to the United States of the territory out of which the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri were formed, as required by said act of June 10, 1872, shall be prima facie evidence of title."

Now, that act of Congress and that section of the act intended to give to the party that could prove possession from the time of the cession of the Territory the right to have his claim confirmed. But by a construction in the Land Office of the first section of the act of 1860 it was held that written proof was necessary, and thus the intent of Congress was nullified. All that this second section does is to carry out the intent of the last Congress and to allow the party who, in the strong language of the section, can furnish proof of continuous, exclusive, and adverse possession to have that considered as prima facie evidence of title.

In these cases it is provided, of course, that no certificate of location shall issue to the parties in possession of the land, because they are not entitled to claim it; the United States not having alienated the land.

Mr. SPEER. Does not this bill provide a manner different from that now authorized by law of divesting the United States of title to property?

Mr. DEWITT. The gentleman may be right, if the second section of the act of 1872 is to be construed in the way the Commissioner of the Land Office construes it. By that act Congress intended that if these parties could prove continuous possession for a certain length of time they should have a title and right to their claim. By what I contend to be an erroneous construction of that section the Commissioner of the General Land Office nullifies that intention of Congress.

I now come to the third section of this bill. The object of that section is to provide that in cases where parties have obtained judgment against the United States in the district court of the United States for the State of Louisiana, and those judgments have been appealed to the Supreme Court and been affirmed by that court, when the United States has alienated the land to which the judgments declare the parties to be entitled, then in issuing the scrip or the certificates of location, to which by the act of 1860 the parties are entitled, those certificates shall be made assignable, so that the assignees can locate the land and obtain patents therefor in their own names.

Mr. CONGER. Can the gentleman inform the House how much of this scrip might probably be issued?

Mr. DEWITT. There were before the Committee on Private Land Claims four or five judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States, which in the aggregate, by the terms of the decrees of the court, which this Congress cannot annul, call for two hundred and fifty thousand or three hundred thousand acres of scrip.

Mr. CONGER. Would that be the limit of the amount of scrip to be thrown on the market?

Mr. DEWITT. If the gentleman will allow me I will explain. By the act of 1860, where the lands to which parties have been declared entitled by a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States have been alienated so that they cannot be entered upon by the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the court is directed to decree to the parties so entitled a certificate of location authorizing them to enter upon any public lands subject to private entry, and locate at the rate of $1.25 per acre. This bill does not propose to change that. There are four or five judgments now on record in the Supreme Court of the United States, declaring these parties to have a right to certificates of location because the land to which they have been adjudged entitled was alienated by the United States. The only effect of this bill is to provide that that scrip instead of being issued to the party adjudged entitled to the land, or to his legal representatives, as now required by law, may be made assignable, and the assignee can take the patent to the land in his own name. As the law now stands the party obtaining the judgment of the United States court, having a certificate of location, and selling the certificate to anybody else, that person to whom he sells cannot get a legal title with a patent in his own name, but he must take a patent in the name of the plaintiff or his legal representative. And if there be any question whether he be the assignee or not, he must go into court, he must go outside of the record. All this third section does is to put the assignee in a position, when he buys a certificate of location issued in obedience to a decree of the Supreme Court of the United States, to go to the land office and demand a patent in his own name, having located land under the certificate of location. That is the only effect of the section. It does not alienate an inch of the land of the United States. All this land has been declared alienated by the Supreme Court of the United States. This section only affects the issue of the scrip, and the clearness of the title of the assignee of the certificate of location.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Has it not always been the case that the United States has recognized the assignment of certificates of land, whether under a land warrant or by cash entry?

Mr. DEWITT. Certainly.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Then what is the difficulty here?

Mr. DEWITT. The difficulty is this: a man buys a certificate of location and locates land under that certificate. He comes to the land office and demands a patent for that land. What kind of a patent does he get? Not one in his own name, but in the name of the assignor, the original plaintiff or his legal representative. If there is a question as to the title, he must go into court. As the law now stands a party prosecuting his claim in the district court of Louisiana, gaining it in that court and coming up here and obtaining a judgment from the Supreme Court of the United States affirming his title, is entitled to a certificate of location of so many hundred acres of the land of the United States, and the United States having alienated so many acres he is entitled to have such a certificate of location issued to him or to his legal representatives.

He gets his certificate of location and sells it to some other man; that man goes and locates the land under the certificate of location, and then goes to the land office for his patent. He cannot get the patent in his own name; he must take it in the name of the plaintiff in the judgment or his legal representative; that is the way the language of the act runs. Consequently when there arises a question as to the title, probably in some future generation, it is necessary to go outside of the record to prove that he was the assignee. This bill provides that when the party buys the certificate of location, locates the land, and then comes to the land office, the patent shall issue to him as the assignee of the plaintiff in that judgment.

Mr. ELDREDGE. In all entries heretofore made under a certificate of location of a land warrant or under a certificate issued for a cash entry, the United States has always recognized the assignment of such scrip or certificate of entry if made before the issuance of the patent. That, as I understand, is all that is asked in this case—that the party entering the land shall have a certificate of entry and that he may assign it if he does so prior to the issuance of the patent. That right has always been recognized in the practice of the Government so far as I know; and I have had a great deal of experience in cases of this kind in the earlier days of Wisconsin.

Mr. DEWITT. The bill as introduced provided that these certificates of location should be transferable by delivery. There was some objection to that; and the bill was submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It may be proper to say that the bill as now before the House not only has the approbation of the Commissioner, but so far as regards the provision of the third section and its alteration from a provision for transfer by delivery, it is his own work. The bill has been framed upon consultation between a sub-committee of the Committee on Private Land Claims and the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and it has his unqualified indorsement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order that the second section of the bill dispossesses the Government of titles which it now holds.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules the point of order well taken; and the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEWITT. Rather than have the bill go to the Committee of the Whole, I will consent to strike out the second section so that in this respect the law will stand as it does under the act of 1872.

Mr. SPEER. Does not this require unanimous consent?

Mr. ARCHER. If the gentleman from New York will allow me to say two sentences——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The arrangement suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEWITT] can only be made by unanimous consent. If there is no objection the gentleman having charge of the bill will be permitted to strike out the second section. The bill being thus modified, does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] insist on his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEWITT] surrendered the floor?

Mr. DEWITT. No, sir; I desire to retain it for the purpose of calling the previous question.

The first amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 15, of section 1, insert "presented" after the word "heretofore;" so that it will read: "Provided, That this section shall not apply to cases heretofore presented, prosecuted, or determined, before the commissioners provided by said act of June 22, 1860."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

At the end of the first section add the following words: "Or before commissioners or other officers under any act of Congress relating to the confirmation of private land claims."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by inserting before "land claims," in the seventh line of the first section, the word "private."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBER. I move to amend by inserting after the word "States," in section 3, line 20, these words: "in quarter sections."

The object of that amendment, Mr. Speaker, is this: These claims are extensive, embracing large amounts of land. Under the reading of the section they would have the right to these certificates of location issued in forty-acre location certificates, which are worth more than quarter-section certificates. If a person had sixteen hundred acres he would have it all issued in forty-acre tracts and go all over the country to locate them. It would therefore injure the sale of the public lands. This provides as nearly as practicable for the issue of these certificates of location in quarter sections of one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then you want to say not less than a quarter section?

Mr. HOLMAN. That seems to be a good amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARRERE. I move to strike out all of the first section of the bill. It simply transfers the jurisdiction of these questions from where it is now to the courts of the United States. By law this matter is referred to the registers and receivers to determine, and their report goes to the Land Office, and by the Land Office is referred to Congress, which finally decides.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are unable to hear what the gentleman says, and I hope order will be preserved in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore called the House to order.

Mr. BARRERE. The reason for my amendment is this: Ample provision is now made for the adjudication of these claims according to the established custom with reference to this Territory since the time of its acquisition. The first law in reference to the settlement of these claims was passed, I believe, in 1805, by which they were to be settled by the register and receiver, subject to the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. At one time they were subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but now are subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; they are then referred to Congress, and Congress determines the validity of the claims. This law is in force now, and will continue in force for a year.

The proposition now is to change this, to place the matter within the jurisdiction of the courts. My objection to that is this: This is the property of the United States. We ought to recognize the sovereignty of the United States, and that the legislative and executive departments of the Government are competent to determine the rights of the Government. It is not necessary, in giving these claimants whatever rights they may have, to go into the courts. The claims of these parties to these lands are now determined by the register and receiver. If we pass this law we will transfer their adjudication to a tribunal which has not possession of the records, no knowledge about them or means of getting it. They will have therefore to act upon transcripts of the records. The consequence will be these cases will be tried before the courts in an ex parte manner, and the Government of the United States will not be properly represented. It will open the door to all kinds of fraud. We know how difficult it has been to keep out frauds, and how many have been perpetrated. In 1830, in a report on private land claims, it was stated they thought it was unwise to make any general law by which to settle these private land claims; that every claim ought to be left to stand on its own merits. If you transfer these cases to another tribunal, it will be the means of allowing all sorts of jobs to be run through against the Government.

It may be said, however, that the register and receiver and the Commissioner of the General Land Office are not competent to pass on these questions. Such has always been the practice in that locality. When they are passed upon by the register and receiver they come to the Land Office here, and they are certainly competent here to pass on them; and if they are not, why Congress is competent to pass on this question and do ample justice and prevent these frauds. The same objection, I maintain, would apply to the courts. If the registers and receivers are not competent and honest men to pass on this question, the same objection may be brought against the courts, and it may be said that they under certain circumstances are not competent to pass upon these questions. It seems to me that between the courts of Louisiana and the Congress of the United States is the safest way to have these questions determined.

Mr. DEWITT. It appears to me that the process of confirmation whereby the party goes before the registers and receivers in Louisiana and the registers and receivers have no power to confirm his title but only to approve or disprove, and then it comes to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and then to Congress, where the claim must come in any event, is much more liable to give room for jobs and fraud than the mode that remits everything to the courts. We must assume that the courts are pure. This first section transfers jurisdiction to the district court of the State of Louisiana, and the district attorney is bound to appeal in case of a decision adverse to the United States. So that in any event we have the confirmation and judgment of the Supreme Court before the party is entitled to any lands. It seems to me that that is the proper mode of confirmation; and if there is anything praiseworthy in this bill it is that section which takes away from Congress the trouble of attending to all these private land claims and remits them to the courts of the country. I cannot, therefore, consent to the amendment. I now call the previous question on the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman calls the previous question, I ask that the first section be again read.

The Clerk again read the first section.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me to offer an amendment; to add these words:

If any such decision shall be adverse to the United States the Attorney-General shall appeal the same therefrom to the Supreme Court of the United States.

That is the law now as to a large class of cases, but not the law as to the cases provided for by this bill.

Mr. DEWITT. This act is an act to amend the provisions of the act for the final adjustment of private land claims. I see no objection, however, to the amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the third section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw the call for the previous question?

Mr. DEWITT. I consent to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] being offered.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the gentleman will hear my amendment read.

Mr. DEWITT. Yes; I will hear it read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to add to the third section the following:

Provided, That the certificates of location or scrip provided for in this section shall not be subject to location in any other State or Territory than the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri.

Mr. DEWITT. I do not admit that amendment; and I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 60, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. SPEER. On this bill, involving three hundred thousand acres of public lands, I must insist upon a quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DEWITT and Mr. SPEER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. LOWNDES. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MAYNARD. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 32 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 18, nays 122, not voting 149; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Bromberg, Buffinton, Freeman Clarke, Eldredge, Harrison, Herndon, Hubbell, Lawson, Lowndes, Marshall, Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, Sener, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Speer, and Woodford—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barnum, Barrere, Begole, Berry, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Bundy, Burleigh, Cain, Caldwell, Cessna, Comingo, Conger, Crounse, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, DeWitt, Dobbins, Donnan, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Field, Freeman, Giddings, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, E. Rockwood Hoar, Holman, Hoskins, Howe, Hunter, Hyde, Lawrence, Lowe, Lynch, Magee, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McLean, Merriam, Milliken, Morey, Morrison, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Packard, Packer, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Rapier, Robbins, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sheats, Sheldon, Sloss, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, Sprague, Standiford, St. John, Stone, Storm, Taylor, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Vance, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, and John D. Young—122.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Barber, Barry, Bass, Beck, Burchard, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Cason, Amos Clark, jr., John B. Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crocker, Crooke, Crossland, Crutchfield, Davis, Dawes, Duell, Eden, Elliott, Farwell, Fort, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Glover, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Houghton, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hynes, Jewett, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Luttrell, Martin, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Mills, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Neal, Negley, Nesmith, Nunn, Orth, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Purman, Rainey, Randall, Ransier, Ray, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Sessions, Shanks, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, Smart, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Stanard, Starkweather, Stephens, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tremain, Waddell, Jasper D. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, Willie, Wilshire, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—149.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. BANNING. My colleague, Mr. SAYLER, is detained in his room, sick.

Mr. SPEER. The gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. PIKE, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. HAZELTON, requested me to state that they were detained from the House to-night by illness.

Mr. YOUNG, of Kentucky. I wish to state that the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. BARRY, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. SHEATS. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. WHITE, is not well.

Mr. MERRIAM. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MONROE, is unwell and unable to be here to-night. I have been requested by four members of the Illinois delegation, Mr. FARWELL, Mr. HURLBUT, Mr. WARD, and Mr. RAY, to say that there was a delegation here of over one hundred editors from Illinois, and they were obliged to attend an entertainment given to them to-night.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. My colleague, Mr. SMART, is absent on account of serious family illness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon seconding the call for the previous question, upon which no quorum voted.

Mr. SPEER. I move a call of the House, unless there must be a call of the House when the vote shows there is no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a question to be decided by the House and not by the Chair.

The question was taken upon ordering a call of the House; and upon a division there were—ayes 44, noes 70.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. MAYNARD called for tellers on the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. CESSNA. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 57.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. SPEER called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have tellers first.

Mr. PACKARD. I ask permission to make a short statement to the House.

Mr. SPEER. I insist upon the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague [Mr. PACKARD] desires to submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair, and in the confusion he is not heard by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. PACKARD. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. LAWRENCE. To make a speech?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to a question of order. The Chair had already announced the decision of the House to be in favor of the motion to adjourn, when the division was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair withdrew that announcement on the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PACKARD. I think if I can be heard for a minute or two this difficulty may be all settled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent.

No objection was made.

Mr. PACKARD. The Committee on Private Land Claims obtained an order of the House for a session this evening solely and only for the purpose of acting upon certain bills which we have been considering in the committee during this whole session. It was for no other reason. We did not desire to meet for the purpose of getting into a snarl or a wrangle, or to have a call of the House. We desire to avoid it. I think I may say that every member of that committee would prefer to adjourn now, if we can have an understanding that some future time will be allowed us for our bills. The House now is not in a condition perhaps to give the unanimous consent which I shall ask, because there is not a quorum present. But I want to say that I shall hereafter ask, on behalf of the Committee on Private Land Claims, that we shall have one hour during some day for the consideration of reports from that committee. If it can be understood now distinctly by all the members who are here present that we will have that time allowed us, I will myself move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is now pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my colleague [Mr. PACKARD] will make his request now.

Mr. RUSK. It is in order to ask it now.

Mr. PACKARD. Then I will ask that we may have one hour on next Tuesday after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SENER. I object, because next Tuesday is assigned to reports from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

Mr. PACKARD. Then I will ask for one hour on Wednesday of next week.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made to the request of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PACKARD,] the question recurs upon ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 64, not voting 151; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Ashe, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Begole, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bradley, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Burleigh, Cain, Caldwell, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Comingo, Curtis, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eldredge, Freeman, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, John W. Hazelton, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hoskins, Hunter, Hyde, Lawson, Lowndes, Lynch, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, McLean, Merriam, Morrison, Niblack, Niles, Packard, Packer, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Randall, Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Sawyer, Sener, Sloss, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Speer, Sprague, St. John, Storm, Taylor, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, and Charles W. Willard—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Archer, Atkins, Barnum, Berry, Biery, Bowen, Bright, Bundy, Coburn, Conger, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, DeWitt, Donnan, Eames, Field, Giddings, Hancock, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, Howe, Hubbell, Lawrence, Lowe, Magee, Maynard, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Milliken, Morey, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Isaac C. Parker, Pendleton, Pierce, Rapier, Robbins, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sheats, Sheldon, Standiford, Stone, Todd, Vance, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Woodworth, and John D. Young—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Averill, Barry, Bass, Beck, Burchard, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crocker, Crooke, Crossland, Crutchfield, Davis, Dawes, Duell, Eden, Elliott, Farwell, Fort, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Glover, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Houghton, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hynes, Jewett, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Luttrell, Marshall, Martin, McJunkin, McKee, McNulta, Mills, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Neal, Negley, Nesmith, Nunn, Orth, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Perry, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Ray, Read, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Sessions, Shanks, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Southard, Stanard, Starkweather, Stephens, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tremain, Waddell, Jasper D. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, Willie, Wilshire, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—151.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. BROMBERG said: I desire to state that the gentleman from New York, Mr. POTTER, has been called home on account of the illness of one of his children.

The House (at nine o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) then adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BELL: A paper for the establishment of a post-route in the State of Georgia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of R. S. McConkey and others, for a post-route from Lynn, Saint Clair County, to Burnside, Lapeer County, Michigan, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Susan D. Anderson, for arrears of half-pay due her father, Lieutenant Joseph Wheaton, of the Army of the Revolution, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Matthew Callaghan, to be compensated for devising a plan to decrease the business of the Dead-letter Office, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HANCOCK: The petition of citizens of San Antonio, Texas, for the passage of a law to define a gross of matches and provide uniform packages for the same, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Richard H. Garrett, of Caroline County, Virginia, for compensation for property burned in capture of J. Wilkes Booth, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of Albert Doolittle and 100 others, of California, for the construction of a military wagon-road from Fort Jones, via Happy Camp, to Arcota, California, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of A. J. Cook and 100 others, relative to the Fort Crook military reservation in Shasta County, California, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAYNARD: The petition of Thomas Burrows, late of Company K, Tenth Illinois Volunteers, for relief, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POTTER: The petition of Charlotte A. Von Cort, widow and sole executrix of Charles J. Von Cort, for compensation for the use in the United States Navy of his invention of submarine torpedo shell, with its appliances and adaptations, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH, of Louisiana: The petition of the police jury of the parish of Bossier, Louisiana, and of residents of Red River Valley, for an appropriation to improve the navigation of Red River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WILSON, of Iowa: The petition of citizens of Montezuma, Iowa, for the construction of a double-track freight railway from tide-water to the Missouri River, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 3, 1874.

The Senate met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives in regard to the enrollment of House bills Nos. 1215, 2879, and 3349, relating to the revision of the laws.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 32) obviating the necessity of issuing patents for certain private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2653) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work upon the public buildings; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3097) in relation to courts and judicial officers in the Territory of Utah.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 822) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States;" and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania engaged in the transportation of swine, praying that House bill No. 2650 be so amended as to exempt shippers of swine from the obligation to unload them from the cars every twenty-four hours; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Dennis J. Keyes and others, of Des Moines, Iowa, praying the passage of a bill to define a gross of friction matches and to provide for uniform packages; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAGER. I have a memorial signed by A. M. Winn, president of the Mechanics' State Council of California, transmitting a preamble and resolutions adopted by a very large mass meeting of workingmen held in San Francisco on the 18th of May, the substance of which is as follows:

In favor of maintaining the eight-hour law as a necessity to the social improvement of the working classes; condemning the action of the Government officials who have evaded the law; approving the action of the President of the United States in reversing the unjust rulings of Government officials; condemning the action of A. B. Mullett, Supervising Architect, in regard to his action on the eight-hour law as extra-official, and asking his removal; in favor of imposing a tax on the holders of United States bonds, that is, that those bonds shall be proportionately taxed with other property; protesting against any further grant of United States lands to subsidize railroads; against Chinese cheap labor; denouncing the treaty with China as a curse to the country; and against the contract system on public works. I presume the memorial had better be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I move it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON presented the petition of W. G. Ford, of Memphis, Tennessee, praying compensation for cotton taken and sold by the United States Government during the late war, the proceeds of which were paid to the quartermaster at New Orleans, and asking that his claim may be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3173) for the relief of James A. McCullah, late collector of the fifth district of Missouri, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2101) for the relief of the owners of the steamer Clara Dolsen, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3574) explanatory of the act of June 30, 1864, reported it with an amendment.

IMPORTATIONS FOR A ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3500) to authorize the importation of certain animals for the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, free of duty, to report the same back, without amendment. I think there can be no objection to it, and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read. It provides that all animals, birds, and reptiles, which shall be imported by the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, in good faith, for exhibition and not for sale at their garden at Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but in case any animal, bird, or reptile imported under this provision shall within three years from the date of its importation be sold, it shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed on such object by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation; and in case any animal, bird, or reptile imported under these provisions shall be sold within that period without payment of duty as required by law, all the penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be enforced against such articles and against the Zoological Society of Philadelphia.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask to hear the enumeration of what may be imported read again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That all animals, birds, and reptiles, which shall be imported by the Zoological Society of Philadelphia.

Mr. SCOTT. Now read the purpose for which they are imported.

Mr. CONKLING. I know the purpose. Arabian horses would be within this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CONKLING. I was going to make a remark, but I wait to hear the answer which the Senator from Pennsylvania wants to be given. He wants the text read.

Mr. SCOTT. Let the first section be read. It will give the information desired.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I have two remarks to make about this bill, and I make them in the nature of an objection perhaps to its being considered at once. In the first place, assuming the bill to be within the Constitution, I understand it to do very much more than any of us would undertake to defend. It applies to all animals imported for exhibition by a certain society. Of course that includes domestic animals, as horses, if they import them for exhibition; and although the Senator from Pennsylvania smiles, I do not think there is any occasion for smiling at the idea of importing horses for exhibition. I shall want to be heard on that if there is no answer except a smile.

However, the chief suggestion that I rose to make is this: In view of the law, as the Judiciary Committee held it in the case of the Boston fire, and as the Senate negatively at least affirmed it to be, upon what principle is it that, not designating a bell or an article upon which we remit duties, we undertake to say in advance that all articles of certain descriptions brought to a certain port for a certain importer shall go scot-free?

Mr. SCOTT. Not to a certain port.

Mr. CONKLING. Literally scot-free in this case of duties. My honorable friend says "not to a certain port." That was one of the ingenious things said in the case of the Boston fire. Some Senator said: "Who knows that all these importations will be to the port of Boston; they may be partly to the port of New York and partly to the port of Portland;" and all that was considered. It does not touch the question at all. Here is an exceptional premium and opportunity offered at a certain port or to those residing at that port importing certain articles; and it seems to me that it is a precedent going much beyond any of those then relied upon, with the single exception perhaps of the Chicago bill and the bill for Portland, both of which were passed under circumstances which we remember. If we are going now to affirm once for all that we may exempt in advance all articles of certain descriptions imported by certain persons without violating the Constitution, then this bill in that regard should pass. Unless we intend to take that ground, I submit the bill is too broad to be defended.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CONKLING. I think it ought to lie over, but I will not object against the desire of the Senator from Pennsylvania for the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to be heard for one moment. The Senator from New York is assimilating this bill to those which were passed in the cases of Chicago and Portland. If he had reflected a moment he would have found I think quite a number of bills on the statute-book of a character similar to this, and designed for a very different purpose than that accomplished by the bills in the cases of Chicago and Portland. My information is that a bill of exactly this character, indeed I think in the words in which this bill is drawn, was passed for the purpose of permitting the importation of animals that are now in the park at New York. There are numerous bills which have permitted articles that are imported for the encouragement of art to come in free of duty. There are certain books for the encouragement of learning that are permitted to come in free of duty. This society is one formed for the purpose of the encouragement of natural science. It is not a society that intends to make an exhibition of the animals imported for purposes of gain. It is, as its name imports, simply and purely a zoological society, not an organization or corporation for the purpose of making profit out of the animals that are imported. It has had set apart for it by the city authorities of Philadelphia a small portion of Fairmount Park, some twenty-five or thirty acres, I believe, of ground peculiarly adapted to this purpose, in which these animals are proposed to be kept. They have an agent abroad at this time who has been making purchases of animals and birds that as I am informed are upon the way now. Most of them will arrive at the port of San Francisco, according to my information on the subject, and they desire to secure the passage of this act, similar in all respects to acts passed for the same purpose heretofore in other localities, so that the same benefits may be extended to them that other organizations of this character have reaped the advantage of. That is the sole purpose of it, and I hope that the bill will not be incumbered with obligations of this character.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from Pennsylvania is quite right in saying that similar bills have passed. We passed a bill here the other day, I think in the morning hour, without objection, which authorized some individual or corporation, I forget which, to import certain paintings, if he should become the purchaser of them, in Europe. There is no doubt in my mind that that bill and this bill and all such bills are unconstitutional.

When the Chicago bill was before us, I opposed its passage; and did so because I believed it was unconstitutional. I opposed that bill to defend the Constitution. I did so against the interest of a great many of my particular friends in Chicago, who were anxious to have that bill passed, and I would have been as happy to accommodate them as any Senator if I had not believed that to do so would violate a plain provision of the Constitution.

Take the bill passed the other morning, to illustrate the point. That bill authorized John Smith, for instance, to import free of duty all the paintings he should buy, painted by a certain artist in Europe. Did not that give him a monopoly of that trade?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it was a bill to remit duties on certain machinery.

Mr. CARPENTER. No, a bill to authorize somebody to import all the paintings of a certain school he should buy in Europe, and it passed through without question, and I signed the bill the other day enrolled.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not remember it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Perhaps the Senator was not in his seat. I remember the bill particularly, because I thought at the time it was unconstitutional, and if I had not been in the chair I should have made the objection. There is no difference between such a bill and a bill providing that John Smith may for one year or two years import tea and coffee free of duty. You may say that one is for the encouragement of the fine arts. So it is. The other is for the encouragement of good breakfasts; and one is as much within the provisions of the Constitution as the other.

A law passed here authorizing everybody to import paintings or statuary or animals for exhibition is a constitutional law, because it is uniform; it applies to all and has the same operation in every State. A law which makes any discrimination, a law which gives to John Smith or to a corporation, no matter what the motive may be, a right of importation of articles which is not enjoyed by the people in common, is clearly unconstitutional. The constitutional provision is that these regulations shall be uniform throughout the United States; and whoever has such a bill passed for his benefit has a monopoly of that trade. The Constitution is trampled under foot to a greater degree, that is to say the effect of it is more manifest, if you passed a bill authorizing John Smith to import tea and coffee for two years free of duty, because everybody would see at once that that would give him a monopoly of the trade. But so far as the Constitution is concerned, it makes no difference whether the article be tea, or coffee, or paintings, or statuary, or any other article.

I have no hostility to this zoological institution; but let me call attention to the farmers who are cultivating improved stock all over the country, not for exhibition, not for sale. Suppose they ask permission to import stock free of duty? Their claim is higher than that of this garden, which as I understand exhibits animals and reptiles for gain.

Mr. SHERMAN. Such stock can be imported now free of duty under a general law.

Mr. CARPENTER. I have no objection to that, and am willing to extend it to all animals and all reptiles if the Senator from Pennsylvania thinks it a good thing to do. But if the State of Pennsylvania or this particular institution is to have the monopoly of reptiles, then it is unconstitutional. It is not that I object that all the reptiles should land in Pennsylvania instead of Wisconsin; but it is simply because the Constitution says that Wisconsin shall have as good a chance at reptiles as Pennsylvania and just as good reptiles, just as good a chance in the reptile business as any other State, that I object to this bill.

Mr. SCOTT. It always affords me a great deal of pleasure to discuss a constitutional question with the Senator from Wisconsin, and as he and I agree on the general policy which ought to be adopted on the question of encouraging institutions of this character, and his objection is simply because but one institution is embodied in this bill, I should prefer to let the bill lie over so that other business may be disposed of that is more important, and let us take the chances of having a general provision of this character in a bill in which I presume we shall be afforded the opportunity of inserting it in a very few days. I will not take up the time of the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FREEDMAN'S SAVING AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. SCOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3265) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes, to report it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and as it is important that action should be had on this subject now, I am instructed to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That within ten days after the passage of this act the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint three competent men, to be styled and known as commissioners, whose duty it shall be under the direction of the Comptroller to take possession of the books, assets, and records of every description of said corporation and its subordinate branches, who shall have authority to collect all debts due and claims belonging to such corporation, and upon the order of a court of record of competent jurisdiction, sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and on a like order sell all the real and personal property, or any part thereof, of said association on such terms as the court shall direct. And such commissioners shall deposit all moneys collected with the Treasurer of the United States subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, and at least once in three months make a statement to the Comptroller of the Currency and to the trustees of the corporation of all their acts and proceedings, and from time to time the Comptroller shall make a ratable dividend of the money so paid over to him by such commissioners on all claims which shall have been proved to the satisfaction of said commissioners or adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. That said commissioners, before entering upon their duties, shall each execute a bond to the United States with good sureties in the penal sum of $25,000 conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties as commissioners aforesaid, and shall take an oath to faithfully and honestly perform their duties as such, which bond shall be executed to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be approved by him, and by him safely kept; and whenever said commissioners shall have executed the bonds and taken the oath aforesaid they shall be invested with the legal title to all the property of said corporation and shall have full power and authority to sell the same and make deeds of conveyance of its real estate in the name of said corporation; and said commissioners may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, employ such agents and attorneys as may be necessary to assist in closing up the affairs of said corporation, whose compensation, together with the expenses attending the settlement of the affairs of said corporation, shall be paid out of its assets before the distribution of the proceeds thereof; and the said commissioners shall receive an annual salary, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, not to exceed $3,000 per annum.

SEC. 3. That the Comptroller may, if in his judgment the interests of the corporation or of the creditors will be promoted thereby, invest the money of such association on deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, subject to his order, in interest-bearing bonds of the United States, which bonds may be subsequently sold by him, and the interest accruing on such bonds together with the principal thereof be distributed among the creditors as provided by law.

SEC. 4. That if at any time before the business of the corporation shall be finally closed, the Comptroller of the Currency and the said commissioners shall be of the opinion that the business of such corporation can be resumed and carried on in pursuance with the terms of the original act of incorporation, the said commissioners may, with the advice and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, surrender all the assets and property then remaining in their hands to the board of trustees which may be elected and continued in office for that purpose as provided in the act to incorporate the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, approved March 3, 1865.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency, with each of his annual reports to Congress, to submit a statement of the condition of said savings-bank and the proceedings in relation thereto under this act.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask a question. It seems to me the language is not so drawn that the salaries of the commissioners will come out of the available funds that may be collected. It says the expenses of collection shall be so paid, and then goes on to say that the commissioners shall receive $3,000 each. If it is intended that their pay shall come out of the assets, I think it ought to be so expressly stated in the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. It is so stated.

Mr. SARGENT. A few words will make it so.

Mr. SCOTT. It is stated that all expenses of collection shall be so paid, which of course embrace the salaries of the commissioners.

Mr. SARGENT. It speaks about the employment of agents and attorneys, which might be taken as the expenses of the collection; subsequently it goes on to state what the pay of the commissioners shall be. If it said "the expenses of collection, including the salaries of the commissioners, shall be paid," that would cover it.

Mr. SCOTT. That is certainly the intention. If there is an omission, there is no objection to rectifying it.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to insert after the words "expenses attending the settlement of the affairs of said corporation," in the second section, the words "including the salaries of the commissioners."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed, and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRESENT FROM KING OF SIAM TO NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs' to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 870) giving the assent of Congress to the acceptance by the officers of the United States ship Monocacy of silver medals presented to them by the King of Siam, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. This is an unimportant bill, which was introduced by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUCKINGHAM] at the request of his colleague, who is now absent ill, and I hope there will be no objection to its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to give the consent of Congress to the acceptance by the officers of the United States ship Monocacy of the silver medals presented to them by the King of Siam on the occasion of the recent interchange of civilities between His Majesty and the officers of the ship representing the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. CAMERON. I object to the passage of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to inquire for what services or acts those medals were given.

Mr. ANTHONY. There were no services rendered, but these were small silver medals given by the King of Siam to the officers of this ship after having witnessed their maneuvers and evolutions as an evidence of his admiration for their discipline and efficiency.

Mr. CAMERON. I think we ought not to allow our officers to be receiving these compliments from foreign powers. It is being carried too far.

Mr. MORTON. I simply desire to say that I think this bill is outside of the principle upon which bills of this kind have usually been based. We have allowed officers to accept presents where they were intended as a reward or as an honor for distinguished services rendered, or for acts of humanity where something has been done in the way of heroism to save life or even property; but I have never known a bill to pass allowing presents to be given to our officers as mere matters of courtesy and of compliment. I think when we adopt that principle and allow presents to be made as mere matters of courtesy and compliment, where no services have been rendered, it is a departure that is not a good one. As long as these presents are confined to a recognition of acts of heroism and humanity or distinguished services, they are complimentary and are valuable; but when they are to be given as mere matters of compliment, for unusual politeness, I think we take away their merit. For one I cannot vote for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the passage of the bill, and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. CAMERON. I rose to object. I desire the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the yeas and nays are to be taken I have a word to say on the bill. I fully agree with the general principle which the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Indiana lay down. This, however, comes between the two cases. These medals were not presented for any act of heroism or for any great services, nor as a mere compliment, but as a manifestation of the appreciation of the King of Siam for the efficiency and the character of this American vessel. Now, I would allow an officer to accept such a present from the King of Siam when I would not allow him to accept it from the Emperor of Germany or the Queen of England. I think there is a difference. The government of Siam is a semi-civilized government and it is rapidly advancing, and it has friendly relations with us which I think it is very much for our interest to encourage, and the refusal to allow these officers to accept this little token of his admiration for our Navy from the King of Siam would be construed by him differently from what it would be by an enlightened power.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I am not aware that any offer of this kind has been refused since I have been a member of the Senate. I think that in every instance Congress has authorized officers of the Navy to accept of any present which has been offered by foreign powers, and I should be very sorry to establish a different rule upon a case of this kind. It seems to me we had better pass this bill, and allow these officers to accept this gift, and then if we choose to refuse hereafter, let it be by a general rule.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do think there is a great deal in the suggestion made by the Senator from Rhode Island. I think there is enough in it to justify us in passing this bill. The interests of commerce are promoted by cultivating the best relations with all the peoples of the earth, and in approaching different nations we are bound to approach them in different ways. As the Senator well says, we might with all the propriety in the world refuse to do a thing with one power that for the best of reasons we would do with another. We have some commerce with Siam. This little thing may help it. It can do no harm. It is perhaps an act of courtesy to the authorities of that government, if it be not demanded by our own officers, and for that reason I think it is wise to pass this bill, and I hope it will be allowed to pass.

Mr. CAMERON. I dislike very much to differ with the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Rhode Island, and this does seem to be a very little affair, but it may lead to bad consequences, I think. There are many applications now in the hands of Senators asking to be allowed to receive similar compliments to this. I do not see how this can gratify or flatter the King of Siam. Probably he does not know anything about it. He does not know probably that the Constitution of our country prevents an officer of the United States from receiving a compliment of this kind without the consent of Congress. He has perhaps never thought about it at all. These officers have rendered him some little civility or some courtesy which one gentleman would offer to another and without expecting a reward for it. But if we go on in this course we shall have our officers of the Government covered with insignia of respect and honor from foreign governments.

I think it is a bad precedent, and I think it destroys the influence of such rewards for the humane efforts for which such compliments have been heretofore allowed to be received by our officers. It is perfectly right if a sailor jumps into the sea and saves the life of a foreign subject that the government of that country should confer a compliment upon him. It is perfectly right that when a man in the wide ocean risks his own life to save a fellow-being he should be complimented. If he is a citizen of our own country we should compliment him, as we do, and we never have refused to permit the acceptance of such a compliment when offered by a foreign government to a person in our service who has rendered an extraordinary service to humanity. It is entirely different from an affair of this kind. There are two or three applications now in my possession from gentlemen of the Navy asking to be allowed to receive some substantial compliment because they have been civil to a foreign potentate who happened to enter their vessels. These are the cases of civility which no gentleman would receive a reward for in private life, and why should an officer have a decoration stuck upon his button-hole because he did the honors or civilities of his ship to a person who came there? This case is similar to that, and I trust the bill will not pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, my friend from Pennsylvania is mistaken in supposing that these medals have been given without the knowledge of the King of Siam by any subordinate. I have here a letter written in very good English, and yet with such little idiomatic inaccuracies as show that it is from a man not writing his vernacular, and signed by a name very long and which no manner of man can pronounce, in which he communicates to the commander of the Monocacy the commands of his august sovereign to present him with these medals. I have no doubt that the action of Congress in allowing or refusing the acceptance of this little token will be communicated to that prince, and will have a much greater effect upon him than it would have upon a more enlightened ruler, though I think he is an enlightened man.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, being upon the committee which reported this little bill, I think it is proper for me to say that I do not think it comes within the rule laid down by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Pennsylvania, although I am free to admit that it runs very close to the line which Congress has drawn in reference to such matters. But let me say also that this seems to be a case where the maxim de minimis non curat lex may well be applied; it is too small a thing absolutely to be a matter of any importance. This is not a title of nobility; it is not a valuable present; it is nothing but a little memorial with no intrinsic value whatever, a medal, a memento, simply stating on its face, I presume, that on this occasion the King of Siam visited this ship. It is I think too trifling a matter to need any line to be drawn in reference to it, or to need anything to be said.

It is perfectly true, as the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Maine have said, that we have a right to draw a distinction in such cases. The general rule, and a very proper one, prevents the reception of any present or gift of any kind, honorary or otherwise; but we are permitted to draw a line and to make exceptional cases; and one of those cases, I think, is not only the case cited by the Senator from Pennsylvania, where a man at the risk of his life performs a dangerous and gallant action and is being rewarded for it, and we permit him on account of what he has done to receive the gift, but it was also meant that these little tokens of acknowledgment of courtesy from friendly powers to our officers should be permitted on such occasions as we thought proper when the circumstances are brought before us. In other words, it was intended that these things should be exceptional, and that each case should stand on its own merits. I do not see that this is within the general rule which very properly prevents officers of this Government from receiving presents from foreign powers; or rather there is no reason why we should not make an exceptional case of it.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALCORN answered to his name.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be done by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection. The call is withdrawn; and the question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

JOHN T. SMITH.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 448) for the relief of John T. Smith, have instructed me to report it back without amendment. This is a bill for the relief of an officer under peculiar circumstances, who probably will not survive until the next session. I ask for its present consideration. It was intrusted to the chairman of the committee, who is detained at home by illness in his family, and he has asked me to present it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for the nomination of John T. Smith as an engineer in the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WADLEIGH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 886) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. McComb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 887) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamer General Sedgwick, of Mystic, Connecticut; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 888) directing the name of James Brown, of Oregon, to be placed on the pension-rolls, and granting him a pension; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BENJAMIN W. REYNOLDS.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides for allowing the sum of $1,233.33 to Benjamin W. Reynolds, late United States depositary at St. Croix Falls, Wisconsin, for compensation for his services as depositary between the 26th day of October, 1861, and the 26th day of November, 1864. The second section directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,233.33.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out "$1,233,33" in each section, and to insert in lieu thereof "$15.65."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire whether there is any report accompanying that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There seems to be no report, though there are papers.

Mr. CONKLING. If any Senator understands it, I should like to hear a word about it.

Mr. PATTERSON. The bill as passed by the House allowed Mr. Reynolds twelve hundred and odd dollars. The Committee on Public Lands cut it down to $15.65, just the amount he was entitled to by way of commissions provided by law.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that all the bill contains.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; $15.65 is the amount.

Mr. TIPTON. The committee recommended the striking out of the House appropriation and inserting fifteen dollars, because they had a letter from the present Secretary of the Treasury and a letter from the recent Secretary of the Treasury saying that on a stated account of the case there was due the claimant fifteen dollars. That is the reason why the committee recommended that fifteen dollars should be inserted, as it is the balance on the books of the Treasury in settling up the account.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that statement the bill ought not to pass, because on that statement the money would be paid by the proper accounting officers, if there is that much found to be due to him on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. TIPTON. The letter of the Secretary states that the appropriation out of which that might have been paid has lapsed into the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the bill ought to pass.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to make a request of the Senate. There are quite a number of small bills reported from the Military Committee by which small amounts are to be paid to persons entitled to them. I should like to have the Senate allow the Committee on Military Affairs to have Friday, or at least to occupy two or three hours on Friday, in acting on those bills. I have fears that we shall not reach them during the session unless a time is assigned to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the expiration of the morning hour, he may have three hours to dispose of bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the assignment of time for the Committee on Military Affairs, provided it does not interfere with the moiety bill, which is to come up to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to conflict with that bill at all. I think that will be disposed of by that time. If not, I will ask that the order be made to take up these bills subject to that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And there will be no objection, I suppose, to excepting the appropriation bills if they should come in conflict.

Mr. LOGAN. Those are always matters of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the understanding that, subject to appropriation bills and to the moiety bill, Friday after one o'clock shall be dovoted for three hours to the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

SAVINGS-BANKS.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Finance Committee reported a House bill this morning in regard to savings-banks which, I understand, has met the unanimous approval of that committee, and I suppose there will be no objection to it. I should like to have the bill passed now.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3574) explanatory of the act of June 30, 1864, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares all deposits made in institutions now existing which do business only as savings-banks, and are recognized as such by the laws of their respective States or by Congress, to be exempt from taxation the same as deposits in savings institutions having no capital, although they have a capital stock or bond for the additional security of their depositors, and pay dividends thereon; and no tax is to be assessed upon the deposits made in such institutions, or collected of them on deposits, otherwise than as herein provided. This is only to apply where the profits of such savings-banks, less the aforementioned dividends, are divided among the depositors, and where the capital stock is invested only in the same class of securities as is used for investing the deposits, and that interest at the rate of not less than 4½ per cent. be paid in all cases to their depositors, to be made good if necessary from the capital stock.

The Committee on Finance reported the bill with an amendment, to insert in line 13, after the word "dividends," the words "on stock not exceeding the rate of 8 per cent. per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOREMAN. I should like to have the bill explained by somebody who understands it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under a decision made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which I think is correct, it is held that a savings-bank which has what is called a guarantee fund, something in the nature of preferred stock, which is held as a guarantee for the safety of depositors and upon which dividends are made, is not entitled to have such guarantee fund or stock exempted from the tax levid on the deposits of other banks. The deposits of savings-banks are exempted from the tax imposed on the deposits of other banks; but it was held by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that savings-banks such as I mention, having a guarantee fund upon which dividends were paid, were not within that exemption. There is no reason why they should not be.

In the particular case to which our attention was called in Massachusetts—I have forgotten the name of the bank—there was a kind of special stock or guarantee fund upon which a limited dividend was paid, and it was held that that was not entitled to the exemption from the tax on deposits. We have limited the amount of dividend to 8 per cent., so that the dividend on this guarantee fund or stock of the savings-bank in Massachusetts shall not exceed in any case 8 per cent., and the bill also contains a clause that the amount paid to depositors shall be at least 4½ per cent. before any dividend shall be made on the guarantee fund.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BOREMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3168) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works for rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOCKTON. I submit an amendment to the river and harbor bill, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Commerce. I desire to say that the amendment is to carry out the resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, which I presented some time ago, in reference to the improvement of Barnegat Bay and its tributaries, and I commend it to the careful attention of the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. I have spoken to the Senator from Minnesota, who has charge of the regular order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. The Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] having charge of the regular order, is willing to yield for that purpose, allowing the regular order to go over informally.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the pending order be laid aside informally, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to the regular order being laid aside informally.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3095) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The Committee on Appropriations reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 93, after the word "Frankfort" to insert the word "Rome;" so that the clause will read:

The consuls-general at Vienna, Frankfort, Rome, and Constantinople shall each be entitled to compensation for their services at the rate of $3,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 96, after "Saint Petersburgh" to strike out the word "Rome;" so that the clause will read:

The consuls-general at Saint Petersburgh and Mexico shall each be entitled to compensation for their services at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 127, to insert after the word "Bradford" the word "Demarara;" so as to place that consulate in the third class.

Mr. CAMERON. What is the compensation allowed to consulates of that class?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Three thousand dollars.

Mr. CAMERON. Then it is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 166, to strike out "Demarara" from the fifth class of consulates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 12, in the list of consulates of class seven, to strike out lines 260, 261, 262, and 263, as follows:

French Dominions: Gaboon.
Portuguese Dominions: Saint Paul de Loando.

The next amendment was in section 6, to strike out the following words:

That the following proviso shall be added to section 21 of the act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States, approved August 18, 1856: Provided.

So that the section will read:

SEC. 6. That any vice-consul who may be temporarily acting as consul during the absence of such consul may receive compensation, notwithstanding that he is not a citizen of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations have now been disposed of. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In line 199, page 9, an amendment has been proposed and sent to the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the words "Fort Erie" and insert the same after the word "Clifton" in line 164. The amendment was referred to the Appropriations Committee since the committee reported the bill to the Senate. I am advised that the Secretary of State thinks there is no objection to the amendment. Therefore I submit it to the Senate. I ought to state perhaps that the effect of the amendment would be to change the consulate at Fort Erie from class six to class five. The consulates are all classified in this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have only to say that if that change should be made, there are some ten or fifteen other changes which should likewise be made in the consulates in Canada. The evil of this consular system has been that some particular Senator has had some friend in a particular consulate and has moved an amendment of this sort on the appropriation bill, which never went to the Committee on Commerce and was never examined by any committee. Now, prior to perhaps the year before last, the consul-general at Vienna received $1,500 a year, which was totally inadequate. The Committee on Commerce recommended that his salary be raised to $3,000, which was entirely satisfactory; but some friend of that officer in the body got up and moved, without any attention being called to it, that the salary be made $5,000, and now the consul-general comes and says it is a great hardship to reduce him from $5,000 to $3,000.

Now, sir, the whole receipts of this consulate at Fort Erie last year, the whole business that the consulate transacted, amounted to $2,382.50. There are other consulates where the expenses of living are much greater, and the committee have left them at $1,500. Some friend of this consul some time or other perhaps has moved to raise the salary of this consulate. It has now been put on a level with the other consulates in Canada, all of which were originally fixed at $1,500, except I believe Goderich, and perhaps one or two others; but from time to time they have been raised in this way. This bill absolutely equalizes the whole of them. If you now raise the salary of this consulate, you will have a dozen applications from other places for a like increase, and the result will be that you will have to raise the whole of them. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not think the Senator from Michigan has stated this case precisely as it is. This subject of revising the compensation of consulates underwent a careful examination at the State Department, where I apprehend they understand the matter about as well as we do, and they sent us a bill here which upon examination included this very consulate in the class where my colleague proposes to put it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly, because somebody had moved to raise his salary when it ought not to have been done, and it was adopted without examination.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to assure my friend from Michigan that no such somebody existed. There was no Senator there, and nobody else there. I never saw it until the bill came from the Department here, and they made their estimate and they fixed the compensation in their bill which they sent here; and now in transcribing the bill in the House they have omitted to put it in the class where the Secretary of State put it. That is all there is in this amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that that was done purposely by the House of Representatives to equalize the compensation of consuls, and there was no mistake about it. It was done purposely by the committee in the Senate as well as in the House to equalize the pay of consuls. If this consulate is transferred from one class to the other, then transfer the whole of them, and do it at once.

Mr. HAMLIN. There are two ways of doing justice: one is by equalizing up and the other is by equalizing down. The salary of the consul at the Chain Bridge, Clifton, was $1,500, and the committee have put it up to $2,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. On the contrary, the committee have reduced it to $1,500 from $2,000, where it was put by the committee in the House for the purpose of making it equal to this one. There it stands now to-day.

Mr. HAMLIN. No, it does not stand there, as the Senator will see if he will read the bill. I have got it here.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have the bill as prepared by the committee. That is one of the amendments submitted.

Mr. HAMLIN. You will find that Clifton is put in class five.

Mr. CHANDLER. On the contrary, it is put in class six; and the Senator who has charge of this bill has the amendment before him to change it from class five to class six. That was done by the Committee on Commerce in the Senate to equalize the payment of consuls in Canada.

Mr. HAMLIN. All I ask is that you put Fort Erie in the precise class in which you put Clifton.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is what we have done. There is where it stands, and therefore the Senator ought to be satisfied.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator is mistaken. The Senator has got in his hands the bill prepared by the State Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. On the contrary, I have got the bill as it passed the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN. I read from page 7 of the bill:

CLASS V.

Great Britain:
Leeds, Southampton, Dundee, Leith, Cork, Dublin, Clifton, Toronto, Hamilton, Coaticook, Halifax, &c.

And the salary of that class of consulates is $2,000. Then in the sixth class, the salary of which is $1,500, I find "Fort Erie." All I ask the Senator is to carry out precisely what he pretends his bill is. The bill does do precisely what I say. It omits Fort Erie from the class where it ought to be, and from where in transcribing the bill in the House they omitted it. The amendment puts it precisely where the Secretary of State put it. I do not seek to make any change other than that which was approved by the State Department, and I trust the Senate will do that. Now if the Senator has got the bill, let him read it and see whether he is right or I am.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have got it. Here it is. "Change Clifton from class five to class six." That is the bill as reported by the Committee on Commerce and sent to the Committee on Appropriations. That amendment was made in order to place it on the same footing with Fort Erie. I presume the Senator is satisfied. He says that is all he wants.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is a strange misunderstanding in this matter. I can read plain English; I thought I could at least; and I have the bill before me.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have the original bill before me as prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Commerce by order of the committee and sent to the Committee on Appropriations. Here it is: "Change Clifton from class five to class six." If the Committee on Appropriations have not got that amendment in the bill, then they have overlooked it; that is all; and I shall move, by order of the Committee on Commerce, that Clifton be changed from class five to class six, so as to equalize it with Fort Erie, and thus satisfy the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HAMLIN. The House of Representatives have sent us their bill, which they made up undoubtedly from the bill sent in by the Secretary of State, and I suppose the Committee on Commerce of the Senate have been acting with the Committee on Commerce of the House, though I do not know how that is. I only know that I have got the bill as it came from the House; I have got the bill as reported by our committee; and in that bill Toronto, Clifton, and Hamilton are put in class five, where the compensation is $2,000, and that is precisely in accordance with what the State Department recommend, and the State Department also recommend that Fort Erie should be in the same class. Now, I understand the Senator from Michigan to concur that they should be in the same class; and I ask therefore, inasmuch as three of them are put in the $2,000 class, that the other be put in the same class.

Mr. CHANDLER. The three that are put in that class are more expensive places to live at.

Mr. HAMLIN. Not a bit.

Mr. CHANDLER. They have a larger amount of business, are more important consulates, and on that account were put in that class. The consulates at Goderich, at Windsor, at Port Sarnia, and the large class of consulates of that kind at railroad termini, where the business is enormous and the expenses of living much greater than at Fort Erie, have not been touched, but have been left at $1.500 a year, and this Fort Erie consulate should never have been raised. The original pay of the consul at Fort Erie was $1,500, and that was the pay of all the other consulates in Canada, with two or three exceptions. I hope this may be equalized as the Committee on Commerce have recommended. The Committee on Commerce of the Senate did change three or four—not more than that—of the recommendations of the Committee on Commerce in the other House, and did it because they thought the committee there had made an error.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say a word more. I believe I know something about the consulates. I had them under my charge more years than the Senator ever had them under his. I want to say that to-day the consulate at Fort Erie is of more importance commercially and in a personal point of view, under recent instructions from the State Department, than the one at Chain Bridge.

Mr. CHANDLER. I read a few moments ago the whole business transacted, the whole receipts of the consulate at Fort Erie. Now look at it: you pay the consul there $1,500 in gold coin—and if the Senator's man is not satisfied I have two hundred and eighty-nine men who are anxious to take his place at the pay, and better men too, [laughter]—and the whole receipts, the whole business for three hundred and sixty-five days of that consulate is $2,382.50.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ought to say in justice to the Committee on Appropriations that so far as these amendments are concerned the committee feel no especial responsibility about them. The salaries and the consular service have been somewhat changed by the action of the House; but it was upon careful examination, as I understand, by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, whose desire was to change somewhat the consular system, and they have done it by putting the consulates into six or seven distinct classes, and classifying them according to their importance, attaching to them salaries in accordance with that general statement, and they have been classified in this way: Those that have simply commercial duties to perform are classified according to the business of the consulate; those consulates upon which some diplomatic duties are devolved are classified also according to the importance attached to that fact. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate found that the House had adopted that proposition of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Committee on Commerce taking jurisdiction of this question in the House, as it was a consular matter very properly, had gone over this subject and had recommended that it should be adopted by our committee, the Committee on Appropriations; and that is the reason that the bill comes here from the committee in this shape.

Now, as to this precise proposition before the Senate, I said when I was up before that the Committee on Appropriations did not consider it; but upon the statements made by my colleague I do not see why this consulate should not be transferred from the class where it is to the class indicated by his amendment. I do not say whether the salary is too much or too little; but upon the principles of the bill, upon the principles upon which this classification is made, I am inclined to think my colleague's statement is correct, that it either belongs in that class or these other consulates should be transferred to the class in which Fort Erie now is.

Mr. CHANDLER. The committee have recommended that, and if the Committee on Appropriations have made a mistake and have not transferred Clifton to that class, I will make that motion by direction of the Committee on Commerce, for they ordered me to make it, and in my copy of the bill that correction is made, transferring Clifton from class five to class six. I will make that motion if it is not already in the bill as the Senator reported it. It was in the copy which I handed to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Unfortunately, it was overlooked. Undoubtedly the Senator is correct about that, but it was overlooked by the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then by order of the Committee on Commerce I will submit a motion to make that transfer. They directed me to do so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. While I am up I will state another thing in regard to this bill, as there seems to be considerable inquiry about it. The chief arrangement consists in the classification of the consulates, and the principles which underlie it are that many of the consulates have become unimportant. This system was established in 1856, I think, and since that time there has been very little legislation in regard to it. Towns which were important then (and the salaries of the consulates were fixed then in accordance with their importance) have outgrown that importance; have ceased to be trading centers. In the mean time other important towns have sprung up, in some instances in close juxtaposition to these, rendering it unnecessary to maintain a consulate at the one place, but requiring him to be transferred to another. The committee, taking the whole subject into consideration, have said that our consulates should be established at the trading centers. That is undoubtedly sound. Now, in order to accomplish that object they were obliged to abolish some; in others they reduced the pay. Take Havre, for instance: Havre was at one time the most important consulate in France, with a salary of $6,000. They put that in a different class at $3,000, and have advanced the consulate at Bordeaux. So they have gone through the list, reducing in some instances and increasing in others. I believe on the whole the increase is about $2,000 or $3,000 in the aggregate, but these are the general principles on which the whole arrangement has been made.

Undoubtedly it has the effect to reduce the salaries of certain persons at certain points, and it has the effect to increase the salaries of others. That is no injustice, perhaps, provided that the general principle of the arrangement in regard to salaries is just and fair. That is not a question for the Committee on Appropriations to consider. If there is any difficulty upon that score it belongs to the Committee on Commerce so far as the consulates are concerned, and to the Committee on Foreign Relations so far as the diplomatic service is concerned. The Committee on Appropriations have contented themselves with reporting the bill, so far as this service is concerned, in harmony with the bill as it came from the House and in harmony with what the committee understood to be the views of the committees of the two Houses who properly have this subject under consideration.

The question is on the amendment of my colleague, to transfer the Fort Erie consulate from line 199 to line 164, the effect of which, I have already explained, is to take it from one class and associate it with the consulates in Canada, upon the ground that its relation to the others is about equal.

Mr. CHANDLER. After this is voted down, as I trust it will be, I shall then move, by order of the Committee on Commerce, to transfer Clifton, in line 163, to line 196, after "Port Sarnia," and thus transfer it from class five to class six, as directed by the Committee on Commerce and as omitted accidentally by the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the Senate will stand by the bill as sent to us by the Secretary of State.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Secretary of State informed me that he was very well pleased with what the committee had done. Therefore I hope the Senate will stand by the Secretary of State.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 19, noes 21.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move now to transfer "Clifton" from line 163 to line 196, after "Port Sarnia," which equalizes Clifton with Fort Erie. I move the amendment by the direction of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SARGENT. How much does that increase the salary?

Mr. CHANDLER. It reduces it from $2,000 to $1,500.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have one more amendment from the Committee on Commerce by request of the Secretary of State. In line 71, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

And the bonds which consular officers who are now compensated by salaries are required by the thirteenth section of the act of August 18, 1856, to enter into, shall hereafter be made with such sureties as the Secretary of State shall approve.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I propose to amend the bill on the second page, seventeenth line, after "Chili and Peru," by inserting "Sweden and Norway," and in line 20, by striking out "Sweden and Norway."

I think, Mr. President, that the relations between this country and the kingdoms of Sweden and Norway justify this increase in rank in our minister there. He is now but a minister resident, while at the same time we send to each of the comparatively unimportant states of Chili and Peru an envoy extraordinary.

While the population of Chili and Peru combined is a little over five millions, that of Sweden and Norway is a little over six millions. The exports of Chili and Peru are $60,000,000 a year, those of Sweden and Norway $65,000,000. The imports of Chili and Peru are $50,000,000; of Sweden and Norway $70,000,000. Showing that the population and commerce of Chili and Peru combined are less than that of Sweden and Norway. The direct and indirect commerce between the United States and Scandinavia is nearly $7,000,000 a year, and continuously increasing. Except Germany and France, it is, I believe, the only continental nation that owns a line of steamers running directly to this country. The country has a splendid financial credit, with a large commercial marine, with greater exports, a larger telegraphic correspondence, and greater territorial area, and more international influence than either Italy or Spain.

The immigration from Sweden and Norway is larger than from any other country on the continent of Europe, excepting Germany, and is gradually increasing. They send to us more and a better class of immigrants every year than have come from Spain, Italy, Turkey, Mexico, Peru, and Chili all put together.

Again, it would be a courteous act on our part, inasmuch as that state sends to us an envoy extraordinary, and we have especial reasons why we should cultivate the best relations between this country and those kingdoms. The population now resident in the United States, hailing from Sweden and Norway, amounts to many hundreds of thousands. It is probably one-sixth of the population of the State of Minnesota. There are probably one hundred thousand Swedes and Norwegians there. They form a large proportion of the population of Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Kansas, and Nebraska. They are a people who appreciate free institutions like ourselves, and are hard-working, industrious, and saving, readily assimilate with our people, become quickly acquainted with our customs and laws, and give an intelligent support to our republican form of government.

Practically the political institutions of Sweden and Norway are free and in spirit republican. The constitutions of Sweden and Norway are each published in the volume on Foreign Relations of the United States for 1871, and as compared with those of the South-American States, in respect to popular principles they will challenge close scrutiny. A careful perusal of these constitutions, as well as of the act of union between the two countries, will show that they contain more ample guarantees of liberties than is usually found. The legislative power of the government is, as with us, divided into two branches, one elected by the municipal bodies, the other directly by the people who exercise the elective franchise, the only restraint of universal suffrage being a small property qualification. The people of Norway have from time immemorial enjoyed an almost republican liberty, and that country reveals the fact that the constitutional liberty of the people of every country in Europe was first founded here.

I think under all the circumstances the Senate should not hesitate to advance the rank of the mission to Sweden and Norway to the same grade at least as the mission to Chili and to Peru. If I had supposed there was a more liberal disposition on the part of the Committee on Appropriations I would have moved to place it a grade higher and put it along with the missions to Spain and Austria.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I did not understand the Senator to state precisely what portion of Sweden had come over to Minnesota.

Mr. RAMSEY. A very large portion of Sweden and Norway, a much larger portion, I will say to my honorable friend from Maine, than they have been able to induce to go into the State of Maine. Although they have made vigilant efforts to attract population from those countries, they have not been able to get them. Minnesota now has one hundred thousand, and a most excellent population they are.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Maine has no minister residing at Sweden.

Mr. RAMSEY. Probably Maine would accept one. I think she would. [Laughter.]

Mr. SARGENT. Is not this amendment liable to a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California raise any point of order?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir. It increases the appropriation and has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RAMSEY. What is the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the amendment increases the appropriation and has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RAMSEY. It may probably increase the appropriation, but it increases the appropriation to so small an amount—$2,500—that I think the Senator from California will hesitate to make the point of order on a matter of this kind.

Mr. HAMLIN. In addition to the point of order, let me suggest to my friend——

Mr. RAMSAY. That is enough, if it is ruled against me. I do not want anything in addition.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wanted to suggest to the consideration of my friend that the Committee on Foreign Relations made a very careful examination into this matter and they were only deprived of the information which we have had in the Senate here this morning. If we had had that information before the committee we probably should have come to a different conclusion from that at which we did arrive, and we might probably have placed this mission in a very much higher grade, and might have placed it alongside of that to France and to Germany. I think that would have satisfied the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am very sorry that the Committee on Foreign Relations did not pay attention to the information laid before them. It has been a long time before them——

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the Senator from Minnesota is to blame. He did not furnish us with the information.

Mr. RAMSEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I not only furnished it, but so did the Secretary of State, to the committee. I am sorry indeed that they do not better inform themselves on these matters.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. Is my amendment ruled out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to add to the list of consulates, in section 2, by inserting in line 8 the word "Bremen" after "Hamburg." It was omitted by an oversight probably.

Mr. SARGENT. Is it not elsewhere in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not in regard to clerks. This is the section allowing clerks at certain consulates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1013) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 735) to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have been totally disabled, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. M. RUSK of Wisconsin, Mr. W. B. SMALL of New Hampshire, and Mr. W. S. HOLMAN of Indiana, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2453) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1873, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. M. RUSK of Wisconsin, Mr. W. B. SMALL of New Hampshire, and Mr. W. S. HOLMAN, of Indiana, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 229) authorizing corrections to be made in errors in prize-lists, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) providing for the termination of the treaty between the United States and His Majesty the King of the Belgians, concluded at Washington July 17, 1858; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3421, making appropriations for invalid and other pensions.

Mr. WINDOM. I will yield, if I have the right to do so, for that appropriation bill, but I give notice that I shall insist on the regular order when the appropriation bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the transportation resolution is laid aside informally.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 3421) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1875, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Appropriations reported the bill with an amendment, which was on line 58, to insert after the word "twenty" the word "five;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That the fees for preparing vouchers and administering oaths, which are now by law thirty cents in each case, shall hereafter be twenty-five cents for the same, and no more.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. That is the only amendment reported by the committee. I will take this occasion to remark that the amount appropriated for this purpose last year was $30,480,000. The amount appropriated by this bill is $29,980,000, being a reduction of $500,000. The presumption is that from casualties and from minor children becoming of age the appropriation will be less and less each year, and that we have passed over the greatest amount. This certainly will be the case by the gradual decrease of the pension-roll, unless Congress is improvident in enlarging the class of cases, or putting separate individuals too extensively on the pension-list.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish the attention of the Senator from California having the bill in charge. I notice that the bill as it came from the House provided that the compensation for vouchers should be twenty cents instead of thirty cents, as now allowed by law, and the committee proposed to amend that by making it twenty-five cents instead of twenty. I suppose they have given this subject attention. My attention was directed to it somewhat. I may not be entirely accurate, but I find that as the law stands now for these vouchers, taking the country over, the pension agents get about the same amount for these vouchers that their regular salary is. In other words, they receive on an average from $7,000 to $8,000 a year as compensation as pension agents as the law now stands. This is all paid out of the Treasury of course, and not by the pensioners. I understand that these persons ought to have a compensation for this extra work, because they have to employ extra clerks; but it occurred to me that it was quite unnecessary that their compensation should be increased to the amount fixed by the present law, or indeed to twenty-five cents for each voucher. It thus gives them for each year one dollar for the vouchers that they send to the pensioners and for the postage for sending such vouchers out. While the pension agents, as far as I know, have discharged their duties exceedingly well, yet taking the country over, as a rule, I think they receive a larger compensation than is necessary. I think that twenty cents, while it may seem to be a small amount on each voucher and as to each payment, nevertheless would be sufficient for each voucher. The difference between twenty and twenty-five cents is not much, and yet it amounts to several thousand dollars in a year as against the Government. Of course I do not wish to be understood as antagonizing the wishes of the committee if they have investigated the subject thoroughly, but I call the attention of the Senator from California to the point whether the bill is not sufficient as it stands to cover all the expenses of the agents.

Mr. SARGENT. This matter was thoroughly considered by the Committee on Appropriations and the Department was consulted in reference to it. I hold in my hand, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read, a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions which I think answers the propositions of the Senator from Iowa, and I direct his attention to the fact that when he speaks of the large amounts paid to certain pension agents, they are only in the largest cities and where the most funds pass through their hands. But we have a great many pension agents, some of them at small offices, where the remuneration is merely nominal. I can say that in the city of San Francisco the compensation of the pension agent, after paying all his expenses of rent and necessary clerk hire, amounts to only about $500 a year, which of course is a great contrast to the $5,000 or $7,000 which a pension agent may get in New York or Cincinnati. In the smaller places where pension agencies exist, to reduce this fee below twenty-five cents, in the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations and of the Commissioner of Pensions, would be to reduce it below any possibility of getting men who are responsible and who would give the proper bonds to perform their duties.

There is a further fact that a large class of pensioners are falling out. This bill, as I remarked a few moments ago, appropriates $500,000 less than the bill of last year, and there are whole classes going out, and they will go out more rapidly hereafter. For instance, minor children who are now relieved by the pension laws in a year or two will be off the pension-roll entirely by arriving at the age fixed. Then the list of casualties from deaths increases with time and gradually diminishes the pension-roll. The effect of this is that there are less vouchers, there are less elements going to make up the pay of the pension agents. This price, thirty cents, was established while the roll was culminating until it has swelled to its present point. Now to cut down the pay very much, as the elements of compensation are being decreased every year, would be to leave these persons without such remuneration that the Government could get the services performed in a proper manner. I send the letter to the desk to be read, and I think it covers the points which the Senator from Iowa has named.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May, 23, 1874.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called by Senator PRATT, chairman of the Pension Committee in the Senate, to the last proviso of the pending pension appropriation bill, which provides that the fee for preparing vouchers and administering oaths, which is now fixed at thirty cents, shall hereafter be twenty cents.

After a careful examination of this proposed change I have reached the conclusion that it will work manifold injustice to the smaller agencies, and respectfully suggest that the sum for the preparation of these vouchers be fixed at twenty-five cents. I am satisfied that this is the minimum at which this compensation can be fixed and do justice to many agencies in the country which would otherwise be rendered comparatively worthless.

The present rate of compensation has been in operation during the time the rolls were growing so rapidly. Now the rolls have reached the maximum number, and by time and casualty will rapidly decrease, and this inevitable decrease, it appears to me, will meet all the demands of justice and economy.

I apprehend that the total cost of conducting the agencies was not fully taken into consideration by those who framed this proviso. The rent of the offices, the postage, (which is a very considerable item indeed,) and the employment of the proper clerical force, have all to be deducted from the gross compensation, and will leave the net profits of the office in many cases much less than may be supposed.

There is also a certain percentage of loss in the final adjustment of their accounts with the Treasury Department to be considered, resulting from erroneous compensations and payments.

I am disposed therefore to think that if your committee will place the rate at twenty-five cents, it will be a fair measure of compensation to all parties; and time and the casualties of the service will diminish this allowance with such rapidity as will preclude the possibility of further complaint in this direction.

Very respectfully, yours,

J. H. BAKER,
Commissioner.

Hon. LOT M. MORRILL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. When I saw the action of the House of Representatives on this matter my attention was attracted to it, and I took a little pains to make some examination into the subject as applicable to my own section of the country, and the results of my investigation are corroborated by what the Commissioner has stated. I wish to say in a word or two that the experience of the agencies in the section of the country from which I come demonstrates that the thirty cents a certificate will very slightly, if any, exceed the expenses of rent, clerk hire, and postage now; and if this fee be cut below twenty-five cents, the expenses will exceed the amount received. I think we have three agencies in Maine, and in two of them the expenses exceed the receipts from the fee of thirty cents a certificate, and in one perhaps they are slightly below. Twenty-five cents, therefore, will call for very rigid economy to transact the business of the office from the receipts. I hope, therefore, that the sum fixed by the committee certainly will not be changed to any lower sum.

Mr. SCOTT. I can corroborate the statements made by the Senators from California and Maine, from data which have been placed in my hands by one or two of the pension agents. The salaries of the pension agents are calculated to produce a misapprehension as to the sum they actually receive, for the whole amount of their rent, clerk hire, and all other incidental expenses, has to be deducted from that salary. One of the pension agents in Philadelphia makes a statement to me showing that while he gives a bond of $400,000 and disburses a very large amount of money, if this bill were passed at the amount fixed by the House of Representatives it would reduce the salary of his office, after paying expenses, to $1,600; and that statement of a bonded officer in the sum of $400,000 disbursing this amount of money is sufficient of itself to show how unjustly this reduction would operate. The fixing of it at twenty-five cents seems to be conceded upon all hands as a reduction of the salary, and yet one which will not be burdensome at least upon the pension agents and about the right thing for the Government to pay. I hope, therefore, the report of the committee will be sustained.

Mr. PRATT. I have given this matter considerable attention, and, as chairman of the Committee on Pensions, have conferred with the head of the Pension Bureau frequently on the subject, and I have arrived at the conclusion that thirty cents a voucher is too high and that twenty cents is too low, and that twenty-five cents a voucher is as near right as it is possible for the Senate to come to.

The compensation of pension agents is made up under existing laws of two items, as I understand; first, a commission of 2 per cent. upon all the moneys disbursed, and in the next place a fee of thirty cents for every voucher issued. The Government pays no expenses of clerk hire or office rent, but each pension agent must defray all these expenses himself out of his commissions and out of the fees received for vouchers. There are four or five pension agencies where the compensation seems to me very high; but yet you must consider that those agencies are those where the largest amount of money is disbursed, where the largest number of pensioners is paid, and where the largest number of clerks is required. I remember one office where the number of clerks employed is fourteen. There is only, however, a very limited number where this compensation seems so high.

I have before me a table furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions, in which he gives a statement of the total compensation paid to all the pension agencies throughout the United States. The sum seems to be very small. For example, at Vancouver the receipts of the office all told are $143.31. At La Crosse the entire compensation of the pension agent is only $4,387.80; and out of this he has to pay his clerk hire, and his office rent, and postage. At Madison, Wisconsin, the entire receipts are only $6,994.60. There are several of the agencies where the commissions and the voucher fees aggregate only about $5,000. But in Philadelphia, where there are two offices, one for invalid soldiers and another for widows' pensions, the fees seem to be very high; at one of them upward of $16,000, and at the other upward of $15,000; making about $32,000 at these two offices in the single city of Philadelphia. At Albany, New York, the fees seem to be very high, being a little upward of $18,000; at Detroit pretty near $14,000; at Boston a little upward of $18,000; at Chicago, $11,000; at Indianapolis, pretty near $17,000; in this city, $9,576.

Mr. OGLESBY. What is it at Springfield, Illinois?

Mr. PRATT. I do not now see it on this list, but it is here. The general testimony of the pension agents, if the Senate is disposed to regard that as the most reliable testimony in the case, is that these fees cannot, with justice to them, be cut down; but I think they can. I think twenty-five cents a voucher is about a reasonable fee.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions if they are satisfied that it is necessary to have the same amount paid to all these officers. I think any one who is conversant with this question will be satisfied that in our larger offices, such as have been referred to in Philadelphia, in Boston, and New York, twenty cents would be ample, while in many of the smaller offices the present fee of thirty cents certainly is not too high. I ask the chairman whether he has considered the question of the propriety of providing that where the receipts of an office are more than $5,000 a year this fee shall be reduced to twenty cents, and that in smaller offices, where they do not reach that sum, it shall remain as it now is?

The only difficulty in fixing a universal price of twenty-five cents, as has been suggested, is that you thereby take away from the receipts of the smaller and weaker offices where to-day the agents do not receive the amount which they should receive, and you still continue to the larger offices where the receipts are excessive more than is necessary. It does seem to me that if the committee would continue to these smaller, weaker offices the same fees that they have been receiving and reduce to a lower rate the fees in those offices where the receipts have been so high, it would be more equitable to the different offices throughout the country. I do not know whether the committee have considered that aspect of the case or not.

In regard to the receipts which have been referred to in the city of Boston, it will be recollected by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions that the table he has referred to shows the receipts at a time when there was but one pension agency in the State of Massachusetts. It has now been divided, and there are two offices, and, of course, those receipts will be divided between those two offices; but still I think in the city of Boston twenty cents would be ample, but in the small office in the country thirty cents would not be too large. I think it would be much more equitable and much fairer if this fee should be reduced in Boston to twenty cents and continued in the country at thirty cents. I only make the suggestion to the chairman of the committee whether such an amendment might not be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to state in regard to the larger offices which have been spoken of that I received a few days ago a communication from the pension agent at Detroit, giving the amount of his expenditures for office rent, clerk hire, &c. It will be remembered that all the expenses of the office are paid by the pension agent. In a large city he pays a very high rent; I should think at least $1,000 a year in Detroit, but I cannot say exactly how much. Then he must employ a large number of clerks, leaving the compensation much less in proportion to the amount paid than in the smaller offices. I have no doubt it is the same in Chicago, in Boston, and in all the larger offices. Hence I think great injustice would be done to the larger offices by making the great reduction proposed by the House of Representatives. I do not think the present rate is too high from what I have heard from the agent at Detroit and from other agents. I do not think their compensation is at all excessive.

Mr. PRATT. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, I would say that there would not be much difference in the compensation under the bill as it is amended, fixing the voucher fee at twenty-five cents, between the pension agents throughout the country; I mean the large centers, on account of the greatly increased force which they must employ in order to discharge the business of their offices. As the number of pensioners increases to be paid at any particular office, the number of clerks must be increased. As the number of vouchers to be issued increases, the postage to be paid by the agents upon those vouchers is increased, and that is a very considerable item in the course of the year, and it is one of the items of expense which I omitted to state when I was on the floor before, because these pension agents must pay not only office rent in these large cities, which is generally very high, and the salaries of their clerks, but also the postage upon all the vouchers which are issued four times a year.

Mr. WASHBURN. While the Senator from Michigan and the chairman of the Committee on Pensions are right in saying that the more the business done at a given office the greater the expense, still the statement which I made is correct. There are many pension agencies in the country to-day at which the net receipts are from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars after paying all the expenses; and just as you increase the business at a given office you increase the net receipts of that office. While in the large offices there are more clerks to be paid, yet, after paying all the expenses, the net receipts are greater.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator pardon me? Those are the gross receipts, not the net receipts, and all the expenses have to be paid out of those receipts which have been read.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understand that; but still what I have stated is correct. I have ascertained and know what the net receipts of some of the larger offices are, and you will find the net receipts of some of them are over $12,000 left to the pension agent. The only point that I wished to suggest was that in many of the smaller offices the net receipts to-day are not more than they ought to be; the agents do not get more than a fair compensation. My suggestion was that if you could limit the proviso, so that where the net receipts of an office are $5,000 to the pension agent, or some such sum, the voucher fee should be twenty cents, it would be more equitable. I understand very well that as the business is increased so are the expenses increased, but not by any means in the ratio of the receipts, and the net profits are very much greater. For instance, in the State of Massachusetts you divide the agency into two offices. The expenses will be increased by that division, and you cannot help it. The business cannot be managed so economically, so far as the expenses are concerned, but the public will be better served, and the result will be that the small office and the agent at the small office will receive very poor compensation, while the agent at the large office will still continue to be very well paid for his services after paying his expenses.

Mr. PRATT. If the statement of my friend from Massachusetts be true, I readily agree with him that there ought to be some limit to the amount of salary which a pension agent should receive after deducting all the expenses enumerated. My information had been different from his. I had seen some statements made by the pension agents at some of the largest centers of population, and the largest net amount realized by any of these pension agents did not exceed $6,000 or $7,000 a year. That seems to be pretty high. I think myself that no pension agent should be entitled to receive more than $5,000 in fees, after deducting, I mean, all the expense of office rent, clerk hire, postage, &c. I do not know whether in the hurry of the consideration of this bill an amendment of that kind could be prepared.

Mr. SARGENT. I will suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Pensions that with this modification of twenty-five cents, as the highest amount now paid is between six and seven thousand dollars, the result will be to bring the highest grade down to $5,000. That will answer the purpose which he has in view. I hope we may have a vote.

Mr. WASHBURN. I only wish to say a word, in order that gentlemen may understand that I have not been making the statements which I have made without authority. Within two weeks I have asked the Commissioner of Pensions what the net receipts of a given pension agent were, and he said to me about $13,000 after paying all his expenses. It seems to me that it would be better if there could be a limit for all these officers, a fair compensation, I care not what it is. If in a given location a pension agent should have a salary of $8,000, why not say that all his fees over that salary shall go into the Treasury of the United States? It does seem to me that there ought to be some limit in regard to these salaries as well as other salaries. I only make the statement because I had occasion to inquire into the receipts of some of these officers in the past, and I was told in regard to the one as to whom I made the inquiry that the gross receipts were so much and that the net receipts amounted to about $13,000, and that was not the largest office in the United States by any means. Many offices in the country are larger than the office to which I specially refer.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have succeeded in calling the attention of the Senate to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. It seemed to have passed through the Committee of the Whole without any attention, and the bill was reported to the Senate. Of course I cannot expect in the face of the information we have here from the Department, and also the urgent request of the Committee on Appropriations, as also of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, that there will be any change of the report as made by the committee. In other words, I suppose the Senate will accept the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations fixing this fee at twenty-five cents; and yet I remain of the opinion that twenty cents will amply cover all the expenses ever contemplated by this law. What was contemplated by the law under which this voucher fee is paid was that it was to compensate for making out the vouchers and the postage to the pension agent in sending them off and getting a return. That was the object, and it is expressed in the law that it is for the purpose of covering these things. In my judgment twenty cents will cover every cent of such additional expense.

If you look at the list that is referred to here and has been presented by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, you will find that two-thirds of these pension agents are paid twice as much as we receive for our services here. You talk about the expense of rent, and yet in half the instances pension agents have their offices in buildings that are furnished by the Government and do not pay one dollar of expense in the way of rent. I speak of this matter, certainly with no disposition to cut the compensation of these men down below what is a fair, reasonable, and just remuneration. I know that in the majority of instances, if not in all, they are most faithful and devoted officers; I know they discharge their duties well; I know the character of the responsibilities of these officers; but at the same time I think with reference to these officers that in addition to a percentage we then tack on fees and fees and fees from time to time, and they absolutely get out of the Treasury three times as much as the salaries that are paid to those who, in my judgment, should have as much if not more than they have.

Now I cannot hope that twenty cents will be the sum fixed; and, indeed, in view of what is said by the Commissioner of Pensions, and what is insisted on by the Senator having the bill in charge, and what is said by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, I feel myself as if I was resisting against any hope. I can have no hope that there will be any change, but in my judgment there should be a change.

So far as the suggestion is concerned from our friends, the pension agents, that this compensation is not too high, I should not expect they would think otherwise. Certainly, so far as I know anything about them, they are excellent, good men. In my own State, I know, I have had letters from them insisting that the compensation is not too much. I am exceedingly anxious to accommodate them. I should like them to have every dollar they want, but my duty here is to see that this compensation shall not be greater than they are really entitled to. Giving them such compensation will pay them well for their services and take no more out of the Treasury than they ought to have.

Mr. SARGENT. It should not be lost sight of that the pension-roll is continually decreasing, and that every month as it passes reduces the pay of these persons. If by the decrease of business their pay is reduced, and then because their pay has been larger heretofore we cut down the proportion of it to the amount of business which they perform, we reduce at both ends, and, of course they cannot receive the compensation they ought to have. I do not speak for the large offices, and there are but few of them where perhaps the amount may exceed that named by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, although upon that I am not informed; but I say the great bulk of these officers will scarcely be paid on twenty-five cents. At twenty cents most of them will have to stop. So the Commissioner informs us, and so the Committee on Appropriations believe. This is a reduction from thirty to twenty-five cents, one-sixth. I trust we may have a vote and accept the amendment.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to add a word more before the vote is taken on this amendment. I have received a letter from the pension agent at Fort Wayne in my State. We have three pension agencies, one at Fort Wayne, one at Madison, and another at Indianapolis. Mr. Iddings, the pension agent at Fort Wayne, gives me the amount of his receipts in the way of fees of every kind with which the Government charges him, and the sum total is $8,031.58. Then he proceeds to give in detail the expenses of his office. I think his statement is a candid and reliable one, and what he says of this office is probably true of the majority of the offices.

The first item which he puts in the expense account, which he must pay out of the receipts of the office, is postage, $1,360. The next is contingent expenses, $156.78; then clerks, $2,400; office rent, $300; fuel, $100; gas, $30; printing, $30; wear and tear of furniture, $50; total expenses, $4,426.78. Taking this amount from $8,031.58, and it leaves $3,604.80 which he is in the receipt of at this time as net proceeds of his office under the existing law allowing thirty cents a voucher. He says that if the voucher fee is cut down to thirty cents, there will be $1,360 to deduct from this, leaving only $2,244.80, which would be about the average salary per annum. He adds:

When you consider the great responsibility of the office requiring bonds representing $400,000, you can see the injustice of reducing the fees.

I presume this statement is a fair illustration of the expenses of the other agents.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

On motion of Mr. BOGY, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 32) obviating the necessity of issuing patents for certain private land claims in State of Missouri, and for other purposes.

The amendment was to strike out all of the second section after "United States" in line 6, as follows:

And all persons who, under the statute of limitations of said State, would be protected in their possessions had patents for the lands or lots aforesaid occupied by them been lawfully issued at the date of the confirmation of the claims thereto as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have the equitable title to the lands so occupied by them within the meaning of this section, and the release herein provided for shall be as effectual in their favor as in cases where the owner derives title from the original claimant or confirmee.

Mr. BOGY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ERRORS IN PRIZE-LISTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 229) authorizing corrections to be made in errors in prize-lists.

The amendments were to strike out the first section, as follows:

That in all cases where corrections in the distribution of prize-money have or may become necessary, and in all cases where the names of parties entitled to share in prizes have been or may by error be omitted from the prize-lists, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to correct and pay the same, the former upon the principle that the provisions of the act in force at the date of final adjudication govern distribution, and the latter to receive their proportion of the prizes claimed the same as all others of like rank and pay who may have been paid, said payments to be made out of the naval pension fund.

And in line 9 of second section, after the word "paragraph," to insert "said payments to be made out of the naval pension fund."

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the amendments of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BUCKINGHAM, it was Ordered, That John B. Chapman have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

CHEAP TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY.) The resolution of the Senator from Minnesota is now before the Senate as the unfinished business.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas cheap and ample means for the interchange of commodities between the different sections of our country constitute essential conditions of the national advancement and prosperity; and whereas the Select Committee on Transportation, after full investigation of the subject, report that in their judgment cheap transportation can only be obtained through competition under governmental control and operating through cheaper means of transport than are now provided; that such cheaper means of transport can only be provided by the construction of double-track freight railways or by the improvement and creation of water-routes; and that after a most careful consideration of the merits of various proposed improvements, taking into account the cost, practicability, and probable advantage of each, the committee have come to the unanimous conclusion that the following are the most feasible and advantageous channels of commerce to be created or improved by the national Government in case Congress shall act upon this subject, namely:

First, the Mississippi River;

Second, a continuous water line of adequate capacity from the Mississippi River to the city of New York, via the northern lakes;

Third, a route adequate to the wants of commerce through the central tier of States from the Mississippi River, via the Ohio and Kanawha Rivers, to a point in West Virginia, and thence by canal and slack-water, or by a freight railway, to tide-water;

Fourth, a route from the Mississippi River, via the Ohio and Tennessee Rivers, to a point in Alabama or Tennessee, and thence by canal and slack-water, or by a freight railway, to the ocean;

And whereas the said committee express the opinion that among other benefits and advantages the completion of the system of improvements suggested by them will effect a permanent reduction of 50 per cent. in the cost of transporting fourth-class freights from the valley of the Mississippi River to the sea-board, and a similar reduction in return freights, thereby insuring remunerative prices to the farmer of the West, cheaper food to the manufacturer and laborer at the East and the cotton-planter of the South, the enhancement by many hundreds of millions in the value of western and southern lands, and a large increase in the exportations of cotton and cereal products; and whereas the report of said select committee recommends that careful surveys and estimates be made upon such portion of said routes as may be necessary to determine accurately the cost of each, and to enable Congress at its next session to enter upon the said system of improvements if upon the completion of such surveys and estimates the same shall be deemed practicable and expedient: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and hereby are, instructed to report amendments to the pending river and harbor bill making appropriations for completing the surveys and estimates for each of the improvements recommended by said select committee upon the four routes indicated in said report.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, having occupied the attention of the Senate some three hours on this question, it is not my intention now to discuss it at any length. I desire merely to state that the object of this resolution is to obtain an expression of the view of the Senate upon the system of improvements recommended, and also to obtain appropriations for the completion of the surveys of such portions of the various routes recommended as have not been accurately surveyed. The preamble to the resolution states as clearly as I can state them now the reasons for this recommendation, and also sets forth the routes recommended by the committee. A very large proportion of these four routes have already been surveyed, but there are sections of each that need additional surveys. The Mississippi River, for instance, needs very little if any surveying from Saint Paul to New Orleans; but the report of the Engineer Department shows that the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River requires additional investigation, and they recommend that before any location be made of the proposed Fort Saint Philip Canal additional surveys shall be made. At the head-waters of the Mississippi River surveys are necessary. I think that the most remarkable results may be obtained for the smallest amount of money by the improvements recommended by the Engineer Department at the head-waters of the Mississippi. A careful reconnaissance has been made by the engineer in charge, who reports that for an expenditure of $114,000 from two and a half to three feet additional water may be given at Saint Paul and below during the entire dry season. It is now almost impossible to navigate the Mississippi in that section of country for two or three months of the year on account of low water. The report from the department, made, too, after a very careful examination, but not an accurate survey, is that the very small sum I have named, $114,000, will give instead of a depth of two and a half to three feet from four and a half to five feet of navigation for nearly fifteen hundred miles on the Upper Mississippi River. That is one of the points, too, which should be surveyed.

The northern route, as recommended by the committee, comprises the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, and also the construction of a canal from the Mississippi River, near Rock Island, to Hennepin, in the State of Illinois, in order to connect the Mississippi River with the lake system of navigation. No surveys are necessary of the first-named improvement. The Government already owns the Fox and Wisconsin improvement, appropriations having been yearly made for it, very much too small, however, either for economical or practical purposes. No surveys are necessary there, and consequently are not included in this recommendation; but so far as the Hennepin is concerned, the connecting link between the Mississippi River and the Illinois River, additional surveys are necessary. Following that line on to the eastward no surveys are necessary, except to determine the best line of improvement from either Lake Ontario, by way of Oswego and Oneida Lakes, to Albany, or from Lake Champlain to connect with the deep water of the Hudson River. The surveys are necessary to determine which of these two routes is the best; but nothing further that I am aware of on what is called in the report of the committee "the northern route."

Coming down, then, to the central route, which extends from the mouth of the Ohio River at Cairo to tide-water in Virginia, I believe that no further surveys are needed until you reach the eastern end of the route. On the Ohio River surveys have been made year after year, and I believe it is very thoroughly understood; but from the point on the Kanawha River to tide-water in Virginia additional surveys are recommended by the department, and in their investigations the committee were unable to ascertain with sufficient accuracy what would be the cost of the improvement recommended. It is estimated quite as closely as it could be upon the location made, but a board of engineers appointed in December last recommend that additional surveys shall be made for the purpose of improving the location; and also if the alternative proposition recommended by the committee shall ever be deemed practicable, it is necessary to survey a line for a freight railway from that point to tide-water.

On the southern route, extending from the mouth of the Tennessee River to Knoxville, and thence to tide-water, I believe no surveys are necessary except from some point in Alabama to the Atlantic Ocean.

I have called at the Engineer Department and requested an estimate to be made of the probable cost of the surveys recommended by the select committee. As near as it could be ascertained when I made the request for information, the entire expense of the surveys will be in the neighborhood of $200,000 to complete the system indorsed by the Select Committee on Transportation.

When I had the honor to address the Senate on this subject some three or four weeks ago, I endeavored to show what would be the advantages of the adoption of these lines of improvement. The committee were entirely unanimous in their estimates of the benefits to be expected, and I want to say to the Senate that the estimates made in the report by the committee are not based upon theory. In endeavoring to ascertain the value of any given improvement in the reduction of the cost of transportation, two bases of estimates were presented, one theory as adopted by engineers and others, and the other actual transactions on similar water lines. The estimates of the committee are based upon the latter; and in saying to the Senate that the completion of the system of improvements recommended by the committee may reasonably be expected to reduce the cost of transportation between the Mississippi River and the sea-board 50 per cent., the committee based their calculations upon what is done elsewhere on similar lines in this and other countries, and they have entirely discarded theory and looked only to these practical results. Hence I come before the Senate with a great deal of confidence when I say that it is my firm conviction that the carrying out to successful completion of the system of improvements here recommended will reduce the cost to the farmers, the mechanics, the merchants, the laboring class of the country, full 50 per cent. of the transportation between these sections of the country; and I also believe firmly that the committee did not overestimate the advantages in stating in their report that the enhanced value of western lands in eight States alone will amount to over $1,000,000,000 upon the completion of these works.

Mr. President, it is not my intention, as I said in the outset, to discuss this resolution. I hope and believe that it will have no opposition, that we may be permitted at least to ascertain what will be the cost of these improvements, so that when the question may be presented to us in the future, we may act intelligently upon the subject; and unless there be some objection, I will not spend further time now on this portion of the committee's business. I wish to say, however, to the Senate that there are two bills reported from the committee to which I desire to ask their attention after this resolution shall have been acted upon.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator. I see that this resolution proposes to charge the Committee on Appropriations with the duty of reporting certain amendments to provide the necessary means for these surveys. My inquiry is, whether there is any basis upon which the Committee on Appropriations could make an estimate? Are there any estimates of the probable expense of such a survey?

Mr. WINDOM. The estimates will be prepared as soon as the committee call for them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest as a more direct way of coming at it, that instead of sending it to the Committee on Appropriations to report amendments to the river and harbor bill, this resolution should go directly to the Committee on Commerce, who have that bill under consideration and who could very properly consider such a subject.

Mr. WINDOM. I understood the Senator from Maine to say that he expected the river and harbor bill to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and as there were three members of the Select Committee on Transportation on that committee, I thought perhaps it would be better understood and more readily presented from that committee than the other. I am not particular as to which committee it goes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I make no point upon it. I simply make the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not rise to discuss the resolution itself, but I have prepared an amendment to be added at the end of the resolution, which I have submitted to the chairman of the committee as well as to several of its members, not for the purpose of having the committee committed to the route which is named in it as one of the routes which ought to be made a water-route communication, but for the purpose of having a survey and estimate made upon that route. It is one of those to which attention was early directed in the history of the Government. It is a very short one, and will not involve much expense. I send the amendment which will embrace it to the desk, and ask to have it added at the end of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to add at the end of the resolution the following:

And also upon a route from the mouth of the Youghiogheny River to continue slack-water navigation up said river to its head-waters at the foot of the Alleghany Mountains, thence by canal to Cumberland, intersecting there the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I see that this resolution is mandatory. The committee is instructed to report in favor of these surveys. Now, Mr. President, this question of cheap transportation is one that has received the attention of Congress for many years. It is seventeen years since the Committee on Commerce took up this subject of cheap transportation. Prior to 1857 the cost of transportation from Chicago to Buffalo per bushel of wheat averaged from fifteen to twenty-five cents. At that time the heaviest draught ship that could pass the Saint Clair flats drew not to exceed eight feet of water, and the average class of ships engaged in that traffic were about sixteen thousand bushel, or about three hundred ton ships. The first appropriation obtained to deepen those channels and enlarge the size of ships was I think in the appropriation bill of 1857 or 1858, to deepen the channel over the Saint Clair flats to the depth of twelve feet, allowing the passage of vessels drawing twelve feet or with a capacity of from thirty to forty thousand bushels. It was ascertained that a ship carrying forty thousand bushels of wheat was navigated with just two sailors more before the mast than the ship that carried sixteen thousand bushels. We have gone on until we have deepened that channel to fourteen feet, thus enabling us to use ships with a capacity of seventy thousand bushels; and the difference in expense is very slight. It only requires the same number of officers, the same number of cooks, the same number of men, with the exception of three additional men before the mast, to navigate a ship carrying seventy thousand bushels of grain that are required to navigate one carrying sixteen thousand bushels.

In the course of these seventeen years, Mr. President, we have actually lowered the cost of transportation of wheat and corn from Chicago to Buffalo from fifteen to twenty cents a bushel down to from three and a half to eleven cents a bushel. Eleven cents is now a very high rate, and three and a half cents is a very low rate; but there is the average, from three and a half to eleven cents a bushel; and this has been accomplished by deepening the present channels of water communication.

We have before us a mandatory resolution from the Committee on Transportation proposing the survey of four routes; one, a double-track railway route and two or three other different routes. Heretofore the Committee on Commerce has confined itself exclusively to the improvement of water-routes which nature has made and has not gone into any artificial improvement. We have expended a very large amount of money upon the mouth of the Mississippi River. We have expended a very large amount upon the Louisville and Portland Canal, enlarging it, deepening it, and have lowered the price of transportation there. We have virtually removed the raft from the Red River and abolished upon the Red River a cotton tax which amounted to one dollar upon every bale of cotton transported by that Red River raft, which was an enormous tax upon the cotton raised above that raft. All these things we have accomplished virtually, for the appropriation proposed in the river and harbor bill will finish the removal of that raft, and thus open up all that vast country above the Red River raft to cheap transportation.

Now, Mr. President, I do not think that the Senate of the United States has sufficient information before it to pass a mandatory resolution directing either the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Commerce to order a survey of these four great routes. Who in this body knows what will be the cost of these four surveys? I do not. My impression is that this subject should receive further investigation before we order any committee of this body to bring in a bill making an appropriation to survey these new routes, one of which is to be a double-track railroad route. Who knows what that will cost? I do not. Who knows how it will be run? I do not. Who knows what the survey of these other proposed routes will cost? I do not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I offer the following amendment to the resolution:

And also for a route for a ship-canal connecting the waters of the Chesapeake Bay with Delaware Bay at such point as will best promote the foreign and coastwise commerce of the country.

Mr. WINDOM. I am quite unwilling to oppose any surveys that may be deemed desirable by the Senate, for I think it is very desirable to know all we can on this subject; but here is a specific question presented on which the committee asks the judgment of the Senate, and therefore I hope that the action of the Senate may be confined to this question. There will be ample opportunity when the bill comes before the Senate for the Senator from Delaware to present his proposition and ask the judgment of the Senate upon it.

If I am not taking the floor from the Senator from Delaware, I desire to thank the honorable Senator from Michigan for his contribution to this question. If what little has been done during the last seventeen years has accomplished such wonderful results as he has stated, it is certainly the very strongest possible encouragement to improve upon and to accelerate a policy that has thus far proved so successful.

My honorable friend from Michigan thinks that having done so much in seventeen years we should wait about sixteen years longer to see if we cannot accomplish about as much more. I tell him that the agricultural interests, the manufacturing interests, the laboring interests of this country do not propose to wait sixteen years to accomplish a result that can be accomplished in five or six years. The Legislatures of one-half of this Union—conventions representing people from all portions of the Union, representatives coming from the manufacturing, the laboring, and the farming interests of the country—have all called upon Congress to act on this subject, and they demand that we act now one way or the other.

The Senator says that we have not sufficient information on this subject to pass a mandatory resolution directing a committee even to report an appropriation for surveys, and he wants further investigation. Mr. President, I knew very well more than a year ago that nothing could be done on this subject until a thorough investigation had been made, and hence I deemed it wise to take the first necessary step, and that was to ask for a committee of investigation to consider thoroughly this very question. The Senate appointed a committee. During almost the entire summer of last year and a portion of last winter this committee devoted themselves assiduously and earnestly to this question. They have taken testimony covering eleven or twelve hundred pages of printed matter. They have devoted more than six months of time to this question. Now I ask the honorable Senator from Michigan if he wants another committee appointed to go over the same ground, to reinvestigate this question?

Mr. WEST. And travel all over the country.

Mr. WINDOM. And travel all over the country, as the Senator from Louisiana suggests. I myself traveled over twenty thousand miles investigating this question. The select committee of this body I think were in twenty-five States of this Union, calling before them men best advised with reference to it, taking their views; and that committee, composed of nine Senators of this body, came to the unanimous conclusion that the system of improvements recommended, and for which I now ask a completion of surveys, is the best system of improvements and that it will accomplish the great results which I have named. And yet in view of the fact that the last year has been spent on this subject by one of your committees, in view of the fact that they have made the most thorough and careful examination that can be made, the honorable Senator says: "Let us continue to investigate; let us wait sixteen years longer; let us go on as we have been doing for the last seventeen years, and in sixteen or seventeen years more we may expect to accomplish still greater results than have been accomplished." I say to him, for one, that I am not willing to wait; and speaking in behalf of the interests of those whom I represent, and I honestly believe of more than one-half, yea, of five-sixths of the people of these United States upon that subject, I say they are not willing to wait.

We are told that the demand has constantly been made for years that something should be done on this question. That demand has been made. We have heard it from year to year. The interests of this country have suffered for want of action. Congress has waited, doled out a pittance here and there, and really accomplished but very little compared to what might have been accomplished on this question. I think that the system of improvements adopted in the river and harbor bill, and generally acted upon by this body, has been one of the most unwise systems, taking it altogether, that could possibly have been adopted by Congress. Little appropriations have been made here and there all over the country, scratching a little here and scratching a little there; an appropriation of five or ten thousand dollars, enough perhaps to carry the vote of the Representative of some district, and yet not enough to accomplish any results.

I am in favor of the adoption of a system of improvements. Let us look the question squarely in the face; adopt the best system we can; and then make our appropriations large enough to accomplish results, and to accomplish them economically. It is well known that where you appropriate ten, fifteen, or twenty-five thousand dollars for a given improvement, advertisements have to be made, contracts are let, parties buy their tools and their implements for doing the work; but they have no assurance that they will be permitted to complete the work; they only have the contract for that small sum appropriated; somebody else may get it next year; and every contractor who takes work under the river and harbor appropriations makes his calculations to get money enough out of his contract to pay for the loss of his implements, or his plant, as they call it; and we have thus squandered from year to year money enough, if it had been appropriated as is done in England after a carefully considered scheme had been prepared and then money enough appropriated to work economically, to have accomplished very far greater results than those mentioned by the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MERRIMON. I desire to offer an amendment, to insert at the end of the resolution the following:

And also for ascertaining by such surveys whether it is practicable to construct a ship-canal passing near the Atlantic sea-board from the city of New York to Galveston in the State of Texas.

I desire to say just a word. The resolution under consideration, should it pass, involves the appropriation of a very considerable sum of money, and in that view it is interesting; but there is another consideration of more moment to me, and that is, it commits Congress in some degree to the line of policy indicated by the report of the committee. For one, I scarcely feel prepared to say that I favor that policy or that I oppose it. It involves so many considerations of vast magnitude and going to the nature and character of our Government, that I have not had an opportunity to examine it carefully or to arrive at any very satisfactory conclusions about it. Therefore I would be glad if it were deferred until the next session of Congress. I do not believe with the pressure of business now upon Congress that it can be examined into as it ought to be at the present session. If, however, the resolution shall pass, it seems to me no more important inquiry can be made within the compass of the resolution than that indicated by the amendment which I offer. It is a plan which I know many persons have entertained for many years; the idea of inland means of water communication from New York City to Galveston, embracing the whole eastern and southern Atlantic sea-board. I do not care to say anything further now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I accept the criticisms of the honorable Senator from Minnesota with all due humility. Undoubtedly, if I traveled twenty thousand miles and looked at some earthworks and rivers and crossed some mountains, I should think I knew more than anybody else in the United States. But while I accept this criticism with all due humility, I wish to inform that Senator that we have not exactly been scratching gravel here and there with the appropriation made on the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce. We have done some substantial work and in the main the work has been well done, and our appropriations have been judicious appropriations in the main. Look at the Louisville Canal; look at that monstrous work right below the Senator's own town in the State of Minnesota, the Rock Island Rapids Canal, where we have expended millions; and yet we have been scratching gravel, have we? I will show him where we have taken out thousands upon thousands of cords of rock, not scratching dirt. We have made such appropriations as we have been enabled to make, and we have made them with all the judgment that we possessed and with all the information that could be given us from the board of engineers or from any other source; and while the Committee on Commerce do not pretend to know as much about transportation as the Committee on Transportation, we do know as much about the work that we have done.

Sir, we may have recommended injudicious appropriations, and why? Because from year to year some member of this or the other House has put on the river and harbor appropriation bill the injudicious survey of some injudicious point, and the engineers have been instructed by this body to estimate how much will be the cost of those works. The next year they have come in, and come in from year to year, and demanded from us an appropriation because you ordered your engineers to estimate what that work would cost; and the Committee on Commerce has no responsibility for those injudicious appropriations that were put on by your order.

Mr. WINDOM. I am sorry my friend from Michigan takes this matter so much to heart. I certainly did not desire to criticise him. I certainly did not desire to assume that the Committee on Transportation knew more on this question than he did, for I concede to my honorable friend from Michigan entire and complete knowledge on this subject. The only trouble with him, however, is, I think, that his horizon is a little bounded occasionally in his appropriations; it is a little narrow; and I think that has been felt by Congress and by the country for a good while.

In my criticism of the river and harbor bill I think the Senator misunderstood me somewhat. I did not mean to say that valuable appropriations had not been made; but what I did mean to say was that no system of improvements had ever been adopted; and with all my honorable friend's knowledge on that subject, and with all his experience running through seventeen years, I still think that no adequate system of improvements has ever been devised and adopted by this Government; but we have appropriated from year to year to meet the demand that happened to present itself at the time. I am finding no fault with my friend on that subject. I think he has acted upon his best judgment, and probably it is the best; but I think further that some system ought to be devised now, and that when appropriations are made hereafter they should be made large enough to be economically managed.

My friend refers triumphantly to the great improvement in the Mississippi River at Rock Island. I have myself talked with the authorities on that subject, and I think if he will consult them he will find that the work has cost us vastly more than it need have done. If money enough had been appropriated to complete the work, or at least appropriated in larger amounts so that it would not have encountered the difficulties which I mentioned a while ago, that work would have been completed years ago and it would have paid every year for its entire cost; but instead of that, we have appropriated a small sum this year and a small sum the next year, and continued year after year not to scratch gravel there, as my friend seems to find fault with that expression, but to peck at the rocks instead of taking them out as we should have done in two years from the time we commenced; and each contractor every year has been compelled to lose the implements he had provided; and the expense has been vastly increased, I have no question.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the adoption of this resolution does not commit Congress to the construction of any one of the works described in it. Voting for it does not commit any Senator to an appropriation of money for the construction of any one of these works, and in supporting this resolution I do not now intend to commit myself to an appropriation of money for the construction of any one of these works. But the first step to be taken is to ascertain, are these proposed works practicable? Can they be constructed? What will be the cost of them? Are they within reach of our financial capacity? Are they within reach of the ability of the Government? And when we find out whether they are practicable, and whether the expense will be such that the Government can bear it, we can then judge of the expediency of it; we can compare the expense with the benefit to result to the poeple from the construction of these works, and determine our action accordingly.

The report made by the Transportation Committee is full of valuable information. I hope every Senator will read it. It is very suggestive. The estimate that is made in this resolution as to the reduction of the price of transportation for heavy freights, it seems to me, is strongly borne out by many of the facts contained in the report. And I will say to Senators that the mind of this nation is now turned more strongly than ever before to the question of cheap transportation. It is not to be baffled; it is not to be put off by jokes or sneers or anything else. It is a question that affects us for all time; that affects not simply the people of one neighborhood, but the people of the whole country; not simply the agriculturists in the valley of the Ohio and the Mississippi and the Missouri, but the people of the Eastern States and of the Southern States, who are the consumers of the products of the West. Every portion of the country is interested in this inquiry; and this inquiry, Mr. President, is to be met by Congress promptly; we are not to have a procrastinating policy.

The Senator from Michigan says much has been done within the last fifteen or sixteen years. I will not deny that; but still taking that rate of progress, how long will it require to accomplish the improvements suggested in this report? I should think about two hundred years.

So far as the expense of these surveys is concerned, it is a mere bagatelle compared to the importance of the whole question. If these improvements are found to be practicable, if the expenditure is within our reach, if the benefits to result from them will at all compare with the representations that have been made, then the money invested in making these improvements will be the best investment that this Government has ever made.

Mr. President, the questions involved are of the first magnitude, and, as the Senator from Minnesota suggests, we want a policy upon this subject. We never have had one. It has been patch-work from first to last, a little here and a little there; but the time has come when the whole question must be considered. How shall we begin that consideration? By accurate information that lies at the bottom of it, by the surveys of the projected routes. When we get a substratum of solid information to stand upon we can then consider as to the superstructure we shall erect upon it. We ought to have a policy upon this subject. There are the great States of the West and the Northwest—the State of Indiana eight hundred miles from the nearest sea-port, and which must always be that far off, and when you cheapen transportation as best you can it is still a great obstacle, it is still a great difficulty, and must ever remain so. But let it be cheapened as far as it can be, so that the people of the West shall have the same advantages as nearly as possible as those who live upon the sea-board, and so that those who live in the great cities of the East shall have the advantages as far as possible of those who live in the interior, so that you shall bring production and consumption together with as little cost as possible. So far as our surplus production is concerned that must be sent to a foreign market. It is a matter of great consideration that the expense of getting it to a sea-port shall be reduced as far as possible, because then it must still bear the additional transportation across the seas, and so back of freights.

I think, Mr. President, that this resolution does not come too soon, and I shall vote for it very cheerfully.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the pending amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert at the end of the resolution the following:

> And also for ascertaining by such surveys whether it is practicable to construct a ship-canal passing near the Atlantic sea-board from the city of New York to Galveston, in the State of Texas.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think, Mr. President, a little reflection will convince the Senator from North Carolina that he is introducing into this resolution a subject that has no pertinency whatever to it. This resolution is reported by the Committee on Transportation, who were directed to examine the question of transportation from the West to the sea-board. The committee labored faithfully and diligently; and I will now take occasion to speak of the work of the chairman especially, who devoted months and months of very severe labor to solve the question of cheap transportation from the West to the sea-board. The committee explored not only the northern and central region, but the southern country, looking everywhere to carry out, if possible, the idea of the Senate in instructing the committee to secure cheap transportation from the West to the sea-board. And now, when this committee, after long deliberation and after certainly as much labor as was ever bestowed by a committee of the Senate of the United States on any subject, and upon a subject of the gravest importance, report a resolution to the Senate asking that certain routes indicated by them by a unanimous vote shall be explored and surveyed by the engineers of the United States, they are met by various propositions that have no bearing whatever upon the question submitted by them.

First, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] submitted a proposition for a survey between navigable waters on the Atlantic. Well, sir, there has been no time for the last twenty years when any member from the State of Delaware could not have offered an amendment to the river and harbor bill and have had that survey ordered without the slightest objection. Now, an attempt is made to load down this proposition, which is intended to survey routes from the West to the sea-board, with a proposition to survey the whole coast line of the United States from Boston to Galveston. That is not the way in which this great and important subject should be treated. Why, sir, there has been more expended on the survey of the Atlantic coast from Boston to Galveston, ten times over, yea, twenty times over, than will be needed to complete this whole survey. The entire coast has been surveyed in all its borders, all its ramifications, all its bays, and bayous, and rivers. It every way possible it has been surveyed by a corps set apart expressly for that purpose, and appropriations have been made annually to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars for many years for that survey of the coast from one end to the other. And now here is a prpposition that may if adopted cost the Government from one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand dollars to survey great interior lines of rivers and routes across mountains, through various regions of country. I am told by the Senator from Minnesota that the engineers estimate that the entire cost of this survey will be only $200,000, the most of the lines having already been surveyed in the examination and exploration of the country heretofore.

Mr. WINDOM. I stated to the Senator about $200,000. It was not completed when I called there.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, about $200,000. So the whole survey proposed by the committee for the exploration of great routes affecting all parts of the country from the extreme North to the extreme South, the extreme East to the extreme West, will cost less than the annual ordinary appropriation for the survey of the coast.

Although it has not been pressed very strongly upon the Senate on account of the condition of our finances, yet I tell you, Senators, the subject now before you is one of the great subjects of the future. The people of the East as well as the people of Europe demand for consumption all the products of the West and of the South—cotton, corn, wheat, and all these great productions—and new channels of communication must be opened. I am not one who is disposed to rush eagerly into this matter, to involve this country in great and undue expense beyond its means; but I say this is a subject that ought to be considered, has been considered, and will be considered, not only by Congress, but by the people of the United States. While you have millions of acres requiring hands in the West, and millions of mouths requiring food in the East, and hundreds of millions in Europe demanding food from America, this question of cheap transportation will be ever present and overriding, and will control the politics and the destiny of men in a measure.

I have no doubt the necessity will be daily pressed upon Congress of opening up new channels of communication from the East to the West. Railroads have already done great good, have accomplished great results; but they do not produce that which is necessary—cheap transportation. They produce rapid transportation, sure transportation, winter and summer. The useful results, the benefits conferred upon this country by railroads, cannot be measured; but they do not produce that one thing still needful—cheap transportation, by which the heavy commodities of the far West can be transported to the East; and the mode and manner in which the people of the United States may avail themselves of the benefit of cheap transportation must be solved by Congress, or it will be solved by the people.

I have felt, therefore, as a member of this Committee on Transportation, while we have bestowed a great deal of labor on this subject, that we could not in reason, in the present condition of our finances, demand much of Congress. We could not expect at this time that Congress would indorse any particular scheme of public improvement, whether it should be done by corporations created by Congress or by a direct appropriation by Congress; but I thought it was a very modest request when this committee, after their long labor, were willing only to ask of Congress to expend enough money to survey the routes that had been proposed by them, to apply the labor and skill of the Engineer Corps now in our service and under our pay to examine whether or not these great improvements which promise such grand results can be effected within the limits proposed by the committee. I trust Senators will look on this resolution not as an entering wedge into great expenditure, but as a careful survey, as a careful preparation, for an expenditure that will be justified by the good that will be produced by it.

Now, sir, to appropriate $200,000 for this purpose is not a large sum. It may be that these surveys will indicate that the canals that have been proposed by the people of many States are totally impracticable, and that there are better modes of transportation across mountains than by artificial channels of water. It may be demonstrated by the engineers that the plans that have been proposed and suggested by States and communities for the improvement of rapid streams like the Ohio are not practicable and that some other means may be devised. It may be shown that the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River—a work of primary importance, affecting nearly two-thirds of the people of the United States—instead of being accomplished in one way may be accomplished in another. It may be shown that rivers may be connected in Illinois and Wisconsin and the Northwest at a trifling cost which will cheapen enormously the transportation of heavy commodities in that section. It may be shown by a careful analysis, by a careful comparison of information already obtained and that which may be acquired hereafter, that the improvement of the canals across the State of New York, or the improvement of the natural line of communication along the northern lakes and the Saint Lawrence, may be carried out on such a basis as enormously to reduce the expenses of transportation.

One of the most interesting inquiries that I participated in in the course of this examination was in regard to that great southern country—a country more fertile than any other I know of, capable of producing all the most valuable articles of commerce, cotton and other productions which enter into our exchanges with foreign countries. There is a vast, almost untold, area of country, capable of producing vast crops. They have rivers, as we have in the North, that are capable of improvement. They have the Tennessee and other rivers that never have been examined, have never been surveyed. Those States in former times either were not prepared or were not willing to engage in the examination of their capacities for internal production. I should like to see these rivers explored. I should like to see them surveyed and mapped out, their shoals and channels blocked out and marked out, and estimates produced to us as to the cost of removing those natural obstacles.

I think, therefore, that when this committee come here, after their labor, and ask you only to appropriate $200,000 to survey, and examine, and analyze, and test by the skill of engineers, by the level and the chain, by all the machinery and tools of educated engineers the various schemes that have been submitted to us, it is but a reasonable demand, and ought to receive the hearty vote of the Senate; and I trust it will not be obstructed by amendments that have no bearing on the question. The question of the Atlantic commerce has always been dealt with liberally. We appropriate every year millions upon millions for cleaning out harbors. We have cleaned out, and scooped out, and dug out every harbor along the Atlantic coast and the lake coast. We have done nothing whatever for the great interior rivers of the country. We have spent more money in the single State of Michigan in making artificial harbors there and improving natural harbors—and I do not complain of it, because I voted for it—than we have expended on the whole Mississippi River with all its vast commerce, where you have a river two thousand miles long, with its tributaries giving you a steamboat navigation of over five thousand miles. We have scarcely done anything toward the improvement of those great and magnificent channels, but we have expended our money mainly in making artificial or improving natural harbors along the lake coast or along the Atlantic coast. Our country has so expanded and extended over vast areas in the interior that the time has arrived when internal commerce must be examined, and internal channels of commerce must be improved as well as those along the coast and the harbors that receive the trade of foreign nations.

I trust, therefore, that this proposition will not be loaded with extraneous matter, but that this resolution, which recognizes the labors of the Committee on Transportation and directs a small appropriation to be made to survey and examine these improvements, will be passed readily, and then we shall postpone to the future the examination as to the question of the mode and manner in which these improvements shall be made, whether by the State governments or by the national Government, whether by private corporations or by public appropriations, whether by loans or taxes. All these questions follow after, and all of them will come up in due time; but the preliminary step, the first step of all, is to get sure, exact information, without which no dollar ought to be expended and no appropriation made.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I do not underrate the importance of this resolution, or the subject-matter with which the Select Committee on Transportation at the last session of the Senate was charged. I regard it as of the most serious moment, one that interests every section of the country; and if the Senator from Ohio supposes that I have offered the amendment in any spirit of hostility to the resolution now under consideration he very much misapprehends my purpose. I offered it in all seriousness and to accomplish a very important work, in my judgment one of as much value as any covered by the resolution of the committee, and one affecting every section of the country.

It does not occur to me that this amendment is not germane to the purpose of the resolution under consideration, or that it is outside of the business with which the Committee on Transportation was charged. On the contrary it comes within the purview of that purpose. The object of that committee was to ascertain what means should be adopted with a view to facilitate cheap transportation, not in one direction or another, but throughout the whole Union; not to benefit one particular section or another particular section, but to benefit the whole country.

Now, sir, I do not object to any suggestion the committee has made; on the contrary for the present I am prepared to say that I approve of them all; but that does not cut me off from making additional suggestions, and I trust it will not prevent the Senate from acting upon additional suggestions in the same direction. It seems to me that this amendment is calculated to accomplish a very important purpose. It is vitally important to the West and the East. Whether you pass from the West to the East south of this point or north of it, it is likewise important to get from the North to the South. The great money crop of this country is the cotton crop. A great portion of that cotton crop is consumed in the Eastern States and a large proportion of that product which is shipped abroad goes to the city of New York for transportation. We know by common experience, as well as by the report of the committee itself, that the cost of transportation of cotton as well as of everything else by rail is much greater than by water. We know also that to transport cotton by water outside the Atlantic coast is dangerous; that if a ship-canal from New York to Galveston were in existence transportation would probably not be half upon heavy articles that it now is in point of cost.

I do not care, however, to go into a general discussion of this subject. It is one that has engaged the serious attention of private individuals and of public authorities in some localities for years past. It was deemed to be a subject of so much gravity that the President on one occasion regarded it to be his duty to call it to the serious consideration of Congress; and, in support of this amendment, I propose to read an extract from his message of December 2, 1872. The President in speaking of this subject says:

> Looking to the great future growth of our country, and the increasing demands of commerce, it might be well, while on this subject, not only to have examined and reported upon the various practicable routes for connecting the Mississippi with tide-water on the Atlantic, but the feasibility of an almost continuous land-locked navigation from Maine to the Gulf of Mexico. Such a route along our coast would be of great value at all times, and of inestimable value in case of a foreign war. Nature has provided the greater part of this route, and the obstacles to overcome are easily within the skill of the engineer.

That is in direct support of the amendment which I offer. I do insist that it is but reasonable and just that the whole Atlantic coast from New York to Galveston should have at least the consideration of making a slight additional appropriation to make a survey. That will not cost a great sum of money. It has been contemplated for years, much longer than the routes indicated by the committee, and it would be strange indeed that any consideration should prevent the Senate from coupling this enterprise with the others, to which I do not object. I trust that the amendment will prevail.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. President, this is a pleasing subject to me; it is a great subject, as has been well said. In my earlier days, if I had been in the Senate of the United States, I would not have heard this great project advocated as I do now by distinguished Senators belonging to the democratic party. Why, sir, it reminds me of the good old days of Clay, Webster, Crittenden, and the host of mighty spirits that have passed away. There is no longer any difficulty on that branch of the subject. My distinguished friend, the pure democrat, and without spot or blemish, the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] introduced an amendment a few minutes ago. It is true it did not succeed; it was not entirely germane, it was understood; but the principle was avowed and indorsed by him, and I give him the right hand of fellowship on that subject. Now, my younger friend, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] who is clear on that side of the House, introduces the most magnificent project that has ever been made known to a citizen of the United States, to wit, a ship-canal from the city of New York to Galveston, Texas. I congratulate him for having done thus, not only as a democrat, but I feel some little interest in Texas. I reside there myself. I am gratified that he has came to the rescue, and if he can succeed I shall be perfectly delighted.

Here permit me to give a few facts about which controversy will not be raised on this occasion in my opinion. I call the attention of the Senate to California, a young State but a noble one, the land of gold. What has California at this day, and how recent it is too in line with the great question on the subject of cereals and those vast improvements that are now necessary to tap this country in every direction? See what California is doing now. But a few years since it was that you could pick up a New York paper and find there large shipments of flour being made regularly from the city of New York to California, and bringing immense and fabulous prices at that. Now what are the facts? California is directly shipping her millions of bushels to Europe seeking a market, and what does she expect to do at an early day? What has California gained? She has her San Francisco.

Now I ask your attention. Go with me, if you please, to Massachusetts. What has Massachusetts? She has her proud Boston, her great commercial city. Go to the State of New York, and she has the leading city of the Union, the city of New York. I invite you to go further with me, to the good old Penn State. You go to Pennsylvania, the loved old name, and there is the mighty city of Philadelphia. You go further, to Maryland, the beautiful name, and Baltimore presents itself there as one of the first and proudest cities of this nation. Go to Virginia, there you will find a Richmond and a Norfolk. But go with me further on, if you please; you already see where I am trying to go. I am trying to reach the other end of the ship-canal of my friend from North Carolina, to wit, Galveston, in Texas. What has Texas? She has her Galveston. That city does not to-day number hundreds of thousands, but it numbers thirty thousand and it is growing as if by magic. I have called your attention to those happy cities, with their vast riches; and now I ask where is their immediate support located? In their respective States. Then, when you have looked at them and turned to the map of the United States, I invite your attention particularly to the region of country that supports the city of Galveston, and when you have done so candor will prompt you to say that at a very early day Texas is to be the great rival State in a commercial sense of New York, because she can at all seasons of the year ship her natural products, her wheat and other cereals, her cotton and the other things so well spoken of by the Senator from Ohio. The city of Galveston has shipped about four hundred thousand bales of cotton this year already. Texas is the leading State in this mighty nation in cotton bales; but then she is capable of raising her untold millions of wheat. Three weeks ago we had flour in our market there. And if we had this grand ship-canal that is now spoken of we could have been feeding New York from the State of Texas. I should like to realize all such benefits, and they will be merited on the part of Galveston at a very early period.

I am not disposed, however, to ride down this morning this great enterprise that is systematized. I am gratified to know that the labor has been expended upon it. I voted for it in the outset, and I hope it will continue, and I have no fear that it will not. It will continue. It is in the line of the great spirit of internal improvement. It develops the vast resources of the country; and it is only necessary to have them developed, and there is no nation under God's heaven that can compete with us. We can feed the world, and we only want facilities so as to enable the producers of the cereals and everything that pertains to this great commercial nation to get them to the sea-board so that we can find a market for them, wherever it may be desirable, broadcast throughout creation.

I do hope that there will be no difficulty in voting this enterprise and having these surveys. I would be gratified if a survey could be had in good faith for a canal from New York to Galveston; I think it would be beneficial. And yet I do not wish to jeopardize this grand project in any way, manner, or shape; but if it would be consistent, I should be gratified to have the amendment made.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to add a very few words to what has been said in support of this resolution. At another time and under other circumstances I should esteem it to be my duty to discuss, and I should take great pleasure in discussing, the general subject involved in the resolution at very much more length than I propose to do at this time. My purpose is to occupy the floor but a very few moments.

I think the resolution proposed and the action of the Senate thus far upon this subject have been entirely in accordance with the logic of sound legislation and also in accordance with the necessities of the country. When I say "in accordance with the necessities of the country," I do not mean that we have met the demands and the wants of the country as they now stand, but that the proposed legislation is in the direction of those wants and those necessities. At the last session of the Senate, very appropriately as I thought, we raised a committee to investigate and consider this entire subject. I but repeat what has been said and what we all know, that that committee, after almost one year of most patient investigation, have submitted to us the result of their labors. I doubt whether there has ever been a report upon any subject that has been so full and so satisfactory as the report that has been thus submitted. Now, having raised the committee and received their report, it is proposed by this resolution that there shall be a survey of the routes that are recommended by the committee. I think that so far as routes are concerned that is as far as we should go at this time. I am therefore opposed to tacking on or putting upon this resolution surveys of any other routes than those that have been recommended. I think that is as far as we should go at this time, and I think it is sufficient.

It has been said, and with very great truth, that this is a question which we are not to trifle with, which cannot and will not be baffled. This country is growing with wonderful rapidity. The great West, which you, sir, and I in part represent, a quarter of a century since was but sparsely settled. Now there is in almost every State of that West an empire. Millions of people are found there, and tens of millions of wealth. It is as important to the people of the East that they should reach that country as that we should reach the East. When years ago this country was thus sparsely settled, when there was but little wealth compared with now, the questions that are pressing upon the public mind at this time attracted but little attention; but developed as it has with these millions of people and these tens of millions of wealth, they are demanding that there shall be some outlet to the immense products of that country, and the East also, as I think most justly, is demanding that these avenues shall be opened up. Whereas in years past there were those who doubted and hesitated upon the question of power, whereas in years past questions were raised as to whether under the powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution we could engage in enterprises of this kind, I think it must be conceded now by all those who investigate the question that under the power to regulate commerce among the States, to go no further, the power obtains and is found in Congress to assist in opening up these avenues.

But it was not my purpose or intention to enter upon the discussion of that question, but rather to suggest that as this resolution stands it proposes that an appropriation shall be made to carry on these surveys. As has been said by the Senator from Indiana, nobody is committed to any of these lines or to all these lines by voting for the resolution. We say, in view of the pressing demands of the people and acting within what we believe to be our power under the Constitution, the recommendation having been made by this committee after traveling over this entire country and investigating the entire subject, we believe it is meet and proper that these surveys shall be made.

Mr. President, it will not do for us to stand still. It will not do for this Congress to adjourn without doing at least this much on this great question. If this Congress shall adjourn and an appropriation not be made at least to the extent contemplated by this resolution, we shall find that we have failed in meeting the demands of the country and the necessities of the times, and that when we shall return here next December there will come up from every portion of this land a demand that something shall be done at once, and complaints will be loud and deep that action has not been taken at this time.

I think the resolution is in the line, as I have suggested, of the logic of sound legislation. I think it is well sustained by the recommendation of the committee. I think we have the power to do it beyond all question. I think that the condition of the country pre-eminently demands that we shall take this step if no more.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think, sir, that in the present condition of the Treasury of the country, when the Senate of the United States have found it necessary to economize in all the ordinary expenses of the Government in order to prevent a deficit of the revenues which is threatened, I am justified in voting against the resolution if there were no other consideration. The resolution proposes an expenditure of some $200,000 for the purpose of surveying lines of canal and railroads; and when I have heard from the remarks of gentlemen that no one is willing to commit himself to the projects that are contemplated and that leading Senators are careful to disclaim any intention to be committed, I cannot see why we should enter upon an expenditure of money for measures of that kind which no gentleman here is willing to avow himself in favor of.

But, sir, I regard this resolution (and that is my principal objection to it) as an insidious step toward committing this Government to great schemes of internal improvement. That question is not a new one in this country; and no consideration such as is suggested by the Senator from Iowa or by the Senator from Ohio as it respects political parties and individuals can influence me in the honest expression of my opinion in reference to any matter that comes before the Senate. Not having any political aspirations in a direction that can be affected, outside of my own State at any rate, I take the liberty to vote on this question and on all others according to the dictates of my own judgment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope my friend will permit me to say that I did not make any political reference.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator spoke about this question controlling parties and men.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt this question is more likely to affect parties and men in the future than any other, but I did not speak of existing parties. I said no Senator would be embarrassed in voting on the question by partisan considerations.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Seriously I think we ought to be very careful before we take the first step that leads directly, as I conceive this step does, toward involving this Government in great schemes of internal improvement, which will not only be a source of great embarrassment to the people of the country, but a source of taxation or further increased indebtedness of the country. We ought to be careful how we take the first step in that direction. The expenditure of $200,000 now may lead to the expenditure of more than $200,000,000. Therefore for one I shall vote against this resolution, because I am very certain that whenever the propositions come up here to embark this Government on great schemes of internal improvement in any section of the country connecting the West with the East or the North with the South, my vote will be given against them.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) Mr. President, if I did not regard this resolution as in some sense committing the Senate to a scheme, as the Senator from Delaware calls it, of internal improvement, I should vote against the resolution; I should regard it as so much money thrown away. I have no desire for these surverys to be made except for a practical purpose; that is, to be followed by the improvements they suggest. So far as determining whether we are for any one particular route mentioned here in preference to the others, or for either of the three in preference to some other which may be ascertained to be more advantageous by surveys, no man is committed; but the object of making this survey, as I understand it, is to arrive at a plan, a system for internal improvements in this country.

We know that no large enterprise can be carried on successfully and profitably without a plan. A sensible man does not go to build him a dwelling-house until he has consulted his architect and got his plan; and the man who commences building without any plan and alters his plan every day, very soon finds that his funds are exhausted and that he has no house. It is just so with these improvements. While the great Senator from Michigan has led us on the only path that was feasible under the circumstances of the country and in the condition arising from the war and the state of our finances, and a great deal has been accomplished, it has been work done by piecemeal; and we must conclude, because it is common sense, that a great deal less has been accomplished than would have been by the same expenditures had those expenditures been made upon some intelligent, fore-ordained system of improvement.

The necessities of the country, the necessities of the commerce of the country, require these improvements to be made, and this country has got to make them and will make them. There is no sort of use in concealing the fact; it is of no benefit to try to blind the purpose of this resolution, to say it is merely to satisfy this committee. That is not it. If it is only that, I am against it. I am for it because I understand it to be the incipient step toward just such improvements as are looked to by this proceeding itself, not the particular routes, but the general design to be accomplished is precisely what we must accomplish in this country and what the General Government is bound to take up and carry on at its expense.

The power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes," carries with it the same power in one branch that it does in the other. If Congress may not improve the Ohio River, if it may not improve the mouth of the Mississippi River, if it may not connect two water-courses by a railroad if that is the best means of accomplishing the end, then it may not spend five dollars to clean out New York Harbor, it may not spend a dollar to build a light-house on the Atlantic coast. The principle by which and upon which these expenditures are justified is, that the power to regulate commerce carries with it the power to aid and facilitate commerce; and if it be true on the Atlantic, if it be true as to New York Harbor, if it be true as to a light-house on the Atlantic beach, it is true of all the waters and all the means of communication which the necessities of commerce require.

I shall take no further time in the discussion of this question, because I understand that the resolution is certain to pass. I do not regard the passage of the resolution as at all in doubt. The only suspicion that has been thrown upon it was when the Senator from Michigan was understood to object to it upon the ground that he had not light enough at present to desire any more light. He said, as I understood him, that he did not know enough about the question to be in favor of investigation. We sent out this committee, who have traveled through the entire vacation, and have made that sort of investigation and survey which can be made without scientific men and instruments. The next step necessary is that these routes shall be surveyed by scientific men and the estimates be brought into the domain of figures, dollars and cents. Having taken one step, having sent the committee out, the next step logically in order is the survey. I am for this step. The next step will be to determine, after we have these reports, upon the plan to be pursued, that is, to adopt some route to be completed; and the next will be to enter upon its completion. I shall go the whole programme, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has not quite done me justice. My objection was that the order was mandatory to make a survey of certain railroad-routes. I am as much in favor of cheapening transportation and of examination as any man in this body, as my record here for seventeen years will show. I have voted for every measure for cheapening transportation and for every survey that has been made. But the experience of the State of Michigan was not favorable to a government, either State or national, entering into the construction of railroads. At an early day Michigan went largely into the construction of railroads, expended several million dollars, and ran them for several years, and ran them at the expense of the treasury of the State of Michigan, and finally, after a trial of years, she abandoned all those railroads and sold them to private corporations; and I was not quite ready to order a survey with the idea that it committed the Government to the construction of two or three systems of railway.

Now, after the explanation of the honorable Senator from Ohio, which was very clear and very satisfactory, that this resolution committed the Congress of the United States to no system, that it is simply for investigation and to cause the preparation of some plan, I am as much in favor of it as the honorable Senator from Ohio or the honorable Senator from Minnesota, and always have been. I objected to the mandatory clause compelling the survey of these railroad-routes. With the explanations that have been given I shall sustain the committee in their report. I see these are proposed to be either water or railway routes. I shall sustain the committee.

Mr. WINDOM. On this subject of committal, I can only say that, for myself, if upon this survey it is ascertained that these lines are practicable, that the system recommended by the committee is practicable, I am committed during the residue of my senatorial term to press it to completion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TIPTON. I move to insert in the seventeenth line, after the word "Mississippi," the words "and Missouri;" so as to read "first, the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers."

I offer this amendment connecting the Missouri with the Mississippi River with a distinct understanding that the Mississippi is a respectable stream by itself, but after the junction of the Missouri with it, its volume and its capacity are doubled. Now, the difficulty in regard to the region of country which I in part represent is this: the improvement of the Mississippi we are not able to take advantage of unless we have an outlet to that improvement. The people of the central part of the State of Missouri must make their way as well as they can among the sand-bars and the snags of the Missouri. That part of the State of Missouri has as deep an interest in the improvement of the Missouri River before its junction with the Mississippi almost as in that of the Mississippi. All the State of Missouri northwest lying upon the Missouri River has to run the same hazard with her commerce before it can reach the Mississippi and have the advantage of this improvement. All the western part of the State of Iowa from the Missouri line to Sioux City is in the same condition. They have their produce there literally rotting in their cribs and granaries or furnishing fuel a few years since for the emigrant, because it was impossible for the railroads to carry it to the Mississippi River. The same is true in regard to Kansas through all her eastern border lying upon the State of Missouri. The same is true of Nebraska in all her eastern border lying upon the unimproved frontier of Missouri. The same is true of all that great country; and unless we have an improvement of the Missouri we are in no better condition, so far as transportation is concerned, than we have been in the last few years when our produce has been a drug on our hands and our corn has been at ten, twelve, and fifteen cents per bushel, and some of it used for fuel because there was no way out to a market—not that we have not railroads enough and to spare, but we have them without that degree of competition which has allowed our grain to get to the Chicago market. I therefore ask for the improvement of the Missouri River as a part of the Mississippi literally and to the people of that region of country a very vital and important question.

Mr. WINDOM. Aside from the objection that this is loading down the report of the committee, my friend's amendment comes in at a very bad place. The preamble—and there is a good deal of preamble and a small amount of resolution—quotes the finding of the committee. My friend proposes to correct the finding of the committee. Now, unless the committee agree to that, I hardly think the Senate will change their conclusion.

Mr. CAMERON. I am inclined to vote for the resolution, not because I think the policy it indicates is right nor because I think it is comprehensive enough, but I think it is a beginning toward getting cheap transportation. But before I shall vote for a bill of this kind I shall expect to have incorporated a survey of the Susquehanna River from tide-water to the lakes, and also a survey from the Susquehanna to the Delaware; which I think among the most important improvements which could be made in this country.

The State of Pennsylvania has never received anything of any consequence from the General Government. She spent more than $50,000,000 from her own treasury, the result of taxation upon her own people, to make her system of canal and railroad transportation, which was the beginning, after the Erie Canal in New York, of all the cheap transportation of the country. She never was recognized by the General Government, and Senators here and Members of the other House seem to forget that there is a State called Pennsylvania when they come to make appropriations.

The other day a bill came from the House with a large sum appropriated to improve a harbor in New York on Lake Erie—I think the place is called Dunkirk—where almost millions have been expended with no harbor at all; and Erie, the great harbor of Lake Erie, was forgotten entirely, and not a cent is put in that bill for the harbor of the city of Erie in Pennsylvania. Erie is the harbor which was first opened on the lake. It is the best sheltered harbor upon all the lakes. It is earlier in getting clear of ice and it is later in being frozen up than all the others; and yet not one cent was appropriated for that. Then there is a little place up in Ohio—what do you call it?

Mr. CHANDLER. Ashtabula.

Mr. CAMERON. Yes; that is it. My conscience! Who ever heard of Ashtabula? [Laughter.] And yet through the influence of somebody I suppose who was fortunate enough to be on the committee from Ohio that bill appropriates a large sum for that harbor and not a dollar for Erie. I give notice that I shall vote for nothing in any of these appropriations until Pennsylvania is fully and properly recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. TIPTON.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to offer an amendment merely for the purpose of making the resolution conform to the report. It is at the end of the third recommendation to insert after "tide-water" the words "in Virginia."

Mr. WINDOM. There is no objection to that. It simply conforms to the finding of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. TIPTON. I have an amendment to come at the end of the resolution: "and for the Missouri River."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, we are gradually approaching one of the most important questions, in my humble opinion, that are to interest the national Congress for some time to come. Why are we met with this question at all? From whence does the just cry arise of "cheap transportation," and why are we encountered with a demand of that sort? There is not a Senator in this body who does not remember perfectly well that twenty-five years ago we had no railroad facilities and were in no condition to interchange the products of the country by railway. However, that system came upon us, has grown and expanded until it reaches its iron fingers into every State and almost every Territory, and in every State almost into every county in the State, until the system is almost a complete one. It would therefore seem that we have apparently all the necessary means of cheap transportation. It somehow or other happens that there is still a demand, and I think an intelligent demand, for still cheaper transportation.

Has the construction of railroads in the United States cheapened transportation? Is it not within the reach of the knowledge of every Senator that the railroad system of the nation has cheapened transportation? I think this must be admitted. The facilities for the interchange of the productions and commerce of the country have been greatly enlarged. We carry on now between the States and Territories of this nation an infinitely larger amount of commerce than was within the comprehension of a living man twenty years ago. There is an abundance as to quantity of the productions of the country, and on the face an abundance of the means of transportation.

What is the matter then? The Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board have reported here deliberately that competition between railroads does not cheapen the transportation of merchandise; that competition does not come from the construction of parallel lines of railroad; that competition is overreached and ground out by combination. I confess to that committee that I have been at times almost inclined to their conclusion from local observations in my own State; but for all that to-day and here I beg leave finally to dissent from that conclusion of this committee that competition will not come from the construction of railroads by private companies. If it were not for the great number of railroads constructed from the sea-board to the West, to-day transportation by rail would not be as cheap as it is; and transportation would not be as cheap as it is by any other means. Twenty-four cents a bushel for corn from Chicago to New York is the rate now. Will anybody tell me that if the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company had not constructed a competing branch from their line through Pittsburgh to Chicago, the rate per bushel would have been decreased? It has been diminished because of the construction of that additional route. And I have not lost hope yet in the fact that railroad construction, increased railroad facilities will cheapen the transportation of the productions of the country. I am unwilling to cut loose from the railroad system. I am unwilling to tie myself up by a preliminary vote, as I feel sure I shall be in the end by a final vote, to exclusively water transportation. That is the purport of the report of the Committee on Transportation. It is almost the purport of the resolution here. If this resolution shall be adopted, it will make no difference how many qualifications I may add by my remarks here to-day or other Senators may add in explanation of their votes, still the words in this resolution will hold us to the policy proposed by it; certainly substantially so, I think positively so. What is it?

> Whereas the report of said select committee recommends that careful surveys and estimates be made upon such portions of said routes as may be necessary to determine accurately the cost of each, and to enable Congress at its next session to enter upon the said system of improvements, if, upon the completion of such surveys and estimates, the same shall be deemed practicable and expedient. Therefore, Resolved.

The purpose of this resolution is to enter upon the completion of that system if the survey shall show that the routes are practicable and expedient. I think that we are going pretty far, though I shall vote for the resolution. I have made up my mind to vote for the expenditure of $200,000. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota what is the estimated cost of these preliminary surveys?

Mr. WINDOM. The estimate had not been completed when I called at the Engineer Department, but they thought it would be in the neighborhood of $200,000.

Mr. OGLESBY. So I understood. I will take the responsibility of voting for an expenditure of $200,000, and if that shall not be sufficient I will vote for $50,000 more to make this survey of the Mississippi River, the northern route connecting the Upper Mississippi through Wisconsin and Illinois by the Illinois River and Michigan Canal and by our lakes and through the system of canals constructed or to be constructed in the State of New York as a water connection between the Northwest and the cities of New York and Boston and the northeastern coast of the Atlantic Ocean, including the water outlet by the Saint Lawrence and the canals through Canada, for I look to that route with nearly as much interest as I do to any other. With the hope of eliciting permanent and final satisfaction from the surveys on those two great routes, the route by the Mississippi River and the northern route by the lakes, I will vote for this appropriation and will stand by it cheerfully, that we may have a final estimate from surveyors of what the actual cost will be of the construction of the improvements, what time it will take to complete them after they shall be definitely and finally located, and the question as to the supply of water to feed and keep up the necessary canal connections in or on either route.

But when I am asked about the question of constructing a waterway over the top of the Alleghany Mountains to connect the Ohio and the Kanawha Rivers with the waters of the ocean, with my present information I must say that I have great doubts of the feasibility of such an enterprise, and great doubt of the value of it even if feasible. So also in regard to the other plan for improving the Tennessee River to Knoxville and then shooting out in little rivers and canals from there across to the South Atlantic coast, I am unable yet to believe from the information before me that either of those routes can in any general sense be profitable or expedient for the commerce of the country. I do not, however, finally place my fiat against those two routes. I do not feel sufficiently informed upon them to say that they should not receive encouragement from the General Government. I only express my doubt as to their feasibility and utility.

Well, Mr. President, when we shall have completed the survey of the four great water-routes now reported upon by the Select Committee on Transportation and the survey shall show they are all practicable, that water enough will be found upon the top of the Alleghany Mountains to supply the canal there, or that a double-track railway across the higher points of the mountains to connect the water at each end as a substitute, and that the water may be found to supply canal communication between the Tennessee River and the Atlantic along the Southern States, and when the survey shall demonstrate that a canal may be constructed with safety at the mouth of the Mississippi River across the little span of land that divides the inlets of the Gulf of Mexico from the Mississippi below New Orleans—when it shall be demonstrated that these projects are all feasible, that a canal will stand there and will stand the test of time and the wear of ages, and that we may send our products through that canal in ships drawing twenty-six feet of water, or that the jetty system may hug up the water in the mouth of the Mississippi so as to make the channel deep enough to float our greatest ocean steamers through one of the many mouths of the Mississippi, and produce current enough to wash out the bottom of the channel so as to keep it open for all time—when the survey shall be made and the estimates shall come in, if they shall be honest estimates, if here I shall try to muster courage enough to meet the crisis.

I understand the Senator from Minnesota to mean by his resolution not only that the engineers shall survey with reference to the practicability of the routes, but that they must make estimates of the cost of construction. If that be done, the $155,000,000 that are talked about in the report of the Committee on Transportation will not be half enough. We have got to face the music to the tune of twice that amount, and then what is to become of the Ashtabula district in Ohio? What is to become of this great ring canal that is to be dug from Penobscot, in Maine, or New York, around the whole Atlantic coast, to wind up down in the sandy city of Galveston, in Texas? How much will it take to construct that? The Missouri River is to be deepened and widened, and all the other little rivers in the country will make a demand here for recognition when this water-route or water-spout is to be substituted for railway transportation. Already I appreciate the difficulties of this magnificent scheme. The people must be taxed to accomplish it, the Government must find the revenues and resources to do it, or else we shall fail to solve the question of cheap transportation if we shall abandon the railroad system.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. Is the Senator in favor of aiding the construction of railroads?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. Building railroads by the Government?

Mr. OGLESBY. I will tell the Senator in a few moments what I am driving at. I said here in February or March last I was not prepared then to vote, and I repeat I am not now prepared to vote appropriations out of the national Treasury to construct a system of national railway highways over the country. I do not feel that I am authorized by the power and authority with which I am clothed here by my people to pledge them or myself to a system which shall appropriate from the Treasury means enough to construct all the railroads that will be required by the country in order to control the railroad system of the nation by the national Government. I would be perfectly willing to make appropriations to build one railroad to test the question, but I know perfectly well that the moment I shall come and ask for such a railroad here running indefinitely west I should encounter opposition from every corner of the nation with similar projects for railroads running in different directions. So it seems to me.

But I am not willing to give up the idea of railroad competition yet. I want to hold on a little longer to that. This country has arrived at that point now where we cannot afford to transport our entire products by the slow channels of rivers and canals. We may utilize them, such as the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Illinois, and the Ohio Rivers. The natural channels we will utilize, and I feel instructed here to vote for appropriations to utilize and improve those routes. I would care nothing about voting $10,000,000 for a canal at the mouth of the Mississippi River if it could be demonstrated that the ground could be found to build it upon, and that after it should be constructed it would stand as a durable monument of art and as an instrument and permanent channel of commerce; but I would hesitate to vote $10,000,000, $5,000,000, or $1,000,000, until it be demonstrated by competent engineering that such a canal is feasible.

We cannot get rid of this question. It is an imposing and I believe will be a continuing one until settled by meeting the just demands of the country. Why did the question come here? Because of the management of the railroads in the United States by private corporations. That was the foundation of this claim. The people of the West believe that if the railroads had been honestly constructed, if the money had been honestly appropriated, and if they had been constructed after the most economical plan, and then had been managed in a wise and honest instead of an extravagant way, instead of watering the stock, instead of demanding charges for freights and passengers to pay dividends upon twice the amount the roads cost, there would be no occasion for a demand on the national Congress for cheap transportation at all. That was the cause of the trouble; that was where it began. It was no war of the western people on the railway system of the country. It was no war of the people of this nation upon railroad transportation. The war was upon the management of the railroads by which the people were made to bear extravagant charges in order to pay dividends upon capital that never went into the construction or operation of the roads at all. That is the reason we have encountered this demand. Illinois is struggling to-day, as Wisconsin is struggling, to circumvent if it can the expensive outlays in the management and operation of the railroads and to compel the companies to cheapen their rates by charging only such just and reasonable rates as a proper economy based upon an honest cost and management of those roads running through those States requires.

I do not believe it is impossible yet to have cheaper rates from the competition of railroad lines. Therefore I introduced a bill at this very session and it was referred to the Committee on Railroads of this body, and I should be glad to have that committee report that bill back to the Senate, and I do not see why that committee cannot report the bill back, for the construction of a railway under the authority of the national Congress by a private company. The measure in the bill is the best one ever presented here, backed and supported by men of character deeply interested in the project, who ask of the national Congress to give them a charter authorizing them to construct a railroad on or near the fortieth parallel from the Atlantic coast through the intervening States to the Territory of Colorado. They ask it now. What are the provisions of this bill, if I may for a moment, in the elucidation of my argument, look at them? I will not read it in full. The title of this company is to be "The American Central Railway Company." The bill provides that—

Full power and authority are hereby conferred upon said body-corporate to survey, locate, lay out, construct, equip, maintain, operate, use, collect tolls upon, and enjoy a continuous railway line of one or more tracks, with all the appurtenances, commencing at any convenient point on or near the fortieth parallel of north latitude in the States of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, or Ohio, or any one of said States, and running thence in or through said States, or any one of said States, and the States of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, and Colorado Territory, upon such practicable route as said corporation may determine upon, on or near the fortieth parallel of north latitude, with the right to survey, locate, lay out, construct, equip, maintain, operate, use, collect tolls upon, and enjoy lines or branches of said railway running as direct as may be practicable from said railway line, on or near the said fortieth parallel, to the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, or any one of said cities, or within convenient distance of the same, or any of them, as may be determined upon by said corporation.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 4. That the capital stock of said corporation shall consist of one million shares of $100 each, and each stockholder at the time of subscribing shall pay 5 per cent. upon the amount for which he shall so subscribe to the treasurer of said corporation, and at all times shall be liable to the extent of unpaid assessments on his stock, and no more.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 7. That the right of way through the public lands shall be, and the same is hereby, granted to the said company for the construction of said railway, and the right and power and authority are hereby given to said company to take, from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road, earth, stone, timber, and other materials for the construction thereof. Said right of way is granted to said railway to the extent of two hundred feet in width along the line of said railway where it may pass over the public lands, including all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

SEC. 8. That said corporation shall have the right to acquire by purchase, subscription, donation, or condemnation any land or real estate that may be necessary for the purposes for which this corporation is created; and said purposes shall be held to include the necessary grounds for right of way, wherever said railway or its branches may be located and constructed and authorized to be operated by this act, but the width of said right of way shall not exceed two hundred feet, together with all necessary ground for side-tracks, station and engine houses, shops, depots, turn-tables, water-tanks, with the right to obtain water in the vicinity, and for freight and stock yards, and for all other structures or inclosures usual in the operation of such a railway, and also the power of purchasing or condemning real estate for the purpose of obtaining the necessary materials for the construction and operation of said railway; that in case of the erection of any bridge across any navigable stream of water, the plan of such bridge shall be approved by a commission designated by the Secretary of War, and shall conform to the acts of Congress on that subject; that in case said corporation shall not be able to agree with any person or persons, corporation or corporations, owning or being interested in any lands required for any of the purposes specified in this section as to the damages or compensation to which such persons or corporations may be entitled, such damages and compensation for such right of way, or for other purposes herein specified, may be determined under the laws pertaining to the subject in the respective States then in force where such lands may be situated.

SEC. 9.—

I call the special attention of the Senate to this:

SEC. 9. That said railway is hereby declared a national public highway and a post-road, and the same and each part thereof subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, telegraphic, naval, and other governmental service; and Congress may fix reasonable charges for such service to the Government, and prescribe such rules and regulations in regard to the classification of all freights, and fix maximum rates for all freights and fares thereon, as it may deem expedient. And the said corporation shall make an annual report of their operations to the Secretary of the Interior in such form and containing such items of information as he may prescribe; said report to be verified by certificates, under the oath of the president and the treasurer of said railway corporation.

I want the national authority asserted, if it can be. I do not expect this Congress to act hastily on this question of transportation. I know that it is a grave subject, but I should be glad to have the expression of opinion here before this body shall adjourn that the people of the United States may understand that we are in earnest about it; that these great republican and democratic parties in the national councils mean to meet this demand of the people intelligently and promptly. I want some expression before Congress adjourns besides the passage of a bare resolution, and upon that bill I do not see but that an expression may be given by Congress that the national Congress can and will charter companies to construct highways through the nation; will empower them to do so, so that capital may be invested in such railroads with the distinct understanding that their chartered rights are to be protected under the laws of Congress. Why can we not go that far? Does any Senator doubt the constitutional right? Let us meet the constitutional question by passing some such bill as this. Let us assert before Congress adjourns the constitutional power of this people under the Constitution, through the Congress, to meet this question; and the fact of such a declaration, the fact of the chartering of such a company, is worth more than forty resolutions; for it will open the eyes of the people to the fact that this Government is determined to regulate this question if it cannot be met otherwise by proper legislation under the Constitution of the United States.

Therefore I did hope that some such bill as this would be debated and passed here, and that we would settle two or three questions before we adjourned. One question that we might settle either upon the bill of the House now pending in the Senate or upon this bill is the right and power of Congress to construct railways through the States. I have for myself no doubt on that question. The pathway is open and clear to me. A great and growing nation like ours cannot be curbed in the exercise of its granted powers by the legislation of States; we cannot be restricted and hampered and bound down by the private acts of State legislation on this great question of interstate commerce. Sooner or later the American people must be heard upon this subject. It is a question of great importance, and one that I believe there is no disposition to shirk. I would not make the intimation that Congress is not willing to meet it. Senators feel exactly as I have felt about it, a doubt as to the true solution of it; and I think the people of the West have the patience and the good sense to wait until Congress shall manifest an intention to solve the difficulty. One of the ways of manifesting that intention before the people, one of the ways of solving this question, is to pass such a bill as this incorporating a company that will command the capital to construct such a road.

Shall I be met with the statement that still the old question will arise of one railroad company buying out the stock of another, consolidating the powers and the rights of separate railroads under the management of one, and then regulating their affairs as the one great mammoth company shall decide? This bill provides that if the company created by the act shall not fix reasonable rates and charges for freights and passengers, then the national Congress shall have a right to determine what is a reasonable rate. If you pass an act of this sort, an act never before passed by the national Congress, meeting this question in a flat-footed, plain, country style, and saying to the corporators named, "We confer on you by this act of Congress the right to construct a railway across the continent, and confer upon you the power to charge reasonable rates for freights and passenger fares; but if you do not do so, Congress reserves the right to declare, and will declare, what are reasonable rates," have you not solved the question? Does it not go in the direction of a solution of it?

In the first remarks that I made it is possible that in making some criticism on the report of the committee as to the four great water-routes I may have been misunderstood as to my indorsement of water communication. For fear that I may have been misunderstood, I will say to that committee now that I adopt their conclusions and reasonings as to the cheapness and as to the adequacy of water-routes where nature has laid the basis for them, where nature has marked the course and marked the channel, and I will support any system of legislation that will improve the water-routes of the country; but I doubt the expediency of building canals over mountains or running them around States where it is questionable whether there is a supply of water or any real demand for them. Two of the routes I question the propriety of; two of them I do not. When we get the northern water-route, if we shall go so far as to vote appropriations to build a canal through Illinois and complete the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers system of navigation through Wisconsin, and shall make the Upper Mississippi beyond the Falls of Saint Anthony capable of carrying the commerce of the northern portion of the country, I suggest to the chairman of the committee and to the Senate that you have then only prepared a route for six or seven months in the year. The other four or five months or sometimes six months that whole route is blocked up. The southern route, I am told, will be open. It so happens that our wheat and corn and pork and beef have heretofore not sought and perhaps never will seek a route to the ocean over the top of the Alleghany Mountains by way of the James and Kanawha Rivers, or up the Tennessee or Chattahoochee or any of those small streams through the Southern States. They want to go rapidly to New York; they want to go by railway, not by canal. We utilize the Erie Canal in New York now as a competing line simply for the heavy, bulky freight from the West. All the other freights go with railroad speed through the country, and we must not give up the idea of railroad transportation.

I shall vote for the resolution, Mr. President, but I hope before the Senate adjourns that the Railroad Committee will report back the bill to which I have referred, that we may have some expression from this body as to whether we will charter by act of Congress private companies to construct railways across the Union and limit their charges for the transportation of persons and property. That is what the bill does.

Mr. LEWIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and, (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 3, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was partly read, when

Mr. RANDALL moved that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill supplementary to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad" be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, with leave to report it back at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object. I would not object to the mere reference.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. SAWYER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3586) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN CHARLES E. GREBLE.

Mr. WILLARD, of Michigan, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3587) for the relief of Captain Charles E. Greble; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF GENERAL RICHARD WINN.

Mr. WALLACE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3588) for the relief of the heirs of General Richard Winn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TERMINATION OF THE TREATY WITH BELGIUM.

Mr. ORTH. By direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, authorized to report on this subject at any time, I report a joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) providing for the termination of the treaty between the United States and His Majesty the King of the Belgians, concluded at Washington July 17, 1858.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time. It recites in the preamble that it is provided by the seventeenth article of the treaty between the United States of America on the one part and His Majesty the King of the Belgians on the other part, concluded at Washington July, 17, 1858, that the present treaty shall be in force during ten years from the date of the exchange of the ratification and until the expiration of twelve months after either of the high contracting parties shall have announced to the other its intention to terminate the operation thereof, each party reserving to itself the right of making such declaration to the other at the end of the ten years above mentioned; it being agreed that after the expiration of twelve months' prolongation accorded on both sides the treaty and all its stipulations shall cease to be in force. The preamble further recites that it is no longer for the interest of the United States to continue the said treaty in force.

The joint resolution therefore provides that notice be given of intention to terminate the treaty according to the provisions of the seventeenth article thereof, and that the President be authorized to communicate such notice to the government of the kingdom of Belgium.

Mr. ORTH. Not wishing unnecessarily to consume the time of the House, I will state that this resolution meets the approval of the State Department, and its passage is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but if any gentleman desires an explanation of the matter I am prepared to give it. I will only add that as the fourth article of the treaty operates injuriously to the interests of our commerce, it is desirable that notice for its termination be given at as early a day as practicable.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would like to know in very brief terms the subject of the treaty about to be annulled.

Mr. ORTH. The treaty concluded with Belgium in 1858, and now in force, contains this article:

ART. 4. Steam-vessels of the United States and Belgium, engaged in regular navigation between the United States and Belgium, shall be exempt in both countries from the payment of duties of tonnage, anchorage, buoys, and light-houses.

With no other nation has our Government directly any such treaty stipulation or engagement. Under our tonnage laws, American vessels which shall be entered at any custom-house in the United States from any foreign port or place are subject to a duty of thirty cents a ton. By virtue of the fourth article aforesaid, as well as by the provision of the tonnage laws, Belgian vessels are exempt from the payment of this tax.

This exemption, which discriminates against American steam-vessels, does not apply alone to Belgian vessels, for by virtue of treaties with several other nations we have agreed that all favors in navigation or commerce which shall have been granted by us to any other nation shall inure to such nations under the operation of what is known as the "favored-nation clause" in such treaties. Among the powers thus claiming the privileges specifically accorded to Belgium by our treaty may be named Italy, Brazil, Nicaragua, and Mexico. And the same privilege is claimed in favor of Dutch and Swedish steamships, but not yet accorded.

So long as we continue this treaty with Belgium, we cannot deny the same privilege of admitting free or tonnage dues the steam-vessels of those nations claiming by virtue of the "favored-nation clause" in existing treaties.

By terminating the treaty with Belgium, we release ourselves not only from this discrimination against our own vessels so far as Belgian vessels are concerned, but as well from all similar obligations arising from the "favored-nation clause" to which I have already referred. It is desirable that our vessels should be relieved from this funjust discrimination. We have the right reserved thus to relieve ourselves in the seventeenth article of the treaty, which provides that "either of the high contracting parties" reserves to itself the right to terminate after twelve months' notice. The joint resolution provides for such notice to terminate the entire treaty, although it is only the fourth article which is sought to be abrogated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am satisfied with the gentleman's explanation.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on War Claims upon the bill regulating the taking of testimony touching the loyalty of claimants.

Mr. MOREY. I raise the question of consideration for the purpose of having a morning hour and bringing up the bill relating to the Louisiana levees.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I understood that the bill in reference to the mouth of the Mississippi River was to come up to-day.

The SPEAKER. That will come up later in the day on the question of reconsideration.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. As to the bill in regard to the mouth of the Mississippi River, will it make any difference which one of these two bills be now taken up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair apprehends the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOREY] will consume an hour, but does not know that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] proposes to debate his bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think it necessary to explain the bill at some length.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I wish to make a further inquiry. If the gentleman from Louisiana gets the floor, the question will then be for the House to determine which bill shall first be considered.

The SPEAKER. The House can determine between the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. But suppose the gentleman from Louisiana should now get the floor for the consideration of the bill in reference to the Mississippi levees.

The SPEAKER. The House can afterward determine between the bill of the gentleman from Ohio and the bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The House will determine now between the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now consider the bill which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] reports from the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. SENER. Is it not in order to have the bill read so we may vote intelligently?

Mr. BECK. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, and that is whether all the war claims are not suspended until the House shall determine on this report what view it will take?

Mr. LAWRENCE. This provides for the appointment of agents, and is absolutely necessary to enable these commissioners to go on speedily with their work.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 35; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE and Mr. MOREY were appointed.

Mr. McCRARY. If the motion of the gentleman from Ohio prevails, will the bill from the Committee on War Claims be considered in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. If the motion should prevail, the bill which the gentleman from Ohio proposes to report from the Committee on War Claims would proceed, subject only to the Chair recognizing the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] who has a privileged matter in charge in connection with the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I should like to know the exact standing of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will explain if gentlemen will be in order, and he asks members not to waste time in settling order of business. There is no greater waste of time than what is spent in determining the order of business. A great deal of business could be dispatched during the struggle to get the floor to have it taken up.

The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] representing the Committee on Railways and Canals in reference to the bill for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, proposes to call up the privileged motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was recommitted, and the gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the Committee on War Claims, has the right to report his bill at any time. They are of equal privilege.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOREY] has a bill in the morning hour in reference to the Mississippi levees. If other business is objected to by the House, that perforce brings on the morning hour. At the end of the morning hour the Chair will be left to recognize business in its order, or the House by raising the question of consideration will determine which shall have precedence.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I understand from the Chair now that the bill in charge of my colleague [Mr. HURLBUT] in reference to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River is of equal privilege with that in the hands of the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, so that if the House shall vote down the motion to take up the bill in charge of the gentleman from Ohio it will be in order to call up my colleague's bill.

The SPEAKER. It is always in the power of the majority to determine which shall take precedence.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Then I hope the House will determine to take up the bill for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 72.

So the motion of Mr. LAWRENCE was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER. I call up the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1009) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to without question, except in the cases which will be indicated.

The first amendment of the Senate was to insert "including Indian scouts;" so it will read:

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits, $105,000. And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, including Indian scouts.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence, with an amendment as follows:

Nothing, however, in this act shall be construed to diminish the signal service, and the Signal Corps shall be maintained as now organized under the authority of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to; and the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The sixth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out "500" and insert "250;" so it will read:

For regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, to wit: For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves for heating and cooking; of fuel for officers, enlisted men, guards, hospitals, store-houses, and offices; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding; and of stationery, including blank books, for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing of division and department orders and reports, $4,250,000.

The committee recommended concurrence, with an amendment as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 2, on page 3 of the bill, add the words:

Provided, That $300,000 thus appropriated may be applied by the Commissary-General of Subsistence prior to the 1st of July, 1874, to the purchase of subsistence supplies intended for the posts supplied through the Upper Missouri and for other distant posts.

Mr. RANDALL. That is in the nature of a deficiency for the current fiscal year.

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all. It simply enables the Commissary-General to anticipate the time, so that he may take advantage of the proper stage of water on the Missouri River.

Mr. RANDALL. The words would rather imply that this was a deficiency.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in with the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the Chair whether the first amendment of the Senate, with an amendment by the Committee on Appropriations, has been acted on by a vote?

The SPEAKER. It has. The Senate amendment has been concurred in with an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. My attention was otherwise occupied when the amendment was concurred in. Will the Chair permit me to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill a question in regard to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. WHEELER. I will explain to the gentleman what is the object of that amendment. The bill reduces the enlisted men of the Army to twenty-five thousand men, and would reduce the Signal Corps in that proportion. We desire to retain the Signal Corps in its present force, and not take away from it the few men it would lose in consequence of the general reduction of the enlisted force of the Army.

Mr. CONGER. Would not this prevent the enlargement of the signal service by establishing additional signal stations?

Mr. WHEELER. This has nothing to do with that. That question will come up in connection with the sundry civil appropriation bill, which will soon be reported.

Mr. CONGER. There are demands for additional signal stations which it is very necessary should be met, and that would require additional signal officers.

Mr. WHEELER. That must be done by additional legislation.

Mr. CONGER. Then I desire to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in with an amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I object to returning to that amendment. If there is any question about it I prefer that it should be raised in the committee of conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. If there is any proposition to increase the number of signal stations, that will properly come up in connection with the miscellaneous appropriation bill. If any increase is to be made it must be effected there.

Mr. CONGER. And when an increase is asked for there, the point of order will be raised.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that the increase of these stations does not draw upon the military force provided here. If we give money for increasing the number of stations it will be in the sundry civil bill; and the men appointed are not from these soldiers, but from a different class entirely. This provision does not conflict with the object the gentleman has in view.

Mr. CONGER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. His understanding of the matter is not the same as mine.

Mr. WHEELER. The point of order will lie against the gentleman's proposition that it is a change of existing law. The number of the Signal Corps is fixed by law, and you cannot enlarge it except by law. It is new legislation. And if it is necessary I must make the point of order, first, that the gentleman cannot, without unanimous consent, return to an amendment which has already been concurred in; and, second, that he is asking for new legislation in an appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. I think I will find my way to get at it, notwithstanding these points of order.

Mr. WHEELER. No doubt; my friend is adroit at that.

Mr. CONGER. In order to be able to say what I wish to submit to the House in connection with this matter, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment No. 1, with an amendment of the committee, was concurred in.

The point I wish to make is this—and I ask the attention of the gentleman who reports the bill. This amendment renews the legislation which confines the Signal Corps force to its present numbers. Now, there is a demand for additional signal stations which are imperatively needed in behalf of the commerce of the country. That demand for the establishment of these stations on the lakes and seacoasts ought not to go unheeded. My point is that this amendment prevents by new legislation here the increase of Signal Corps stations, and that it ought not be put into this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would ask my friend from Michigan whether repeating a law makes it any stronger? If he wants to enlarge the signal service, it must be done by new legislation just as much after this amendment passes as before. Whether this amendment passes or not, what the gentleman proposes will still require new legislation. Any increase of the force of the Signal Corps will have to be made in connection with the bill which includes that subject-matter.

Mr. CONGER. I desire that this clause in the amendment shall be stricken out:

And the Signal Corps shall be maintained as now organized under the authority of the Secretary of War.

As the Signal Corps is now maintained under the authority of law, that clause is unnecessary.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman strikes that out, he will work the defeat of his own proposition. For, as I have stated, this bill reduces the enlisted force of the Army to twenty-five thousand men, and without that clause would take away from the Signal Corps its proportion of the reduction.

Mr. CONGER. If I understand the gentleman correctly, when the appropriation bill comes up for dealing with this subject the committee will listen to amendments——

Mr. WHEELER. I will, most cheerfully.

Mr. CONGER. To amendments for increasing the number of signal stations. I do not care about increasing the number of signal officers. I withdraw my motion now with the understanding that when the proper bill comes up the chairman of the committee or the gentleman having charge of it will not oppose an amendment that increases the number of signal stations, but will allow such an amendment to be offered for the consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand precisely what will be the effect of that agreement.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not consent that there shall be a special agreement as to what points of order shall not be insisted on.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman said that when another bill came up that would be the proper time for the consideration of this amendment; and I ask if when the proper time comes he will permit the amendment to be offered?

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot promise that no one shall make the point of order, of course.

Mr. CONGER. Then I cannot see the force of the gentleman's remark.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will merely say that this is not the place to legislate about signal stations. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my motion.

The sixteenth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert after line 226 of the printed bill the following:
For the construction of a post on the north fork of Loupe River in Nebraska, $50,000: Provided, That the cost of said post shall not exceed the amount hereby appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. CROUNSE. With respect to that amendment I really hope that the House will concur in it. I did desire the opportunity of appearing before the Committee on Appropriations in regard to it, and asked that privilege, and I think if it had been accorded to me the committee would have recommended concurrence in this amendment. I was accorded the right of appearing before a sub-committee; but they failed to notify me as they promised they would do.

Mr. WHEELER. It was forgotten.

Mr. CROUNSE. The gentleman from New York says that the matter was forgotten, and I am sure that it was no fault of his. I absolve him from all blame in the matter. I can only say that I regret that I had not the opportunity of pressing this matter before the committee, because I am satisfied that if they had had all the information which I possess they would have recommended concurrence in the amendment. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the recommendation of General Ord, who is in command of that district, in favor of this appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

I have again to call attention to the exposed condition of Nebraska, north of the Union Pacific Railroad, and extending from the Missouri River for three hundred miles westward, in which there is not a single military station. This country is as rich as any other portion of Nebraska, but the fear of Indians has retarded its settlement. It has been subject to frequent raids from the Sioux, from Spotted Tail's, and now from Red Cloud's reservation. When on a recent visit east of the first-named chief he did me the honor to call, with his lieutenants and concubines, at my office, I called his attention to a raid which some of what were considered to be his people had just committed on the peaceable Baptist and Danish settlers on the Loup, he replied in quite a haughty manner that he had not come here to be talked to in that way. As I had no power to control his movements, or make him or the people whom he claimed to rule respect the property of the white settlers, the touching upon facts put an end to further conversation. I think a post should be established somewhere about midway on a line drawn from Fort Randal, on the Missouri River, to Fort McPherson, on the Platte. It need not cost to exceed $50,000, and under the sense of security which it would give to settlers, the rapid increase of a tax-paying population would soon repay the outlay.

Mr. CROUNSE. I would say in addition to that that this appropriation is warmly recommended by the Secretary of War. I have not his letter here, because this matter has been sprung upon the House at a time when I did not anticipate it. In addition to that, I would say that General Sherman told me personally—and I think I report him correctly—that if he had only $50,000 at his command for protection of this kind he would appropriate it for the construction of the post asked for in Nebraska to the exclusion of any other place. This appropriation has been recommended for several years in succession by the General in command of the Army; and I may say, what is perhaps familiar to members of the House, that the Indian depredations committed last fall, not yet a year ago, in Nebraska, when the Sioux entered the very heart of the western part of the State and had a contest with the Pawnees resulting in the slaughter of seventy or eighty persons, occurred in organized counties of the State of Nebraska because of the want of this military post. If we had had such a post there we could have intercepted their approach. They came immediately from the north into the part of Nebraska named, and this post would have been directly on the line which they must necessarily have passed over, and its establishment now would promote the safety and security of the settlements of Nebraska. This appropriation is not only asked in the interest of Nebraska, but of all emigrating to and interested in the settlement of the West. Nebraska has asked nothing at the hands of Congress during this term but this, and this is a measure in behalf of the security of life and the advancement of civilization. It is as little as Congress can do for the State; and in view of the fact that all the officers of the Army, the Secretary of War, the General of the Army, and the general in command of the department, indorse the appropriation in the strongest language, I hope it will be made.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to repel here at once the idea implied in what the gentleman has said that Nebraska has asked for nothing during this Congress. I want to repel the idea that there ought to be here at every session a general division of the public funds by localities. This appropriation has not been recommended by either of the standing Committees on Appropriations of the Senate or of the House. That some sort of fort may be necessary there I do not question, but that a permanent fort costing $50,000 is necessary I do deny. under the standing law of the country to have sent in here his estimate I say that if it be necessary, it was the duty of the Secretary of War for it as provided by the law of 1859, that no permanent barracks or quarters shall hereafter be constructed until detailed estimates shall have been previously submitted to Congress and shall have been approved by a special appropriation. I say that there has been no estimate for the construction of a permanent fort at this point.

Let me call attention to the rapid settlement of Nebraska. If you construct this permanent fort it will not be twelve months before the tide of immigration will press on beyond it, and it will become useless. The Secretary of War is authorized to expend money for the construction of a fort anywhere in Nebraska out of the $1,400,000 appropriated for that purpose, and if the House is to maintain that economy which so far has characterized its conduct in the consideration of this bill, it will not concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the House to non-concur in the remaining amendments of the Senate, No. 17 to 24 both inclusive, as they all relate to one subject-matter, that is the adjustment of the claims of loyal citizens in insurrectionary States. If the Senate system shall be adopted, in committee of conference or here in this House, I am informed by the Auditor of the Treasury that it is defective and cannot be made to work, unless it be changed in some particulars, as to the balances in the respective Departments. For myself I am content with any system which brings the southern claims to some tribunal for revision, and not have them retained wholly in the Departments. I think the better way is to non-concur in all these amendments, and let the whole subject go to the committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

No objection was made, and the amendments were non-concurred in.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I would like to ask a reconsideration of the vote upon concurring in the fourth amendment of the Senate to this bill. The fourth amendment is to add to the paragraph in relation to transportation these words, "except in cases where a greater sum has been paid for actual and necessary traveling expenses;" so that that portion of the paragraph will read as follows:

Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to allow more than ten cents a mile for such transportation, except in cases where a greater sum has been paid for actual and necessary traveling expenses.

Mr. WHEELER. That provision is vague and indefinite, and needs to be put into some proper shape. The House has non-concurred in that amendment of the Senate upon the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. In many instances officers are ordered from one station to another, compelled to break up their house-keeping arrangements and everything of that kind, and an allowance of ten cents per mile does not cover their expenses. I do not think the Government intends that an officer shall be compelled to go from one post to another, and actually be out of pocket for his expenses in so doing. I have a letter in my possession from an officer now at West Point, who was directed to remove from Detroit, Michigan, to Fort Riley and from Fort Riley to West Point; and because he obeyed the orders of the Government he is actually out of pocket to-day $2,000 for the conveyance of his furniture, &c., which he had to transport or sell at a sacrifice. The amendment of the Senate that he shall be allowed his actual expenses above ten cents a mile seems to be just, and I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment. For that purpose I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. Suppose that an officer goes to the Fifth Avenue Hotel and boards there for ten days or twenty days or a month or three months, and then presents his accounts of his expenses there. Everybody can see that this clause of the Senate will allow it.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. "Actual and necessary expenses."

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly; "actual and necessary." You do not want an officer to stop at any but a first-class hotel. It is far better to have a definite sum fixed. If you want to give more than ten cents a mile let it be so, but do not use the vague expression "actual and necessary expenses." I believe the amendment of the Senate would lead to far greater expenditures than the law as it now stands. I hope the action of the House on the Senate amendment will not be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. LOWNDES. I understood that the twenty-fourth amendment of the Senate was to be voted on separately.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] asked that the amendments of the Senate from No. 17 to No. 24, both inclusive, be non-concurred in.

Mr. WHEELER. That was my motion.

Mr. LOWNDES. I did not so understand it.

The SPEAKER. If there be a misunderstanding it would perhaps be better to take a separate vote on the twenty-fourth amendment.

The twenty-fourth amendment of the Senate was to strike out section 4 of the bill passed by the House; which section was as follows:

(24) [SEC. 4. That all claims of citizens who remained loyal adherents to the cause and Government of the United States during the war for stores or supplies taken or furnished during the rebellion for the use of the Army of the United States, and for the use or loss of vessels or boats while employed in the military service of the United States, including any such claims now pending and undetermined in any Department of the Government, shall be presented, before the 1st day of November, 1875, to the commissioners of claims created by act of March 3, 1871, who shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine the same: Provided, That all such claims now pending and undetermined in the Department of the Quartermaster-General and the Department of the Commissary-General of Subsistence shall, on the passage of this act, be transferred to the said commissioners of claims; and such transfer shall be regarded as presentation within the meaning of this act. And all evidence taken in reference to said claims, and now on file in the office of the Quartermaster-General or Commissary-General, and admissible under the rules and regulations of their departments, shall be transferred with the claims, and be considered as if taken under the rules and regulations of said commission. And there shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional commissioners of claims, with the powers, duties, and compensation of the commissioners created under the act of March 3, 1871, and who shall devote their time exclusively to the claims transferred to the commission by the provisions of this act; and the decision of the said two additional commissioners thereon shall be taken and held to be the decision of the commission, unless in case of disagreement of the two, when the decision of the presiding commissioners shall be given, and shall be decisive. And all such claims which shall not be presented to said commissioners on or before said day shall be barred and shall not be entertained without further authority of Congress: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to affect or impair the limitation for the time for the presentation of petitions prescribed by section 2 of the act of March 3, 1873. Such commissioners shall, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1871, and the acts in amendment thereof, receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of such claims as shall be brought before them, and shall make report of their proceedings, and of each claim considered by them, at the commencement of each session of Congress, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall lay the same before Congress for consideration.]

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken upon concurring; and upon a division there were—ayes 48, noes 55; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHEELER and Mr. LOWNDES were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 69, noes 79.

So the amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that a committee of conference be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TIMBER LANDS IN CALIFORNIA, OREGON, AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. BRADLEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 410) for the sale of timber lands in the States of California and Oregon and in Washington Territory; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SAINT JAMES MISSION, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Private Lands, reported back, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 1450) for the relief of the mission of Saint James, in Washington Territory; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to present a privileged report—the report of the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1013) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 8, 9, 12, and 20.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 13, 17, and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the word "fifteen," and in lieu thereof insert the word "eighteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the words "two hundred and fifty," and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out of said amendment the words "and sixty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
J. HANCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. A. SARGENT,
LOT M. MORRILL,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe this report has not been printed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Yes, sir; it has been.

Mr. HOLMAN. I sent for it and did not obtain a copy. It is impossible to examine such a report at once; and inasmuch as there is no public necessity for immediate action on the report, I trust it will be laid over till to-morrow.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I expect to be called away to-morrow. This report has now been held back for some time. I was about to present it last week, when the same point which the gentleman now makes was raised. I said then that I would let it go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the fact just stated by the gentleman from Maine I will not insist on deferring action upon the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSK. There are on the Speaker's table two bills returned to the House with Senate amendments. I desire that those amendments may be disagreed to and the bills sent to a committee of conference. The bills are House bill No. 735, to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have been totally disabled, and House bill No. 2453, to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1873.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment of the Senate to the bill last named may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That all persons who are now entitled to pensions under existing laws, and who have lost an arm at or above the elbow, shall be rated in the second class, and shall receive twenty-four dollars per month.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment which I think will strike every member as eminently proper. It is to insert after the word "elbow" the words "or leg at or above the knee." This puts the two classes of pensioners exactly on the same footing.

Mr. RUSK. I am entirely willing that this amendment should be adopted; and I wish to offer a further amendment to the bill.

Mr. ELDREDGE. This idea of calculating the value of the fractional parts of a man's arm violates to my mind every feeling of propriety and humanity. I think that every man who has lost any portion of his arm ought to receive the same amount of pension. I do not believe in any such discrimination as this bill contemplates.

Mr. HOLMAN. My amendment is manifestly proper and just. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN to the amendment of the Senate was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RUSK] any estimate as to the increase which this bill will make in the total appropriations for pensions?

Mr. RUSK. It will make but a very small increase. The increase in the case of those who have lost a leg at or above the knee is from eighteen dollars and fifty cents per month to twenty-four dollars per month.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has the gentleman any estimate to show what the total amount of the increase will be?

Mr. RUSK. I believe there has been no estimate of that increase; but it will not be large. Mr. Speaker, I ask that both these bills be sent to a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. It would not be regular in a parliamentary point of view to amend the Senate amendments and then send the bill to a committee of conference before the Senate has had an opportunity to concur.

Mr. RUSK. Then I ask that the bill be further amended by adding this provision: "This act shall take effect from and after the 4th day of June, 1874." If any gentleman desires an explanation, I will have read the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. GARFIELD. Why does the gentleman fix June 4 as the date?

Mr. RUSK. That is when the pension quarter commences.

Mr. GARFIELD. Why should the pension quarter commence at any other time than the beginning of the fiscal year?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish to move an amendment, if my colleague [Mr. RUSK] will allow me. I desire that the provision with reference to those who have lost arms shall apply as well if a man has lost merely his hand as if he has lost his arm above the elbow. Practically a man is as much disabled in the one case as in the other; and I can see no reason for a discrimination in the amount of pension.

Mr. RUSK. There is a great deal of difference between the case of a man who has lost his arm above the elbow and that of a man who has merely lost his hand.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It seems to me that both cases should stand upon an equality in respect to the amount of pension. I move an amendment to that effect.

Mr. DAWES. I wish the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RUSK] would let this bill go to a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. That was the original suggestion. But it is not regular after the House has amended the Senate amendment and before the Senate has had an opportunity to concur to send the bill to a committee of conference. That cannot be done with any propriety

Mr. RUSK. I am entirely willing that this as well as the other bill should go to a committee of conference. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] offered his amendment, which the House adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RUSK] need not have yielded to the gentleman from Indiana. If he had not done so the bill would have gone to a committee of conference.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were adopted, so the bills may be sent to a committee of conference.

Mr. RUSK. The amendments have both been agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN'S motion was disagreed to.

The votes by which the amendments were agreed to were reconsidered, and a committee of conference was asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on both bills.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. RUSK of Wisconsin, Mr. SMALL of New Hampshire, and Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana.

CORRECTIONS IN PRIZE-LISTS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I yield to my colleague to make a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LAMISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the bill (S. No. 229) authorizing corrections to be made in errors in prize-lists, with amendments.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that in all cases where corrections in the distribution of prize-money have or may become necessary, and in all cases where the names of parties entitled to share in prizes have been or may by error be omitted from the prize-lists, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to correct and pay the same, the former upon the principle that the provisions of the act in force at the date of final adjudication govern distribution, and the latter to receive their proportion of the prizes claimed the same as all others of like rank and pay who may have been paid, said payments to be made out of the naval pension fund.

The second section provides that the second and third paragraphs of the tenth section of the Navy prize law, approved June 30, 1864, which relate to the shares of commanders of divisions and fleet captains, shall apply to officers serving in those positions from April, 1861, (the commencement of the late war,) and the shares shall be paid in the manner as provided for division commanders in said second paragraph. And all acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out the first section; and in section 2, line 8, after the word "paragraph," insert the words "said payment to be made out of the naval pension fund."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAMISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTRACTORS FOR STEAM MACHINERY.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask, by unanimous consent, to have printed Senate bill No. 141, for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery; the bill not to be removed from the Speaker's table.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am instructed by the Committee on War Claims to report back a bill (H. R. No. 1565) relating to the commissioners of claims and for other purposes, with four amendments.

I propose to submit some remarks in explanation of the provisions of the bill, and I would not do so at this late day of the session if I did not deem it necessary.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I should like to know whether the bill is not subject to the point of order which will send it to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The bill was in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that committee was discharged from its further consideration under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Then, by reason of that order of the House, the bill is fortified against the point of order which would send it to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The bill was in Committee of the Whole, but the House suspended the rules, discharged that committee from its further consideration, and recommitted it to the Committee on War Claims with authority to report at any time.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I did not know that it had been in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had the Journal examined and found such to be the fact.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I invite the attention of the House to some of the provisions of this bill. It has been in part explained in a report submitted to the House on the 9th of February last, (House Report No. 91, first session Forty-third Congress.) The proposed amendments make some additions and changes. I will very briefly state some of the features of the bill and amendments, and I believe that they will, if properly understood, find but very little, if any, opposition.

By well-settled principles of international law the Government was and is not in strictness under any obligation to make compensation to any citizen of the States proclaimed in rebellion for any property taken, used, or destroyed in those States during flagrant war, so far as requisite for necessary military operations. This severe rule of public law was wisely mitigated by acts of Congress and proclamations of the President. The act of March 3, 1871, provided for the appointment of commissioners of claims, to be commissioned for two years, whose duty it was to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of claims of loyal citizens for stores or supplies taken or furnished during the rebellion for the use of the Army of the United States. The act of March 3, 1873, continued the commissioners in office to March 10, 1877, but limited the right to receive claims to March 3, 1873. The time for filing claims has therefore expired.

The first section of the bill now under consideration extends the time for filing claims to the 3d day of March next—only about nine months—and only in those "cases where a sufficient reason is shown, to the satisfaction of the commissioners of claims for the failure to present (the claims) within the time prescribed by law."

It will be seen this is an extension only for a brief period, and carefully qualified besides. It seems to me this section of the bill is just.

It should be remembered no provision was made for these claims until March 3, 1871. Claimants had only two years to file their claims. There are doubtless some, but probably not a very great number of persons whose claims have not been presented, either because they were not informed of the law, or were unable to incur the expense necessary to prepare and present them. I know there is danger that some fraudulent claims may be presented, and that as ten years, more or less, have elapsed since the claims arose, it may be difficult to secure evidence to meet attempts at fraud; but all these are circumstances which the commissioners may and should consider, and require convincing proof accordingly.

It is better to incur the risk of some fraud than deny to meritorious loyal citizens a payment which the policy of the law has accorded to so many. Equity delights in equality. Justice should be done alike to all. I cannot enumerate the causes which have delayed the presentation of claims. I will refer to one. The Tennessee Legislature passed an act February 19, 1868, appointing a commission to audit and state the amount of property taken from or damages done to loyal citizens of that State by our military authorities during the rebellion, with a view to procure payment from Congress. These claims were presented and proof made in numerous cases. They very often included some items for "stores or supplies taken or furnished for the use of the Army," and others for "damages," which the Government is under no obligation to pay and probably never will pay. The claimants, often supposing some provision would be made for all these or perhaps that State officers in Tennessee would see to their collection, omitted to present to the commissioners of claims the items which they could have properly considered. One claim of this kind is now before the Committee on War Claims, from the widow of the late Governor James C. Jones, of Tennessee.

I hope no objection will be made to the first section of the bill. No general extension of time will probably ever again be asked or granted.

Mr. MAYNARD. These claims have been presented at considerable expense. The great body of them—I do not mean all, but the people, who did not keep themselves informed of the Statutes at Large, supposed they had made out their cases and they would get a hearing.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The object of this section of the bill is to meet cases of that sort, and claims also on behalf of indigent persons who perhaps did not learn of the existence of the law or had not the means to present their cases. I hope no objection will be made to this provision of the bill. I will not occupy any further time in explaining it.

The second section explains itself. The necessity and propriety of it are apparent. It requires every petition for the allowance of a claim to state it by items in detail. It requires a statement of all payments made on account of property taken, furnished, or used by the military forces of the United States.

This is designed to secure credit to the Government for all payments made by officers of the Army, by soldiers, or otherwise.

In some instances military officers in the field made payments for stores and supplies of which no record in detail is preserved in the War Department, and if claimants again demand payment it is intended they shall do so under the risk of indictment for perjury.

Section 3 of the bill proposes to increase the number of agents to be employed by the commissioners of claims from three to five; it proposes also to increase the number of clerks. This is one of the most essential and valuable provisions of the bill.

The commissioners of claims in their third annual report of December last say:

The whole number of claims presented to the commissioners is 22,298.
The gross amount of all the claims filed is $60,258,150.44.
The number disposed of in our—

First report was	580
Second report was	2,209
(This) third report is	2,465
Total	5,254

The aggregate amount of the claims so passed upon is $10,224,386.32.
There remain, therefore, 17,044 claims, amounting to $50,033,764.12, yet to be disposed of.

The duty of agents is defined in the act of March 3, 1873, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the commissioners of claims may appoint and employ agents, but not more than three at any time, whose duty it shall be, under the direction and authority of said commissioners, to investigate claims pending before them, to procure evidence, to secure the attendance of witnesses on behalf of the Government, and to examine the same, and to cross-examine the witnesses produced by claimants, and to perform such other duties as may be required of them by said commissioners, who may discharge them at any time.

These agents are required to travel all over the eleven States proclaimed in insurrection, procure witnesses, ascertain facts, and take testimony before commissioners appointed under section 1 of the act of March 3, 1873, which is as follows:

That the commissioners of claims shall have authority to appoint special commissioners to take testimony, to be used in cases pending before them, who shall have authority to administer oaths and affirmations, and to take the depositions of witnesses: Provided, The claimants shall pay the fees of such special commissioners for taking the depositions of witnesses called by them; but such fees shall in no case exceed ten cents per folio if the claim is less than $1,000.

To understand the necessity for additional agents it is important to bear in mind some facts. Up to December last in a little over two and a half years the commissioners had examined and allowed 5,254 claims.

In the third annual report the commissioners say:

3. We present herewith special reports in 2,465 cases. Of this number there are—

Wholly disallowed	1,373
Allowed in whole or in part	1,092
Total	2,465

Of the number disallowed, 249 are claimants who have served in the confederate army or furnished a substitute; and 56 are of persons who were in the civil service of the confederacy, or who took the oath of allegiance to the confederacy.

Of the number allowed, 164 are persons who served in the United States Army.

The aggregate amount claimed in these 2,465 cases is $4,717,887.29.

Amount allowed	$643,713 04
Amount disallowed	4,074,174 25
Total	4,717,887 29

Many cases, especially from Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, remain in our hands, heard, partly examined, but not finished, because our special agents have not been able to find time to examine them and report to us.

This proves two points: first, the necessity of investigation, and second, that more agents are required to perform the labor.

When 2,465 claimants ask for $4,717,887.29 and are only entitled to $643,713.04, the necessity for investigation is clear. But it is further shown by the fact that out of 2,465 claimants, more than half—1,373—were entitled to no allowance. Some of these were rejected because they were claims over which the commissioners had no jurisdiction, but most of them for disloyalty, and many for want of adequate proof

In further support of the necessity for additional agents and clerks, Judge Aldis, the able chairman of the commissioners of claims, in a communication addressed to the Committee of War Claims, which will be found in a report made by the committee on the 9th of February last, says:

2. Of the seventeen thousand claims, about fifteen hundred have been partially examined, and are suspended for further investigation. These suspended cases are of the most difficult character, and their thorough investigation involves many inquiries and much labor and correspondence. In each case the commissioner examining it makes memorandums of the points to which the inquiries should be directed and the names of persons who may have information. This work of inquiry, investigation, and correspondence ought to be done at the time the claim is being examined. The committee will perceive that the aid of a clerk, acting with and under the supervision of the commissioner, would be of great service in these suspended cases, by securing more thorough investigation, and saving the time of the commissioners. Omissions to inquire and investigate may well happen to a commissioner on account of the pressure of business and the want of time, which the industry of the assistant might prevent.

3. Besides the great body of claims in which the evidence is mainly in depositions, there are about one thousand claims (those over $10,000) in which the law requires that the witnesses shall be produced before us and examined orally. Hence, for six months of each year we are occupied for four days in every week in examining witnesses orally. The magnitude of these claims and the advantage of oral examinations of witnesses doubtless fully justify this considerable expenditure of time upon them. But it leaves us with a narrow margin of time for the transaction of all our other official business, and especially for the examining and reporting upon the cases wholly on paper. In order to do justice to claimants and speed the allowance and payment of loyal and honest claims, where the evidence rests wholly in depositions, we have been obliged to do much extra work and to spend much time beyond the usual hours of labor. We respectfully suggest that by the employment of a few clerks we may be relieved from that kind of work which a clerk may well do, and thus may be enabled to devote more time to the proper work of the commission—to that work in examining and weighing evidence, in deciding cases, and making our reports, which by law is specially confided to the commissioners, and which alone they can do.

We believe that the employment by each commissioner of a clerk, to be employed in the investigation of claims, will greatly speed the work of the commission and enable it to be done better. It is a real economy thus to forward the work of the commission. Justice to the loyal and honest claimants requires that their just claims, which have remained unpaid for ten years, should be paid soon, and that all reasonable means for forwarding the investigation of them should be furnished to the commission. It is for the interest of the Government that they should be investigated as soon as possible, for by the lapse of time and the death of witnesses the opportunity to defraud the Government by perjury and fabricated evidence constantly and rapidly increases.

I venture to say that in my judgment a failure to provide for the proposed additional agents and clerks will entail a loss to the Government of $5,000,000.

I feel it a duty, then, to urge this section of the bill on the score of economy, of justice to honest claimants and the Government.

One of the amendments to the bill proposes to create two additional commissioners of claims, to continue in office until March 10, 1877. This will make the number in all five. It is proposed that any two, with the assent of the president of the board, shall be competent to make a report. This will give two boards to investigate claims. All the reasons for the appointment of new agents and clerks prove the necessity of the additional commissioners.

Unless this is done years and years will elapse before the claims can all be considered. Whatever money is due to claimants under the act of March 3, 1871, should in all conscience be promptly determined and paid. The delay is a wrong, and a national disgrace.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand the gentleman to say that there is a recommendation for the appointment of two additional commissioners.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am not aware that there is any recommendation for the appointment of additional commissioners The bill contains a provision for the appointment of additional agents and commissioners of claims. It is not very likely that the commissioners of claims would themselves make a recommendation for the appointment of additional commissioners. But this recommendation is made by the Committee on War Claims. After an examination of the multitude of claims that have come before these commissioners, the Committee on War Claims have come to the conclusion that justice to the claimants and the protection of the Government require these additional agents and commissioners.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment for a question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. By the third section of the bill authority is given to the commissioners to appoint five agents instead of the three now authorized to investigate and report upon claims. Those agents are authorized to take testimony. I understand the custom has been in making this investigation which is reported to the commissioners that the parties have not had the opportunity of being present when the testimony was taken and cross-examining the witnesses. I wish to call the attention of the House to the injustice of the practice to the claimants. I hope before the conclusion of the discussion and before the bill is voted on the chairman of the Committee on War Claims will permit me to present an amendment to the effect that no testimony taken by these agents and reported to the commissioners shall be received unless the parties had the opportunity of being present and cross-examining the witnesses.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It may be difficult to change the practice of the commissioners. The claimants take their testimony, except in cases involving over $10,000, ex parte and without notice to the commissioners of claims. It is ex parte on both sides; but the commissioners now have power by a rule to prescribe that the testimony may on both sides be taken under oath and on notice. That power exists, and the commissioners can very properly exercise discretion. I hope gentlemen will not embarrass this bill with any attempt now to legislate where legislation is unnecessary. In some cases it might defeat the possibility of procuring evidence if notice should be required. It would make delay. And in districts with a strong disloyal population, loyal men would not always dare to tell, or freely tell, all they know as to the disloyalty of claimants if they were to have notice of it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I do not think that the gentleman's statement about the testimony being ex parte is correct. The evidence is taken by the commissioner on the part of the Government. He takes the testimony, not the claimant at all. If it is ex parte it is ex parte on the side of the Government—the whole of it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am speaking of the agents. Now, it is the business of the agents to hunt up witnesses and to take testimony. The commissioners are merely officers before whom the evidence is taken. They do not take testimony except as a notary public does. They are merely the officers who administer the oaths and before whom the testimony is taken.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question on that point. While the agent is carrying in his pocket a list of interrogatories prepared by the commissioners in Washington of the most stringent and searching character and a form of cross-examination, and when each witness is subjected to that cross-examination according to a printed form, and must answer each and every question put by the commissioners here, does not this make the testimony ex parte in favor of the Government and not in favor of the claimant?

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is all right that there should be searching inquiries. Certainly no just claimant has any right to object to that.

I now call the attention of the House to another provision of the bill.

The fourth section of the bill provides—

That whenever the commissioners are satisfied that a claim is fraudulent in whole or in part, or that the claimant is corruptly attempting to procure, by fraud, false evidence, or collusion, the allowance of a claim, in whole or in part, it shall be their duty to disallow the entire claim.

This applies to claimants a salutary rule. It is an admonition to them that "honesty is the best policy." It is designed to promote public and private morals. It is substantially the rule applied in the Court of Claims by the eleventh section of the act of March 3, 1863, (12 Statutes, 767.) The payments made to these claimants are all gratuities—they flow from the bounty of Congress. And it has been well and truly said—

That he who asks equity should do equity, that he who appeals to the discretion and to the generosity * * * of a power or tribunal should be clean-handed as the first step, as the first title to be heard. If he comes with his hands soiled, if he comes as one seeking to overreach, to snatch from the Treasury a sum of money to which beyond all peradventure we are authorized * * * to say he was never entitled, he discredits himself, he discredits his claim, and * * * he gives up the day to which he is entitled in court, provided his case be as this case is, only an appeal to generosity and to discretion. (ROSCOE CONKLING, in Senate, May 15, 1874.)

The next section of the bill is designed to define and prescribe a punishment for perjury, and in the form in which I propose to amend it will read as follows:

SEC. 5. That every person who knowingly and willfully swears falsely in any oath or affidavit which is or may be authorized by law, or in any oath taken or affidavit made, to be used as evidence in any court, or before either House of Congress or any committee or officer thereof, or before any officer or person acting under the authority of the Constitution or law, shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by fine not more than $2,000, or imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court. And in every case where such oath or affidavit is subscribed by the person making the same, proof of such fact shall be sufficient evidence of the official authority of the person before whom the same purports to be made or taken to administer and certify said oath or affidavit.

All offenses heretofore committed may be prosecuted or punished, in the same manner as if this act had not been passed.

As the bill authorizes agents to administer oaths, it was deemed a matter of prudence to make it perjury to swear falsely in the oaths they might administer. In declaring thus, at least as a matter of prudence, by way of abundant caution, the usage of Congress has been pursued. The commissioner who recently revised the statutes declared that—

The legislative practice is to affix the pains and penalties of perjury anew every time an oath is required in any statute to be taken either before a judicial or administrative officer. (House Report No. 91, first session Forty-third Congress, page 3.)

This was done in the act of May 11, 1872, relating to the commissioners of claims. The result is, as the commissioners say, that we now have somewhere from forty to sixty perjury statutes. These were all so narrow or limited in their operation that the commissioners recommended a new perjury statute more comprehensive than any in existence.

The existing state of the law is now embodied in the new Revised Statutes, which did not undertake to make any new law, in these words:

SEC. 5460. Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years; and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until such time as the judgment against him is reversed.

SEC. 5461. Every person who procures another to commit any perjury is guilty of subornation of perjury, and punishable as in the preceding section prescribed.

Congress has for many years been examining claims on ex parte affidavits made to accompany petitions thereafter to be presented to Congress in support of such claims. Vast millions have been appropriated in payment of claims allowed on these affidavits. And yet it is a remarkable fact that it is not legal perjury to swear falsely in any such affidavits. It is possibly doubtful if it is legal perjury to swear falsely in any affidavit made in support of a claim presented to Congress in the ordinary mode. I have drawn the proposed perjury section and submitted it to several very able lawyers in this House, and according to my understanding it meets their entire approval.

Among these are the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, [Mr. BUTLER,] the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR,] with whom I have the honor to be associated on the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and the chairman of that committee, [Mr. POLAND,] and others.

The seventh section proposes to transfer claims within the jurisdiction of the commissioners of claims from the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments to the commissioners.

The Quartermaster's Department holds that it has jurisdiction of such claims, while the Commissary Department on the contrary holds that the act of March 3, 1871, creating the commissioners of claims, gives them exclusive jurisdiction of all claims for commissary supplies arising during the war in the States proclaimed in insurrection. It is better to have one uniform jurisdiction. While this double jurisdiction exists there is some danger that claimants will, as they are doing, prosecute claims both before the commissioners and in the Quartermaster's Department, and in a few instances the same claim has been twice paid.

The same claim may be fraudulently prosecuted in the name of different claimants.

I now come to a provision of the bill which I deem of the utmost importance. It is as follows:

SEC. 8. That the commissioners of claims shall receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of such claims, growing out of the late war of the rebellion, as may be referred to them by either House of Congress, upon the recommendation of a standing committee; and said commissioners shall make report of their proceedings, and of each claim considered by them, with the evidence in relation thereto, and their conclusions of law and fact thereon, at the commencement of each session of Congress, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall lay the same before said House.

The purpose of this provision is to withdraw from Congress as far as possible the investigation of facts and the consideration of claims. There are so many reasons in favor of this change that I cannot fully state or present them. My experience on the Committee on War Claims has more than ever before satisfied me of the urgent demand for a change in the mode of examining claims.

There are four considerations in favor of the change which I will first mention. They are: (1,) the impossibility of properly investigating in Congress all the claims which require examination; (2,) the unjust reproach which the investigation brings upon Congress; (3,) the danger of frauds practiced upon Congress; and (4) the possibility of fraud or corruption in connection with some of the claims. In support of these suggestions let me present what is said by a distinguished judge of the Court of Claims. In Brown vs. The United States (6 Court of Claims Reports, 191,) Judge Nott says:

When the work of establishing the Court of Claims was before Congress, it appeared by the reports of their own committees that as long ago as in 1848, of 17,573 private claims which within ten years had been presented to Congress, 8,948 had never been in any way acted upon, and but 910 had passed both Houses. (Report by Hon. J. N. Rockwell, from Committee on Claims, House of Representatives, April 26, 1848, first session Thirtieth Congress, volume 3, No. 498.) That such a number of American citizens should have been left by their own Government without a hearing, and to that extent at least without redress, was of itself a great and grievous wrong. But while the great mass of creditors were left unheard, claims of doubtful character passed through Congress, some in forms which attracted attention, and others of which the country never heard, in the dubious disguise of ex parte arbitrations and awards.

The same melancholy history of justice denied or long delayed distinguishes the whole period since April, 1848. There have been presented to the Committee on War Claims during this session of Congress about 1,184 claims, besides 2,465 reported from the commissioners of claims, and there yet remain undisposed of about 1,000 claims besides the claims reported rejected by the commissioners of claims. The House and Senate Committees on Claims are abundantly crowded, and besides all this claims are increasing and accumulating. It is utterly impossible that these ever can or will be properly investigated by any committee during the hurried and busy sessions of Congress. A portion of the claims only can be examined, and in the contest for precedence there is danger that claimants who can secure the most persuasive and powerful friends may belong to the favored few who will be heard, while over the crowd of claims preferred on behalf of the more humble and lowly the only and sorry consolation afforded may be expressed in the fearful and fatal words:

Occupet extremum scabies.

And unfortunately there is danger that the most meritorious claims may be among the unfortunate class. A claim is not always importunate in proportion to its merits. A want of merit may fortify by a zeal entirely worthy of a better cause. But I proceed to quote again from the case to which I have referred in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Judge Nott says:

Moreover, the vast number of claims pressing upon Congress had surrounded the national Legislature with influences importunate, if not corrupt, and the passage of some doubtful claims of large amounts had aroused public suspicion and lowered the character of Congress in the public mind.

About the same time, too, a seal was set upon the degradation of one of the Houses by the expulsion of three members for receiving bribes for the prosecution through Congress of private claims. The proceedings will be found in the Congressional Globe for the third session of the Thirty-fourth Congress, under the expressive title of "Corruption of members of Congress." Finally, the public credit had suffered, and the Government, like all irresponsible purchasers, was compelled to pay more in the market for what it bought than many of its own citizens, and the most prudent merchants and skillful manufacturers of the country refused to deal with it as a customer, which held itself above all legal means of redress. To remedy these great mischiefs the statesmanship of the day devised the Court of Claims. * * * * * * *

The investigation of claims in Congress brings unjust reproach on this the highest legislative body of the land. Only a few days since, on the 23d day of May, the Washington Chronicle, published under the shadow of the Capitol, said:

Claimants are very much disgusted with certain Senators who insist upon knowing what the nature of a claim against the Government is before they consent to the Senate acting upon it. A distinguished member of the Lower House the other day, who was friendly to a claimant whose bill had passed the House but which was laid over in the Senate, was heard to exclaim, "D——n a man who opposes a bill because he don't know what it means."

I would withdraw from Congress the investigation of claims, so that even unjust accusations should not be heralded over the land to bring reproach upon the nation.

Congress is always in great danger of being imposed on by claims fraudulent in character or amount. This danger is almost inseparable from the system now pursued of considering claims.

A committee of Congress is not a court. No means have been provided to hunt up evidence and search for witnesses and take testimony for the Government. The evidence is generally ex parte and only on the side of the claimant. This enables claimants to pursue and renew claims year after year, and one allowance often stimulates new demands.

This is well illustrated in the case to which I have already referred in the Court of Claims. The learned judge, in a note to that case, says of a certain claim often before Congress:

The first case in the first volume of the reports of this court (Gordon's case, 1 Court Claims Reports, page 1) discloses these extraordinary facts: There was allowed to the claimant for property destroyed by United States troops $8,873; then $100 for an error of calculation in the first "award;" then $8,997.94 for interest; then $10,004.89 for more interest; then $39,217.50 for property previously found not to have been destroyed by United States troops; and finally $66,519.85 on a "revision" of the previous "awards."

But even this record of a famous and almost immortal case did not quiet its undying demand. Mark Twain wrote its history, and gave what he alleges were "the facts in the case of (the claim of the heirs of) George Fisher, deceased," in the January (1871) number of the New York Galaxy, page 152, and he concludes by saying:

It is my belief that as long as the continent of America holds together the heirs of George Fisher, deceased, will still make pilgrimages to Washington from the swamps of Florida to plead for just a little more cash on their bill of damages; even when they received the last of that $67,000 they said it was only one-fourth what the Government owed them on that infernal corn-field; * * * This is not the only hereditary fraud (if fraud it is, which I have before repeatedly remarked is not proven) that is being quietly handed down from generation to generation of fathers and sons through the persecuted Treasury of the United States.

Mark Twain was not mistaken. The heirs of George Fisher appeared in this Congress, and House Report No. 330, first session Forty-third Congress, made I know honestly and in perfect good faith by the Committee on Military Affairs, March 27, 1874, concludes that—

The claim has been acknowledged to be just so often, that it is useless for your committee to go further into the details of the case; and your committee sees no reason to doubt that the sum of $34,952, with interest, according to the award of the Secretary of War, subject to sums of money paid, is still due the claimants in this case. But in view of the almost invariable practice of the Government in such cases established in the last few years and of the large amount of interest due in this case, your committee recommend a proviso to this bill limiting payment under it to $16,848, the principal sum due; and with this proviso they recommend the passage of the bill.

(And see Senate Report No. 518, third session, Forty-second Congress, February 27, 1873.) On subsequent consideration the report was recommitted to the committee for further examination. There is danger that it may sleep perhaps until the sublime nonsense of "rotation in office" shall take from these Halls those who are most familiar with its merits, when it will doubtless reappear, and for aught I know it may be justly, again in the garb of injured innocence.

I do not undertake to say whether the claim is just or unjust. But it proves one thing, that some tribunal should be provided where an early hearing can be had when evidence is fresh, when both sides may be heard, and an award made which shall be regarded as final.

One of the evils of attempting to hear claims in Congress, then, is that too many of them never die; they are never finally decided; they "flourish in immortal youth."

But if claims are referred to the commissioners of claims, the evidence will be taken on both sides; it will be reported to Congress and preserved. Their report will generally be final. An effort to renew the conflict will arouse a proper watchfulness, criminal fraud will be discouraged, the public morals promoted, and the Treasury saved from plunder.

Congress will be relieved in large measure of the importunities of claimants and claim agents. I do not mean or seek to disparage any of these; but I would send them to another tribunal, which, unlike Congress, should always be open to every claimant and every honest and honorable claim agent or attorney. Let this be done, and then the public business will not suffer, as now, by time and attention devoted to private claims.

The occupation of those who sometimes hope, however erroneously, to carry claims through by personal or political influence, on grounds of friendship or favor or to promote political prospects, will be "gone," it is hoped forever—

Gone, where the woodbine twineth.

The act of March 3, 1863, amending the act establishing the Court of Claims, sought to avoid all these evils by providing (12 Statutes, 765, section 2) as follows:

That all petitions and bills praying or providing for the satisfaction of private claims against the Government, founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, shall, unless otherwise ordered by resolution of the House in which the same are presented or introduced, be transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, with all the accompanying documents, to the court aforesaid.

But this in practice has failed, for two reasons. The jurisdiction only extends to three classes of claims; and as to this it has been a failure, because the provision "unless otherwise ordered" has totally defeated its object. It is always "ordered" that claims when presented shall go to committees.

It is in fact not possible that the Court of Claims could hear all claims presented to Congress; and another tribunal is needed, with no limitation on its jurisdiction except the discretion of either House of Congress in referring claims.

The commissioners of claims have the best machinery yet devised to secure evenhanded justice, alike to claimants and the Government. Our experience with these commissioners proves the wisdom of providing such a tribunal. It is composed of able and upright men who have discharged these arduous duties with singular ability and fidelity. This tribunal and the Court of Claims are both needed. Both should be made permanent. Each should be a court.

We may learn wisdom from the practice in England. There every subject of Victoria and every alien has a remedy by "petition of right," which is heard in the courts. It is regulated by the statute of 23 and 24 Victoria, and it is shown in Brown vs. The United States (6 Court of Claims Reports, page 191) that it covers almost every conceivable case where a claim can be preferred against the Government of Great Britain. (House Report No. 262, first session Forty-third Congress, page 2, note 2.)

Such claims, so far as I can ascertain, do not go to Parliament. There is no committee of claims either in the Lords or Commons in England. And it is shown in Sir Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice that all private bills for other purposes are considered with a scrutiny and care which might well be adopted here both for the credit of Congress and in justice to the Government and all concerned. They are investigated by "examiners," one of whom

Is required to give at least seven clear days' notice in the private-bill office of the Commons of the day appointed for the examination of each petition. * * * The public sitting of the examiners commence on the 18th of January, being about a fortnight before the meeting of Parliament.

Witnesses are examined, and every precaution is taken to secure a knowledge of every material fact to ascertain the truth and guard the public interest, as well as to do justice to all "whom it may concern."

Parliament is so omnipotent that it can exercise judicial power, but even with this it does not venture to examine mere claims.

Mr. MAYNARD. It was originally provided that the Court of Claims should have jurisdiction of all cases sent to it by resolution of either House of Congress. I am not aware that we have in recent years sent claims to them for adjudication. It has been by no means a usual thing for committees to make such a recommendation.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have said that. And now we propose to provide a tribunal to which all claims may go. Though we cannot compel either House of Congress to send claims, for one I shall advocate the propriety of sending every claim there, where there can be the least controversy over any question of fact connected with it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to ask the gentleman a further question. Many of these cases are in the nature of claims ex contractu, and I ask whether it would not be proper and fair to send them to the Court of Claims?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The Court of Claims already has jurisdiction in cases of contract, express or implied, and in cases founded on any regulations of the Executive Departments. And now I propose to provide a tribunal to which claims may go over which the Court of Claims now has no jurisdiction. The Court of Claims, as I have said, has a limited jurisdiction; but there are many claims coming up outside of contracts, express or implied, and outside of claims founded on regulations of Executive Departments; and I propose that Congress shall have the right to send claims other than these to the commissioners of claims.

It might well be urged here that it is a duty of Congress to establish a court with power to hear all claims of whatever character, and that this power to consider and pass on claims is a judicial function which cannot properly be exercised by Congress.

The Constitution provides that—

The judicial power shall extend to controversies to which the United States shall be a party.

At the time this was adopted the "petition of right" was a recognized common-law mode of reaching the courts of England with claims against the government. It is fair to presume the Constitution was designed to give an equivalent remedy.

It has been urged with much force that—

The Government is composed of three co-ordinate branches: the legislative, judiciary, and executive, to each one of which are delegated certain powers and duties. It is the duty of the legislative department to provide the means or remedies by which the right of parties may be determined, but not to pass upon or determine such rights. This latter power is exclusively vested in the judiciary. It is therefore not within the power of the legislative body to pass any act of a judicial nature. Jones vs. Perry, 10 Yerger, 59; Holden vs. Jarvis, 11 Massachusetts, 400; Picquet's Appeal, 5 Pickering, 65; Lewis vs. Webb, 3 Greenleaf, 326; Ex parte to Bedford, Jurist and Law Magazine for October, 1833, page 301, 4 New Hampshire, 572; Lane vs. Dorman, 3 Scammon, 235; Davenport vs. Wood, 11 Illinois, 551.

But I will not pursue this inquiry.

The Court of Claims has said in the case of Brown vs. The United States that—

Our popular orators and writers have impressed upon the public mind the belief that in this Republic of ours private rights receive unequaled protection from the Government; and some have actually pointed to the establishment of this court as a sublime spectacle to be seen nowhere else on earth. The action of a former Congress, however, in requiring (act July 27, 1868, 15 Statutes at Large, 243) that aliens should not maintain certain suits here unless their own governments accord a corresponding right to citizens of the United States, has revealed the fact that the legal redress given to a citizen of the United States, against the United States is less than he can have against almost any government in Christendom.

The laws of other nations have been produced and proved in this court, and the mortifying fact is judicially established that the Government of the United States holds itself, of nearly all governments, the least amenable to the law.

Of all the governments of Europe, it is believed that Russia alone does not hold the state amenable in matters of property to the law. Of all the countries whose laws have been examined in this court, Spain only resembles the United States in fettering the judicial proceedings of her courts by restrictions and leaving the execution of their decrees dependent upon the legislative will.

And now I call attention to an additional section of the bill of great importance, as follows:

SEC. —. That any court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of and power to hear and determine all claims and rights of action against the United States which shall be presented to the Secretary of State, by petition, in the nature of a petition of right, and which shall be by him referred to said court, and all claims and rights of action which shall be referred to said court by the President of the United States or by either House of Congress. An appeal shall be allowed from all judgments rendered as in other cases.

One of the objects of this provision is to give to aliens the right to have their claims against the Government passed on by a proper tribunal. Only those aliens can sue in the Court of Claims who are—

Citizens or subjects of any government which accords to citizens of the United States the right to prosecute claims against such government in its courts. (15 Statutes, 243.)

This gives the right to sue to citizens or subjects of nearly all the civilized powers. For it is shown in Fichera vs. The United States (9 Court Claims Reports) that nearly all foreign governments allow our citizens to sue them in their courts for almost every description of claim. In that case Judge Nott says:

As we have before found, the perfected justice of the civil law made the Government, in matters of ordinary obligation, subject to the suit of the citizen, in the ordinary tribunals of the country. We have found this right to be preserved under modern codes in Prussia, Hanover, and Bavaria, (Brown's case, 5 Court of Claims Reports, page 571;) in the republic of Switzerland, (Lobsiger's case, id., page 687;) in Holland, the Netherlands, the Hanseatic Provinces, and the Free City of Hamburg, (Brown's case, 6 Court of Claims Reports, page 193;) in France, (Dauphin's case, id., page 221;) in Spain, (Molina's case, id., page 269;) and in Belgium, (De Gives's case, 7 Court of Claims Reports, page 519.)

It was also shown in Brown's case, (5 Court of Claims Reports, page 571,) by a distinguished historical writer who was examined as a witness, Mr. Frederick Kapp, that this liability of a government under the civil law is not a device of modern civilization, but has been deemed inherent in the system, and has been so long established that, to use the phrase of the common law, the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. Therefore it is to be expected that in Italy, the seat and fountain of the civil law, this same liability of government is to be found existing. The "Civil Code of the Kingdom of Italy" of 1866 recognizes rather than establishes the fundamental principle of liability; but it expressly provides (article 10) that "in suits pending before the judicial authority between private persons and the public administration the proceedings shall always take place formally at the regular session."

It is also provided, by the third article of the same code, that "the alien is admitted to enjoy all the civil rights granted to citizens." These provisions establish the right of an Italian citizen to maintain his action in this court, within the meaning of the act July 27, 1868, (15 Statutes, page 243, section 2,) which prohibits the subject of a foreign government from maintaining a suit for captured property, unless "the right to prosecute claims against such government in its courts" is reciprocal, and extends to citizens of the United States.

In England aliens have a remedy by "petition of right," regulated by act 23 and 24 Victoria, July 3, 1860; United States vs. O'Keefe, 11 Wallace, 179; Carlisle vs. United States, 16 Wallace, 148. (See Whiting's War Powers of the President, 51; The Venus, 8 Cranch; The Hoop, 1 Robinson, 196; The Army Warwick. Sprague, J.)

(See Whiting's "War Claims," affixed to forty-third edition of "War Powers," page 333, edition of 1871; Perrin vs. United States, 4 Court Claims, 547.)

But the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is limited, so that the remedy for injuries is entirely inadequate.

The act of March 3, 1863, (12 Statutes, 765, section 9,) denies the court the power to hear—

Any claim growing out of or dependent on any treaty stipulation.

This cuts off many of the most important claims.

Then its jurisdiction does not extend to torts such as our citizens demand redress for from other governments, and such as we should compensate to citizens or subjects of other powers.

In a letter dated February 27, 1874, the Secretary of State makes the following statement of reasons why a law should be enacted for disposing of alien war claims:

During and after the late war many claims were presented by representatives of foreign powers, for injuries alleged to have been suffered by citizens or subjects of such powers, arising out of acts committed against their persons or property during the war. Especially were such claims presented on behalf of citizens or subjects of Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy.

No recognition has been made of any possible liability for the claims advanced by the representatives of France, Germany, or Italy. But by the treaty known as the treaty of Washington it was agreed that the British claims arising out of such acts committed between April 13, 1861, and April 9, 1865, should be submitted to arbitration. The result of this arbitration is thus described in the last annual message of the President:

It was awarded that the Government of the United States should pay to the government of Her Britannic Majesty, within twelve months from the date of the award, the sum of $1,929,819 in gold. The commission disallowed all other claims of British subjects against the United States. The amount of the claims presented by the British government, but disallowed or dismissed, is understood to be about $93,000,000.

These proceedings practically worked a preference of this class of British claims over all others. It left unrecognized, and without means provided for adjudicating upon, first, the claims of other governments, (as France, Germany, and Italy,) and, second, British claims later than April 9, 1865.

It cannot be doubted that the United States rightfully exercised acts of war after the 9th of April, 1865. That was the date of Lee's surrender. A state of war continued after that time which rendered necessary many or all of the acts which are complained of, and those acts when sifted will probably prove to constitute as little foundation for claims against the United States as the acts committed within the date named in the treaty of Washington.

The powers whose subjects have had their claims deferred to those of British subjects, as well as Great Britain herself, on behalf of British subjects whose claims arose after April 9, 1865, stand ready to ask us to decide upon the validity of their claims. What answer can the Department of State make to such a request?

It is a fact that claims of our citizens against France and the Prussian Empire, growing out of the Franco-Prussian war, have been heard in the courts of those nations, adjudicated, and paid, while our Government has thus far neglected to make any provision for the consideration or payment of claims of citizens of those powers against the United States growing out of acts of our Government and military authorities during the rebellion. National honor, honesty, and justice all demand of us that we no longer delay.

If this section is adopted it will give a remedy. Upon the principle decided in Diekelman vs. The United States, recently determined in the Court of Claims, the reference of an alien claim to any court will secure a decision upon the law applicable to it. Claims heretofore existing will not be affected by the statute of limitations, and where they grow out of, or depend on, any principle of international law they will be decided by that law.

By another section of the proposed amendments it is declared that the provisions of the act of March 2, 1863, to prevent and punish frauds upon the Government, shall be made applicable to a time of peace. That act (12 Statutes, 696) provides for punishing persons in the military or naval service by court-martial who "in time of war" knowingly make or present fraudulent claims.

There is no reason why such acts should not be punished in time of peace.

The thirtieth section of the act of March 2, 1867, (14 Statutes, 484) does not reach all cases of single individual frauds.

I have thus adverted to some of the prominent features of the bill, and I trust it will receive the sanction of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have briefly gone over the provisions of this bill. I hope there will be no objection to any of its provisions. I hope that Congress will pass the bill. I believe that the cause of justice will be promoted by it and the interests of the Government secured.

My constituents have no interest in this bill. I have urged it only to do justice to the loyal people of the South, to do justice to citizens and subjects of friendly foreign powers, to do justice to the Government.

Pass this bill and in two years the great body of the sixteen thousand claims now before the commissioners of claims, and the thousand claims presented in this Congress and yet undisposed of in the Committee of War Claims, and other hundreds of claims before the Committee of Claims and in the Senate, and other hundreds yet to come, can all be disposed of, and the loyal claimants of the South will rejoice in the liberality of the Government and the speedy payment of all just claims. In one year much of this work can be done. Every southern claimant is interested in it. But if this bill is defeated five years will not see these claims considered and paid. If any Representative from the South is ready to oppose this bill or defeat it, the responsibility will be with him. For one, I am ready to pay every loyal claimant and do so speedily. Delay is bringing ruin to thousands of men. They appeal to us for speedy justice, and if there be delay it shall be no fault of mine.

I know some gentlemen want additional claims of a different character brought within the jurisdiction of the commissioners of claims. But if they insist on this they cannot hope to succeed. Their failure can be no excuse, no justification for throwing obstacles in the way of this bill. Let us support this measure for the good it will do. Let no gentleman grasp at a shadow and thereby gain nothing, but lose the good he now has in prospect.

I am directed by the Committee on War Claims to permit the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBB] to offer an amendment consisting of three sections; but I will state that the Committee on War Claims refused to ingraft that amendment on the bill, and I hope the House will vote it down. He has leave, however, to offer the amendment, and when he has done so I shall ask the previous question on the bill and the amendments, reserving only to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] the right to offer an amendment which he proposes, and to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he proposes to allow any other amendments to be offered?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not; it will only embarrass the bill, and if the bill has any friends, I hope they will stand by the demand for the previous question.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina. I offer the following as additional sections to the bill:

SEC. —. That the term "stores and supplies," as used in the section and act just named, shall be so construed as to include buildings, other structures, and grounds, used or occupied by the Army or Navy of the United States in the States proclaimed as in insurrection, for barracks, quarters, offices, hospitals, store-houses, wharves, depots, or other military or naval purposes, for periods not less than thirty consecutive days, and that the measure of compensation for such use or occupation shall be the fair rental value of the premises at the time and for the time of occupation or use, and such additional allowance as the said commissioners may in any special case deem fair and equitable for the restoration of the premises to their ordinary uses and objects. But nothing herein or elsewhere contained shall be held to authorize the allowance of any claim for destruction, damage, or depredation incident to a state of war.

SEC. —. That submission to the de facto authority of any State or part of a State proclaimed as in insurrection, while the authority and protection of the United States were subverted or in abeyance, or service in the enrolled militia of any State wherein service was compulsory after enrollment under laws enacted previous to the late rebellion, or service in person or by substitute in the forces of the so-called Confederate States, or of any insurrectionary State, or the holding of a local office, shall not be held by said commissioners to be conclusive proof of disloyalty in any case where there may be satisfactory evidence in other respects that the claimant was a loyal adherent of the cause and Government of the United States.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the said commissioners of claims, before reporting any claim examined by them to Congress, to certify the result of their examination of the claim, and of the evidence in support thereof, to the claimant, with notice of the time granted in which to rebut any presumptions or material evidence against the validity of the claim; and should the claimant fail to satisfactorily rebut such adverse presumptions or evidence within the time granted, the commissioners shall make a final report upon the claim, and shall not thereafter review said report or re-examine the claim: Provided, however, That the claimant shall be charged with costs for clerical work and postage in all such cases.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I repeat that the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina does not have the indorsement of the Committee on War Claims, and I hope it will be rejected.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina. I hope the gentleman will state what the vote upon it in the committee was.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] and then I shall call the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, to insert after the words "right of action" the words "on the part of aliens."

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not object to that amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I desire also to offer another amendment. The bill uses the language, "any court of the United States." That would include the Supreme Court. I suppose it was intended to mean the district or circuit courts, and I think it should be amended accordingly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I cannot yield for that amendment. It means either the district or circuit court or the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me to offer an amendment to the last section?

Mr. LAWRENCE. O, no; I cannot.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a moment. I desire to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will hear the question.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the gentleman allow me to test the sense of the House on striking out the section providing for two additional commissioners?

Mr. LAWRENCE. O, no; I cannot do that.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am afraid of this double-headed commission.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask the previous question now upon the bill and the four amendments which I have reported from the Committee on War Claims, and the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. COBB,] and the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) There are more amendments offered than can be pending under the rules except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I object to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments which have been offered will be considered as pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the reading of all the amendments in the order in which they have been offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments reported by the gentleman from Ohio from the committee were admitted by unanimous consent, and are pending.

Mr. LAWRENCE. They are in fact one amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina is also pending, and while these amendments are pending the Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to propose to perfect the text of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment cannot be in order when there are already more than three amendments pending.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope it will be agreed to without objection. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as a part of my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman cannot do that.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then I move the previous question on my amendments reported from the committee, and when those are disposed of other amendments can come in.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The first amendment reported from the committee was to insert after the word "court," in section 5, the words "before either House of Congress or any committee or officer thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The second amendment reported from the committee was to add to section 5 the following:

All offenses heretofore committed may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner as if this act had not passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The third amendment reported from the committee, as modified [in italics] by Mr. LAWRENCE at the suggestion of Mr. KASSON, was read, as follows:

SECTION —. That any court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of, and power to hear and determine, all claims and rights of action on the part of aliens against the United States, which shall be presented to the Secretary of State by petition, in the nature of a petition of right, and which shall be by him referred to said court, by the President of the United States, or by either House of Congress. An appeal shall be allowed from all judgments rendered as in other cases.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to have accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON?]

Mr. LAWRENCE. If any member of the Committee on War Claims objects to my accepting that amendment, of course I will not do so. All I designed was to provide for alien claimants, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want a separate vote on that amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the gentleman to allow my amendment to be read.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I cannot yield.

Mr. BECK. I move to lay the bill on the table, if I cannot have an opportunity to ask a question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will not object to a question.

Mr. BECK. The eighth section of this bill provides that no claims can be sent to the commissioners of claims by either House of Congress except upon the recommendation of a standing committee. I understand that to be in the bill as it now stands.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The bill provides that the commissioners of claims shall have the same jurisdiction they now have, and that in addition they shall have jurisdiction of such claims as either House of Congress may send to them.

Mr. BECK. The section to which I refer reads thus:

That the commissioners of claims shall receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of such claims growing out of the late war of the rebellion as may be referred to them by either House of Congress upon the recommendation of a standing committee, &c.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is in addition to their present jurisdiction.

Mr. BECK. Why should not Congress have the right to send these claims to these commissioners even if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] and five more like him, making a majority of the Committee on War Claims, should object to it? Why should six men have the right to prevent Congress referring anything to these commissioners?

Mr. LAWRENCE. When I first prepared that section I thought that either House should have the right to refer. But a majority of the committee thought it was best to have an examination by a committee and let the House act upon the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. BECK. That gives six men in the House a veto upon the action of the House.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. KASSON to the third amendment reported from the committee, to insert after the words "rights of action," where they first occur, the words "on the part of aliens."

The amendment of Mr. KASSON was not agreed to.

The question was upon the third amendment reported from the committee; and upon a division there were—ayes 50, noes 48; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE and Mr. COX were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 96, noes 51.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 18, noes 80; not one-fifth in the affirmative.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were 20 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The fourth amendment reported from the committee was read, as follows:

SEC. 10. That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint, in addition to the commissioners of claims now authorized, two commissioners of claims, who shall continue in office until the 10th day of March, 1877, with like powers and duties as the commissioners of claims now in office. Any two commissioners, with the approval of the president of the board of commissioners, shall be competent to make a report, and the president of the board shall assign to the commissioners the claims, to be by them examined, considered, and reported on.

SEC. 11. That the provisions of an act to prevent and punish frauds upon the Government of the United States, approved March 2, 1863, are extended and made applicable to a time of peace, and to persons who shall make, or cause to be made or presented to the commissioners of claims, or to either House of Congress, any claim upon or against the Government of the United States, or any Department or officer thereof, or any evidence in support thereof; and if any person shall fraudulently withdraw or abstract from the files of said commissioners, or from the files of either House of Congress, or of any committee thereof, any document or evidence, every person so offending shall suffer the penalties and be liable to punishment as in said act provided.

SEC. 12. Every petition presented to either House of Congress for the payment of claims may be verified by oath or affidavit.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 73, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE and Mr. THORNBURGH were appointed.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is it in order to call for a separate vote upon the separate clauses of this amendment? The first relates to the appointment of additional commissioners, and the others to the presentation of claims. There seems to be three separate sections in this proposed amendment taken from the draught of some other bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE. They are all one amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) The Chair thinks the amendment is capable of division, and that each part can stand by itself.

Mr. MAYNARD. Then I call for a separate vote on the first section of the proposed amendment, providing for the appointment of additional commissioners.

The question being taken on the first division (being the first section) of the proposed amendment, it was agreed to.

The question being then taken on the second division, (embracing the remaining sections of the amendment,) it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will next be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBB] which has already been read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina. I call the previous question on this amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I see that the first section of this amendment contains what we have been struggling against for so many years—a provision to pay rent for houses and grounds occupied by the Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish it understood that this amendment is not recommended by the Committee on War Claims.

Several members objected to debate.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I wish to state——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I object to debate.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This amendment contains three separate subjects. I call for a division of the question, so that the vote may be taken separately on the first section.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I wish to state that these three sections have not the sanction of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the first section of this amendment, if adopted, could stand alone. Therefore any gentleman is entitled to a separate vote upon it; and a division having been called for, the question will now be taken on the first section of the amendment which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That the term stores and supplies, as used in the section and act named, shall be so construed as to include buildings, other structures, and grounds used or occupied by the Army or Navy of the United States in the States proclaimed as in insurrection, for barracks, quarters, offices, hospitals, store-houses, wharves, depots, or other military or naval purposes, for periods not less than thirty consecutive days, and that the measure of compensation for such use or occupation shall be the fair rental value of the premises at the time and for the time of occupation or use, and such additional allowance as the said commissioners may in any special case deem fair and equitable for the restoration of the premises to their ordinary uses and objects. But nothing herein or elsewhere contained shall be held to authorize the allowance of any claim for destruction, damage, or depredation incident to a state of war.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being ayes 28, noes not counted.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 111, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barry, Beck, Bell, Berry, Blount, Bowen, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Crutchfield, Darrall, Davis, DeWitt, Durham, Eden, Freeman, Giddings, Glover, Hagans, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hays, Hereford, Herndon, Hodges, Houghton, Howe, Hunton, Kelley, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Lowndes, Lynch, Magee, Maynard, McLean, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Morey, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, O'Brien, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Perry, Randall, Read, Robbins, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Henry J. Scudder, Sener, Sheats, Sheldon, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Standiford, Starkweather, Stone, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Vance, Wallace, Walls, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, Whitthorne, Willie, Wolfe, Wood, and John D. Young—111.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Barber, Barnum, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Cannon, Cason, Amos Clark, jr., Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crocker, Danford, Dawes, Donnan, Dunnell, Eames, Eldredge, Farwell, Field, Foster, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, Holman, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kellogg, Lamport, Lawrence, Loughridge, Martin, McCrary, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packer, Parsons, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Isaac W. Scudder, Shanks, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stanard, Storm, Strait, Strawbridge, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—111.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Averill, Bland, Bright, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clymer, Crooke, Crounse, Curtis, Dobbins, Duell, Elliott, Fort, Frye, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hathorn, Havens, John W. Hazelton, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hynes, Jewett, Killinger, Lawson, Lowe, Luttrell, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, McJunkin, McKee, Myers, Negley, Packard, Page, Hosea W. Parker, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, William R. Roberts, Ross, Scofield, Sessions, Sherwood, Sloan, Smart, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, Snyder, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Swann, Waddell, Waldron, Wilber, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—67.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 111 and the nays 111. The amendment is not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. My colleague, Mr. PACKARD, is necessarily absent from the House, and will not be present during the remainder of the day.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SHERWOOD, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. ARCHER. My colleague, Mr. SWANN, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. BARRY. My colleague, General MCKEE, is absent on account of sickness in his family. If here he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania vote on the prevailing side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The prevailing side is the negative. The gentleman from Pennsylvania voted in the affirmative. He is not therefore entitled to move to reconsider. The question now recurs on the remaining sections of this amendment, which, unless some gentleman demands a separate vote, will be considered as one proposition.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina. I ask for a separate vote on each of the two remaining sections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division being demanded, the Clerk will read the section of the amendment upon which the vote is next to be taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That submission to the de facto authority of any State or part of a State proclaimed as in insurrection, while the authority and protection of the United States were subverted or in abeyance, or service in the enrolled militia of any State wherein service was compulsory after enrollment under laws enacted previous to the late rebellion, or service in person or by substitute in the forces of the so-called Confederate States, or of any insurrectionary State, or the holding of a local civil office, shall not be held by said commissioners to be conclusive proof of disloyalty in any case where there may be satisfactory evidence in other respects that the claimant was a loyal adherent of the cause and Government of the United States.

The second division of the amendment was not agreed to, there being—ayes 64, noes 72.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the third division of the amendment; which was read, as follows:

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the said commissioners of claims, before reporting any claim examined by them to Congress, to certify the result of their examination of the claim, and of the evidence in support thereof, to the claimant, with notice of the time granted in which to rebut any presumptions or material evidence against the validity of the claim; and should the claimant fail to satisfactorily rebut such adverse presumptions or evidence within the time granted, the commissioners shall make a final report upon the claim, and shall not thereafter review said report or re-examine the claim: Provided, however, That the claimant shall be charged with costs for clerical work and postage in all such cases.

The question being taken, the third division of the amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes 63, noes 79.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to offer an amendment in that additional section relating to the claims of aliens. It is to insert after the word "claims" where it first occurs the words "of aliens," and after the word "and" to insert "their," so it will read "hear and determine all claims of aliens and their rights of action." And I wish to make an explanation. I am satisfied if the House understand the point which is to be provided for in this section there can be no objection to it. It is this. The section as adopted is divided into two clauses. The first clause says: "Any court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of and power to hear and determine all claims and rights of action against the United States which shall be presented to the Secretary of State by petition." Thus you observe all claims of everybody may go to the Secretary of State, then to be by him referred at his discretion to any court of the United States. That is the first clause.

The second clause reads that all claims and rights of action which shall be referred to said court by the President of the United States, or by either House of Congress, may be referred to any of these courts. Now, it is evident in the first clause you only intend claims of aliens should go to the Secretary of State to be by him referred, and that evidently being the object of the section, I hope this will not be so left that petitions in all cases may go to the Secretary of State and fill all his files, and then go to the other Departments or either House of Congress, which is not the intention of the bill. It is for that reason I offer the amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am satisfied with this amendment, and demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa think proper to confer upon aliens privileges withheld from our own people?

Mr. KASSON. Our own people can come to either House of Congress and have their claims referred.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. KASSON'S amendment was adopted.

The question recurred on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 50; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 40.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I ask for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late, as the bill has already been read.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 70.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 81, nays 133, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barnum, Barrere, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cannon, Cason, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Conger, Crutchfield, Dawes, Donnan, Eames, Farwell, Field, Foster, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Hancock, Harrison, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, John W. Hazelton, Hodges, Holman, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kelley, Lamison, Lofland, Magee, Maynard, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Merriam, Monroe, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Page, Pelham, Pendleton, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Ray, Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, Shanks, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Speer, Storm, Strait, Strawbridge, Taylor, Thornburgh, Todd, Tremain, Tyner, Waldron, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wheeler, George Willard, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodford—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Barry, Beck, Bell, Blount, Bowen, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Creamer, Crittenden, Crocker, Crossland, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Dobbins, Duell, Dunnell, Durham, Eldredge, Fort, Freeman, Giddings, Glover, Hagans, Harmer, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Havens, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hooper, Houghton, Howe, Hunton, Kasson, Kendall, Knapp, Lamar, Lansing, Lawrence, Leach, Lowndes, Marshall, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, McLean, McNulta, Mitchell, Moore, Morey, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Perry, Phillips, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Randall, Read, Richmond, Robbins, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, Milton Sayler, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sheats, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloss, Small, George L. Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Snyder, Southard, Sprague, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, Stone, Stowell, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Townsend, Vance, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, and John D. Young—133.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Averill, Bass, Berry, Bland, Bright, Bundy, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Cox, Crooke, Crounse, DeWitt, Eden, Elliott, Frye, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Herndon, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hubbell, Hynes, Jewett, Kellogg, Killinger, Lamport, Lawson, Lewis, Loughridge, Lowe, Luttrell, Lynch, Martin, McJunkin, McKee, Milliken, Mills, Myers, Negley, Nesmith, Orr, Packard, Packer, Hosea W. Parker, Phelps, Poland, Potter, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, William R. Roberts, Ross, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, Sherwood, Sloan, Smart, Stephens, St. John, Swann, Waddell, Whiteley, Wilber, Willie, Wilshire, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Pierce M. B. Young—75.

During the roll-call,

Mr. FOSTER stated that his colleague, Mr. SHERWOOD, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. BARRY stated that his colleague, Mr. MCKEE, was absent on account of sickness in his family.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not in order to move to send this bill, with or without instructions, to the Committee on War Claims?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is not the previous question pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question exhausted itself on the third reading of this bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims, together with the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. COBB,] with instructions to report back with the bill the first section embraced in that amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If I should move to lay this motion on the table would that carry the bill with it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am asked to modify my motion by making it a clean motion without instructions. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims, and on that I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I demand the yeas and nays on the question of recommittal. If it is recommitted that defeats the bill for this session. Congress adjourns in less than three weeks. The committee will get no opportunity to report it back this session.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 13, not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion of Mr. MAYNARD was agreed to; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask that the bill as ordered to be engrossed, with the various amendments, be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RECIPROCITY WITH THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to submit for present consideration the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas by section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States it is provided that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives;" and by section 8 of said article it is further provided that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises," and "to regulate commerce with foreign nations:" Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to inform this House whether the executive department of the Government is at this time engaged in considering the terms of a treaty by which commerce between the United States and the British provinces of North America is to be regulated and by which Congress will be deprived of its constitutional right to control these important subjects thus specifically confided to it by the express terms of the Constitution.

Mr. KASSON. Does this resolution come from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. WOOD. It has never been before that committee.

Mr. KELLEY. I made no suggestion of that kind.

Mr. COX. It is a reflection on the Administration. I would like to amend the resolution so as to encourage the Administration in the matter of reciprocity with Canada.

The SPEAKER. The resolution requires unanimous consent. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. COX. I do.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3421) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1875;

A bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds;

A bill (H. R. No. 3574) explanatory of the act of June 30, 1864;

A bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 3265) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3095) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty sitpulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it be printed with the Senate amendments numbered.

The motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 3095) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it be printed with the Senate amendments numbered.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS T. CRITTENDEN.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I desire to move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1297) for the relief of Thomas T. Crittenden, of Missouri.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

After "cents," in line 6, insert "or such part of said amount as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue believes to be just and proper."

At the end of line 18 add these words: "Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is satisfied due diligence was used by Crittenden and the relief ought to be granted."

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MOUTH OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3342) for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River was recommitted to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose to discuss the bill on the motion to reconsider?

Mr. HURLBUT. I do not. I ask that the motion to reconsider shall be considered adopted, and that the bill shall then be brought before the House for consideration.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted, it was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion to recommit; and it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now before the House, and the question is, Will the House order it to be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. HURLBUT. A majority of the Committee on Railways and Canals, who have had this matter in charge, have directed me to report a substitute for the original bill reported by the committee. The minority of the committee also desire to report a substitute containing certain propositions offered by the gentleman from Louisiana. [Mr. SHELDON,] and embodying another plan, known as the canal plan, I request that the House will consider both the substitutes reported by the majority and the minority as having been twice read, in order that the discussion may proceed on the substitutes, instead of the original bill referred to the committee.

Mr. McCRARY. I wish, before the debate proceeds, to offer on behalf of the minority of the committee a substitute for the bill reported by the majority. I suppose the gentleman from Louisiana will withdraw his original substitute.

Mr. SHELDON. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the report of the committee is to strike out all that was recommitted to it, and insert what is printed in italics in the bill reported by them.

Mr. McCRARY. That is the report of the majority of the committee. The minority of the committee propose to substitute what I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to inquire at what time the gentleman from Illinois intends to move the previous question?

Mr. HURLBUT. I propose to consult the House on that question.

Mr. COBURN. The gentleman says he intends to consult the House; I want to know in what manner?

Mr. SPEER. And at what time?

Mr. HURLBUT. Now. These bills are very important, and I understand that there are a good many gentleman who desire to speak upon one side or the other on the two propositions. I am anxious that as large an opportunity for discussion shall be allowed as the House thinks proper to give. I think that if we can have a session to-night, when some portion of the debate can take place, and the entire day to-morrow, we can call the previous question on the passage of the bill at four o'clock to-morrow afternoon. I do not believe that to allow any shorter time than that would be doing justice to the number of gentlemen who desire to speak on this question. I will ask first that a session be held this evening for debate upon this bill, no business whatever to be transacted.

There was no objection, and the order for an evening session was made.

Mr. HURLBUT. I further ask that the House will postpone all other matters that may be in the way, so as to give us to-morrow from the reading of the Journal until four o'clock for the discussion of this great question.

The SPEAKER. Under a suspension of the rules an order was passed entitling the Committee on Commerce to two hours after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

Mr. HURLBUT. I presume that committee will be willing to take another day, so as not to break into the discussion of this question.

Mr. SAWYER. I am afraid that if we do that we shall lose our place.

Mr. SPEER. These bills involve about $10,000,000. No more important question can come before the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. They involve more than that; they involve the commerce of half the continent.

Mr. SPEER. But they involve an expenditure of $10,000,000.

Mr. SAWYER. If the Committee on Commerce can have two hours on Saturday after the reading of the Journal, to the exclusion of all other orders, I shall be satisfied and will not object to the postponement of their business to-morrow.

Mr. MOREY. I suggest that the morning hour be reserved for the purpose of considering the bill in relation to the Mississippi levees.

The SPEAKER. If that arrangement can be made the Chair thinks it will accommodate all these various questions.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest that the Committee on Commerce be allowed two hours for the consideration of their reports in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that.

Mr. SENER. That arrangement applies to Saturday only.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to ask whether reports from the Committee on Elections would not supersede the order in reference to the bills relating to the mouth of the Mississippi?

The SPEAKER. Not except by the vote of a majority of the House.

Mr. SPEER. I understand that to-morrow or the next day a report is to be made from the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. It will be for a majority of the House to determine the order of business.

Mr. SENER. I understand that this arrangement applies to Saturday only.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the proposition, which is somewhat complicated. The gentleman from Illinois desires that to-morrow may be assigned for the consideration and discussion of this bill, and the Committee on Commerce indicate their willingness to yield the two hours to which they are entitled to-morrow if they can have the same amount of time on Saturday morning.

Mr. CONGER. After the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. After the reading of the Journal and on the same conditions. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOREY] desires that one hour after the reading of the Journal may be devoted to the consideration of the bill in relation to the Mississippi levees.

Mr. CONGER. We have no objection to allowing a morning hour on Saturday.

Mr. SAWYER. I do not object to that.

Mr. DAWES. Is that to be considered as the regular call of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It will be a part of the call, and dispose of the committee. The Chair will state the full effect of the proposed arrangement. Ordinarily after a morning hour a motion to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table would be in order. Under the circumstances, however, a motion for that purpose would not be entertained by the Chair, because the understanding would be that this arrangement is made by unanimous consent to the exclusion of all other orders.

Mr. RANDALL. Does that give the Committee on Commerce any additional right?

The SPEAKER. Not at all; they will have the same right on Saturday that has already been accorded them for to-morrow.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I would suggest that Friday be taken for this bill instead of to-morrow.

Mr. RUSK. I object to giving up private-bill day.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. BUTLER] proposes to bring up to-morrow and endeavor to complete the consideration of the Geneva award bill. I hope, therefore, these arrangements for the different committees may be made for Friday and Saturday. There is time enough for them in those two days and for the consideration of private bills. A matter that has waited so long as the Geneva award bill, if it can be disposed of in one day, it seems to me ought to be given that day.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to say in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Elections——

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would like to inquire who constituted the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] the mouth-piece of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The chairman of that committee is now absent; but I had a conversation with him just before he left.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It seems to me if the gentleman will confine himself to his own committee he will have all he can attend to.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I shall take no lessons from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] as to what I shall confine myself to. I am interested in the Geneva award, as my constituents are.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I know the chairman does not propose to dispose of that bill to-morrow.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I know that he does, for he told me so within half an hour.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I know that the rest of the committee do not.

Mr. SPEER. There is before the Committee on Elections a contested-election case from the State of Louisiana. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] to state to the House the intention of the committee in regard to that case.

Mr. LAMAR. I hope no special order will be made for Friday. The Louisiana contested-election case we had expected to call up to-morrow morning. We think we can get through with it in one day. But there is already a special order for to-morrow.

Mr. PACKER. In behalf of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads I desire to say that while we do not wish to antagonize any arrangement that gentlemen desire to make for to-morrow, we must insist upon Saturday for the business of our committee.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads are entitled to Saturday by order of the House.

Mr. SAWYER. If the Committee on Commerce is not to have any portion of Saturday, then we must insist upon our right to two hours to-morrow.

Mr. LAMAR. I will thank the Chair to state the order of business for to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] has the floor now upon the bill in regard to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi. That bill will necessarily lose two hours of to-morrow, if it goes over as unfinished business, by reason of the right of the Committee on Commerce to that amount of time to-morrow after the reading of the Journal. Immediately after the business of the Committee on Commerce shall have been disposed of, this bill would resume its place. If the Committee on Elections desire to submit a report upon any case before them, it would be for a majority of the House to determine whether they would then consider that report.

The business of the week is disposed of as follows: the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] has the floor now upon the bill in relation to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi. That bill, if it shall occupy the remainder of this day without being disposed of, will go over until to-morrow as unfinished business. To-morrow morning it would have to be laid aside for two hours, because the Committee on Commerce is entitled to that time under a suspension of the rules. The gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR,] from the Committee on Elections, as the Chair understands, desires at the end of that two hours to call up the contested-election case from Louisiana. A majority of the House can set aside this bill for the purpose of considering that case; it would be for a majority to determine that question. On Friday there is no assignment except that under the rules, it being objection day for the Private Calendar, the first Friday of the month. Saturday, after one hour from the reading of the Journal, has been given to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads.

Mr. McCRARY. I understood that there was no objection to changing the order in relation to the Committee on Commerce from to-morrow to Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads [Mr. PACKER] declines to give up his time on Saturday.

Mr. SPEER. Should the House to-morrow morning determine to take up the contested-election case first, and we should occupy the entire day and go over until Saturday, when would this Mississippi jetty bill come up again?

The SPEAKER. On Tuesday next.

Mr. SPEER. I understand there is already a special order set for Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. That is so; Tuesday has been given to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] proceed now with this bill, and take his chance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that no arrangement that could now be agreed upon would work more smoothly than that suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. To-night's session I do not object to, of course.

The SPEAKER. The session of to-night, as the Chair understood, was ordered for debate only, upon this bill.

Mr. MOREY. As there is nothing in this arrangement that will conflict with what I am about to propose, I ask unanimous consent that one hour on Saturday next, before the business on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads shall come up, be assigned to the Committee on the Mississippi Levees. That time has not been assigned in any way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the hour immediately after the reading of the Journal next Saturday may be assigned to the Committee on the Mississippi Levees to conclude their reports.

Mr. PACKER. I shall have no objection to that if all the remainder of the day is awarded to us.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that arrangement, and it is so ordered.

ARKANSAS ELECTION CONTEST—GUNTER VS. WILSHIRE.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio, from the Committee on Elections, presented a report on the contested-election case from the third district of Arkansas.

The resolutions reported by the committee were as follows:

Resolved, That W. W. Wilshire was not elected and is not entitled to a seat as Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the third district of the State of Arkansas.

Resolved, That Thomas M. Gunter was elected and is entitled to a seat in the Forty-third Congress from the third district of Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. I do not ask action on this report now, but shall call it up hereafter. I move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF REPRESENTATIVES IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. LAMAR, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Elections, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3332) to fix the time for the election of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress from the State of Mississippi.

The bill, which was read, provides that the election for Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress, from the State of Mississippi, shall be holden on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1875, anything in the constitution or laws of said State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina. Would it be in order to move to amend the bill by inserting North Carolina?

Mr. LAMAR. I must decline to yield for any amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAMAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOUISIANA ELECTION CONTEST—SHERIDAN VS. PINCHBACK.

The SPEAKER. The Chair gives notice that to-morrow, after the reports of the Committee on Commerce, he will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] from the Committee on Elections. It will be for the House to determine whether the question of privilege shall proceed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The House resumed the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3342) for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River was recommitted to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. SHELDON. I desire to offer as a substitute the bill which I have introduced on this subject. I ask that it may be considered as pending.

Mr. HURLBUT. I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker, the question of the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, which was submitted early in the session to the Committee on Railways and Canals, has been considered by that committee with all the care and attention they have been able to give to it. They have endeavored to get all possible information concerning the various projects presented to them. They have heard testimony wherever any one desired to submit it. Two conflicting systems have been pending before that committee. In one of these projects—that which has been reported by the majority of the committee—a gentleman living in the city of Saint Louis well known to the scientific and mechanical world as a successful inventor and a successful carrier-out of great works, proposes to the Government of the United States to take upon himself the responsibility of giving an uninterrupted, open river mouth by means of jetties or embankments extending the natural banks of the river into the deep water of the Gulf. This proposition, modified by the committee, is submitted in the bill, printer's number 3530, being printed as a substitute. The committee have endeavored so to guard this proposition that it shall be impossible for any one who may undertake this work to receive from the Government any pay until an actual success has been accomplished. When the bill comes to be read gentlemen will see the care which the committee has taken in guarding this important subject.

Upon the other side propositions have been presented here for the construction, either under the Engineer Corps of the United States or by private contract, of a canal with locks leading from the Mississippi River, below Fort Saint Philip, into the pass known as "Isle au Breton" pass, on the east side of the delta of the Mississippi. The importance of this inquiry as well as our own position as Representatives, all of us, whether living in the Mississippi Valley or elsewhere, recognizing the national importance of this great artery of commerce, induced us to give to this question the greatest possible consideration.

I will state as briefly as I can the two plans before the House as I understand them. One is to use the existing forces of nature, to work in harmony with those great forces, to assist the river in forming below the delta out into the deep waters of the Gulf its natural banks by artificial aid; to condense and gather into solid column the waters of the great river, so that they will do their own work and scour out the obstructions which have accumulated into the bar; so that the united force of the water will clear its way along until it reaches that great depth of water which, as our Coast Survey shows, exists but a few miles outside of the present bar. All engineers, all sensible men, all men who know anything at all of the inconveniences of the best constructed canal with locks that the imagination of man can devise, recognize the fact that the uninterrupted and unobstructed navigation of the river by its own natural mouth with sufficient and permanent depths of water is in efficiency and usefulness infinitely superior to any possible substitute which man can devise.

Undoubtedly there are engineering questions mingled up in this matter. It unfortunately happens that the scientific mind of this country is not absolutely united on this question. It happens that a majority of the senior officers of our own Engineer Corps, represented by the Chief of Engineers, are of opinion that although jetties are practicable, and although they will by natural causes deepen the water of the river, yet so great is the volume of sediment which is brought down by that river, that from these same natural causes the bar will simply advance seaward; and they claim there will be a necessity for extending the jetties year by year.

But, sir, all of our military engineers are by no means unanimous on this point. The clearest head, the most educated brain, the oldest of the active officers of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, (I refer to General Barnard,) indorses promptly, thoroughly, and effectually the advantage and certainty of the results of the system which is presented by the report of the majority of the committee.

I do not suppose this House cares or proposes to enter into questions of engineering skill, but I do say this House, or any other body of plain, sensible men has the right to pass judgment upon a practical, clear plan, and that beyond all question it is not right to have the Congress of the United States vote for the construction of a canal in the territory indicated by this bill until experiment, not theory, has proved the problem of an open river cannot be fully carried out. I affirm to this House, if Mr. Eads shall succeed in demonstrating by the works he will attempt there that it is impossible, that alone will be worth millions of dollars to this country. We thought it was not our duty to do anything more than to give this practical, scientific man an opportunity of testing by practice a thing in which he has the most abounding faith, and in which he is backed by two-thirds of the engineering talent of the country.

The bill then provides that Mr. Eads and his associates may be authorized to improve one of the passes of the Mississippi River by jetties or other works at his own expense. It also provides he shall not receive a dollar of money until he shall have succeeded in demonstrating that his plan is a success.

He is required by the bill to obtain twenty-two feet of water, and to maintain it by the construction he puts there for twelve months, unbroken and continuously, before he can touch a dollar of the public money. The bill as reported by the committee provides that he shall obtain by these jetties of his a depth of twenty-two feet of water, and shall maintain the same without interruption for twelve months, and in that case he shall be entitled to receive from the United States $2,000,000. I am authorized, however, by Mr. Eads to say, and I shall move the amendment when the time comes, with the permission of the House, he is willing, in order to show the completeness of his good faith in the matter, that this amount of $2,000,000 may be reduced to $1,000,000, and that $1,000,000 taken from his first payment shall be applied upon the last which is provided for in the bill.

The bill further provides, after having obtained twenty-two feet of water and maintained it for twelve months, if he shall obtain an additional depth of two feet and maintain the same he shall be entitled to an additional compensation of $1,000,000 and so on, giving $1,000,000 for every two feet of permanent depth he obtains at the river's mouth until the sum of $5,000,000 shall have been paid to him, which will bring it to a depth of twenty-eight feet of water.

To gentlemen who know anything about the navigation of the Mississippi River, either by their personal experience or by information from the newspapers or from scientific sources, it is useless for me to say more than this: that the present bar of that river is more an obstruction to the commerce of the whole Mississippi Valley than any other one thing which exists. Year after year Congress has been endeavoring to scratch this bar, dragging harrows over it, but the tide of the great river and the tide of the great ocean soon closes up the puny work of our engineers. No man who imports anything into the city of New Orleans has any assurance what depth of water his vessel will have when it comes to port. It may be eighteen feet when the vessel starts from Europe and when she comes into port it may be only fourteen feet. It is changing, fluctuating, uncertain, and nothing in the world so interferes with the commerce of a great city like that as this uncertainty as to the time and mode of entrance to the river by which the city is reached.

After the sum of $5,000,000 shall have been paid, and every installment is dependent on the continued success of the work, upon maintenance of every foot obtained as a permanent channel—after that is done, then comes in the other provision of the bill which allows him other sums of money for the purpose of maintaining and perfecting these works.

Mr. SPEER. Do not the engineers of the United States estimate the actual cost of these jetties will be less than five millions, and when he gets this sum will he not be paid for the cost of and a fair profit on the work done?

Mr. HURLBUT. They estimate it will require seven millions altogether.

Mr. SPEER. As the bill appropriates ten millions and the work will cost five, then the other five millions he will get as a gratuity.

Mr. HURLBUT. No; but for keeping up and maintaining the work.

Mr. SPEER. What risk is there when the Government pays the cost of the jetties?

Mr. HURLBUT. The risk of failure, which some of the engineers say is certain.

Mr. SPEER. But he has his money, the cost of the work and a fair profit on it.

Mr. HURLBUT. If by this process a depth of water over twenty-two feet can be secured at the mouth of the Mississippi River for five years, the man who does it, whoever he is, and whatever way it is done, is entitled to far more than this bill gives.

This is an enterprise, then, of private capital, seeking of course compensation, for no man supposes that capital goes into this kind of business without extra compensation. Here is a man who comes forward and undertakes to do a thing which some engineers say that it is impossible to do, and that it will be demonstrated in the first twelve months that it cannot succeed. He stakes on it his reputation, his money, and the money of his friends. And of course he asks for compensation. And speaking on behalf of the people of the Mississippi Valley, and I believe I can say on behalf of the people of the whole nation, who have a regard to the vast interests that are involved there, I say that no sum of money that could reasonably be asked is too much to secure such a result.

On the other side of this proposition the minority of the committee have reported in favor of a canal. I shall leave my colleague on the committee who represents the minority to explain for himself and for those whom he represents what the peculiar virtues of the canal are. But I submit to any gentlemen from New York or from Boston how they would like to have their port locked so that vessels could only pass in and out through the slow process of lockage; and whether, looking at their own great commercial interests, they would be willing to inflict upon those whose interests are connected with the mouth of the Mississippi River so slow, so insecure, so unsatisfactory a means of communicating with the great ocean, the common highway of commerce, as is provided by a canal, unless it turns out as a matter of fact—not of opinion, but of experiment and fact—that no other thing can be devised which is better.

Mr. COBURN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment for a question?

Mr. HURLBUT. Certainly.

Mr. COBURN. I would like to have the gentleman state what proportion of the commerce that comes in and goes out of the Mississippi River will require the depth of water that is proposed either by the jetties or the canal, and what proportion can go out without the clearance of the jetties or the construction of the canal. Are there any estimates of that kind?

Mr. HURLBUT. There is an average of sixteen feet of water on the most passable bar.

Mr. COBURN. Will the gentleman allow me a word further? He talked about the blocking up of the commerce of New York and Boston. I want to know what proportion will be locked up and compelled to go through this canal?

Mr. HURLBUT. All of it that draws over sixteen feet of water.

Mr. COBURN. What proportion is that?

Mr. HURLBUT. The commerce of the city of New Orleans, as nobody knows better than my friend from Indiana, has fallen off vastly, and has fallen off by reason of this great hinderance at the bar. And one of the objects which I, living afar off from that great State, have is to restore this discrowned queen of the delta to something like her former situation. I want to have depth of water enough, either by the canal, if that is the way of doing it, or by a natural mouth, which I think is far the better plan, to allow any sea-going vessel, such as the ships that come into New York, or Boston, or Portland, or any other of the great ports of this country, come without obstruction and without hinderance into the city of New Orleans, and restore to her if you can the commerce which her situation and her natural advantages demand that she should have, and of which she has been deprived. If that is done, it is impossible for any man to tell what the growth of our commerce will be.

My object has been merely to explain briefly the tenor and purpose of these several measures, and I shall, after hearing other gentlemen who may desire to speak on this question, reserve to myself the opportunity, when the previous question shall have been ordered, of answering whatever arguments may have been brought forward; and I now yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY,] who represents the other side.

But before sitting down, I find that my friend from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] thinks that I did not understand the question he addressed to me, and from the explanation he makes to me I presume that I did not. His question was in regard to the amount of commerce. There is properly speaking no sea-going commerce which comes to the city of New Orleans now. We want at all events to secure to that city twenty-six feet of water, for the purpose of accommodating the produce which we hope will float down the Mississippi River, and take that among other routes to the great marts of the world, the present construction of sea-going vessels requiring at least that depth of water to secure the proper efficiency and a reasonable cheapness of sea transportation.

Mr. McCRARY. Mr. Speaker, the importance of this subject justifies me, I think, in asking of every member of this House its careful consideration. There are two questions to be settled: First, is the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River of sufficient national importance to justify Congress in entering upon the work at this time? And second, if that question be answered in the affirmative, shall this improvement be made by means of a ship-canal, as recommended by the Engineer Department of the Government, or shall we do it by a contract with Captain Eads for the construction of jetties?

Upon the first question, Mr. Speaker, I shall have but little to say; because upon that question there is no difference of opinion among the members of the committee, and I apprehend there cannot be much difference of opinion among the members of the House. The vast and rapidly increasing importance of the commerce of the Mississippi Valley is so well known, so well understood, that nothing I could say could add at all to the information which every gentleman already has upon that subject. I shall take leave, however, to print with my remarks a table of statistics which will show at a glance something of the vastness and importance of those great States which border upon the Mississippi River and its two great tributaries.

From these statistics it will be seen that within the fourteen States bordering upon these rivers will be found almost half the population of the Union; that their increase of population between the years 1860 and 1870 was about 49 per cent.; that they contain nearly six hundred million acres of land; that only about one acre in five is improved; so that the development of this vast region has only been commenced. These tables show also that these States, in 1870, produced more than a thousand million bushels of grain, besides vast quantities of other produce. They embrace only a part of this great valley, since they take no note of the Territories bordering on the Upper Mississippi and the Upper Missouri, or of the other States of the Union which are largely, if not so directly, interested in the commerce of our great river.

Here, Mr. Speaker, we have a great natural water-way, furnishing a line of navigation more than two thousand miles in length, through the heart of the richest agricultural region on the globe, and in a great measure blockaded at its mouth. When this blockade is removed and the few other obstructions to navigation cleared out, we shall have opened a transportation route to the sea which cannot be monopolized by any corporation, which can and will carry vastly cheaper than the railroads now do, and which will either carry our vast products, or by competition bring down railroad charges. Hence I say that the importance of the improvement in question must be conceded by every one.

Let us, then, come at once to the consideration of the principal matter of discussion, namely, whether we shall adopt the recommendation of the Engineer Department and construct a ship-canal, or make a contract as proposed with Captain Eads. As to the practicability of the ship-canal there is no difference of opinion. Every one of the many Government engineers who has ever examined the subject concurs in the opinion that it is entirely practicable. It is recommended, as I have already said, by that department of the Government in which we all have so much confidence, and I think justly, the Engineer Department, with great unanimity. A board of engineers, consisting of seven of the ablest perhaps in the whole corps, were detailed to make examinations and investigations and report their conclusions upon these two propositions. Six of the seven reported that the canal is entirely practicable and that the jetty system must in the end prove a failure.

One of the seven expresses his opinion, not as my colleague from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] says that the jetties will undoubtedly succeed, but that there ought to be further inquiry and investigation as to the practicability of securing an open river mouth before resorting to the canal. This dissenting member of the board, General Barnard, very guardedly says:

I feel that I am justified in recommending it (the jetty system) as probably furnishing the most speedy attainment of a deep-water channel, and one which will have some features of permanence.

Now, sir, I do not question that it would be better to have an open river mouth, if that could be accomplished. It would certainly be better than an artificial outlet for the river. But I do not conceive that we ought to make this contract with Captain Eads, even if it is deemed necessary to try the experiment of improving the river by means of jetties.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. McCRARY. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Did not Mr. Fontaine, an eminent engineer, say, in an argument which he made in a lecture delivered here and which was printed and laid upon our tables, that a ship-canal was utterly impracticable, and that the system of jetties was the only means by which a permanent outlet from the river could be secured.

Mr. McCRARY. I cannot say what Professor Fontaine may have said. I did not hear his lecture or read it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. He made a very able argument to show the impracticability of a ship-canal.

Mr. McCRARY. I do not doubt it. I said the engineers employed by the Government, who have reported on the subject from time to time—and they are very numerous and embrace many eminent men in that profession—are unanimous in reporting that a ship-canal is entirely practicable. If this gentleman, brought here from the city of New Orleans to advocate Mr. Eads's proposition, gave a different opinion, it is only what my friend from Ohio and myself sometimes do when advocating the cause of a client.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will not the mouth of the canal encounter the same difficulty as the mouth of the river does?

Mr. McCRARY. Not by any manner of means, because the canal is forty miles above the mouth of the river, and is entirely exempt from all the dangers which will beset any attempt to improve the mouth of the river. But I shall come to these points, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed.

I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that if it is the opinion of this House that the experiment of improving the mouth of the river by means of jetties ought to be tried, it does not comport well with the dignity of the American Congress to make such a contract as is proposed in this bill. If we are to try the experiment, let it be tried by the nation and at the nation's expense. Let us not propose to any citizen that he shall try it at his own risk, and that if he succeeds we will pay him three or four times as much as it is worth, and that if he fails we will pay him nothing. That is too much like the Sanborn contract business. If this is a thing that ought to be tried by the United States, we are able to try it at our own expense, by our own agents, and under the control and direction of our own engineers.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] says that this experiment is to be tried at the risk of this individual and that the Government takes no risk whatever. I do not agree to that statement. I do not believe that Captain Eads takes the risk if this bill shall pass, and I think I can show the House that such is not the case. But before I pass to that point let me ask this question: Is there any gentleman upon this floor who desires to make a contract of this kind with any citizen of the United States at the risk of that citizen? Suppose that Captain Eads, under the invitation of a bill like this, should engage in the effort to improve the mouth of the river by means of jetties, and should expend two or three or four million dollars and should fail in the effort, and then come here to Congress five or ten years hence and tell us that we thought enough of this proposition to authorize this contract to be made with him; that it was a great question in which the country was interested, and that he has expended his fortune and that of his friends in solving the problem for the Government of the United States, does anybody believe that he would not be remunerated or indemnified by an appropriation from the Treasury? Why, sir, I find that the passage of this bill is urged at the other end of the Capitol upon the ground that it will be worth millions to the Government to have Captain Eads try the experiment, even if his failure shall demonstrate the worthlessness of his jetties. The Senate report upon this bill says:

An open river mouth is the first desideratum. If a private individual shall demonstrate that it cannot be made, that demonstration is worth millions to the Government, leading with entire certainty to the adoption finally of the Fort Saint Philip Canal as the only alternative for the outlet which is to work such incalculable benefit in the future.

I have no doubt, even if Captain Eads should attempt this work under such a bill as is proposed, and should expend his money on it and should fail, that upon this plea he would be indemnified.

But I say again that this is not a subject to be dealt with in this way. If it is the judgment of the House that this experiment should be tried, let it be tried under an act of Congress through our own engineers and at as little expense as may be; but let us pay for it whatever it is reasonably worth. My friend from Illinois says that Mr. Eads is to have a reasonable profit in case of success. I do not see how he arrives at that conclusion. It strikes me, from all the information that I can get, that if this is a correct system for the improvement of the mouth of the river, it can be carried out for vastly less money than we are proposing to pay to Captain Eads. General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, in a letter which has been printed and which I suppose most gentlemen have seen, states that an estimate has been made of the cost of jetties, and that it has been found that if the Southwest Pass is selected for the experiment, where the jetties must be about five miles in length, and if they are built down to a solid foundation, the cost of them will be $7,000,000; but that if the recommendation of General Barnard is taken, and they are not put down so deep as they ought to be for entire permanency, the cost will be $4,000,000.

This, mark you, Mr. Speaker, is at the Southwest Pass where the jetties must be about five miles long. But General Barnard strongly recommends the South Pass, where the jetties are only two and a half miles long, and no doubt Captain Eads will select the South Pass, although, perhaps, for a purpose he has directed our attention to the Southwest Pass.

Mr. STONE. I would ask the gentleman what the revisory board say would be the cost of the jetties?

Mr. McCRARY. I understand the gentleman's point and I will answer it. The revisory board made an estimate of the cost of these jetties on the theory that they must be extended every year, and made it very large, as it certainly would be if that had to be done. Captain Eads says that they need not be extended, and General Humphreys makes an estimate on the assumption that it will not be necessary to extend the jetties. He says:

It is perceived, then, that taking the most expensive pass as an example, the bill proposes to pay Mr. Eads in the one case $3,000,000 more than the estimate and in the other $6,000,000 more than the estimate.

I will remark that that is $1,000,000 too small, because since that letter was written by General Humphreys the bill has been so changed as to add $1,000,000 to the amount to be paid to Captain Eads, making the amount $11,000,000 instead of $10,000,000.

So that it is proposed to pay $4,000,000 more than the estimate, if the jetties are put down to a solid foundation, and $7,000,000 more than the estimate if they are built as General Barnard recommends, and if they are built at the longest pass. But if they are built at the shortest pass, of course they can be built for about one-half of what it would cost to build them at the Southwest Pass. Gentlemen will see what enormous profit there will be in a contract of this kind if Captain Eads is right in his theory that he can succeed by this means. If constructed at the shortest pass and built as recommended by General Barnard, and if, as Captain Eads contends, they will not have to be annually extended, he would receive under this bill about $9,000,000 over and above the estimated cost.

So far as the mode of construction is concerned there is nothing in the bill on that subject. Captain Eads may adopt the very cheapest or he may resort to the most expensive means. There is no provision in the bill regarding the manner of the construction of these jetties. He is not under the control of any engineer of the Government. He may select his own material and take either one of these passes and improve it as he pleases. There is nothing in the bill to prevent him from resorting to dredging as well as to his jetties; and I apprehend he will resort to that. But I will come to that again in a moment.

Now, I say that Captain Eads does not take the entire risk. There are a number of engineering problems to be settled by this experiment. One is, will the jetties stand the effect of one of those great storms that periodically visit that country, and which are sometimes called cyclones when they are very severe? Another question is whether the jetties will stand in the kind of soil so recently deposited, and so soft and uncertain as is the soil at the mouth of the river. It is insisted by able engineers that they will gradually settle and in a few years sink to the level of the original bank. Another question is, whether the mud-lumps which are continually upheaving in that region, and which according to the opinions of some engineers have a lifting power sufficient to break these jetties in pieces, however solidly they may be built, will not sooner or later destroy the jetties. And another and very important question, as I shall show presently, is whether even if the bar is moved from the place where it now is by means of these jetties, it will not in the course of a few years reform a little farther out in the Gulf, and become as much of an obstruction as ever.

No man can say that a single one of these engineering problems can or will be solved before Captain Eads will draw a large part of the money to which he will be entitled under this bill. What security have we? He is to secure and maintain for twelve months a depth of twenty-two feet of water. As I observed a while ago, in order to secure that depth of twenty-two feet he may resort to dredging in connection with his jetties, because there is nothing in the bill to prevent his doing so. We know that Captain Howell, by means of the appliances he already has at the mouth of the Mississippi River, has secured a depth of twenty feet at several times. But if there is any efficacy in these jetties when they are used in connection with the dredging process, especially if improved methods are adopted, there is no reason to doubt that a depth of twenty-two feet of water may be obtained and maintained for twelve months, at the end of which time Captain Eads would receive, according to this bill, his first $2,000,000 or $1,000,000, as I believe it is proposed to amend it.

There is but one question upon which Captain Eads takes the risk; that is the question whether he can obtain a depth of twenty-two feet of water and maintain it for twelve months. Every other problem that is involved in the controversy is left unsettled; and I repeat that no man can say that they will be determined and settled within twelve months; no man can say that we may not expend $5,000,000 under the Eads bill, and yet find ourselves at the end of five years in a worse condition so far as an outlet is concerned than we are to-day. If we are to require insurance, if the Government of the United States is to be relieved from all responsibility and risk, we must pass a very different bill from this.

Therefore it is the duty of the House to inquire and to decide which one of these proposed methods of improving the navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi River ought to be adopted. If the House decides for the jetties, let them be constructed in the ordinary way, by the Government itself. If the House decides that in the end the jetties would be a failure and that a ship-canal is the only mode of improving permanently the mouth of the river, then I think it is the duty of the House to adopt that method, and with all reasonable promptness and dispatch proceed to the construction of the canal.

I will not detain the House very long, and although it is a little late I ask to be permitted to proceed and finish what I have to say. What we want and what we must have is permanent success, not a temporary success. I think it is beyond all question that the adoption of this jetty system, if it shall have any effect upon the bar which exists at the mouth of the Mississippi and forms an obstruction to navigation there—the only effect would be to move that bar to another position a little farther out in the Gulf. This question depends largely upon another question, and that is, whether there is what engineers call a littoral current, or a shorewise current, running across the mouth of the Mississippi River along the shore coast. If it be settled that there is no such current there of sufficient strength to carry away the sediment, then no engineer will pretend that the jetties can do anything more than to move the bar to another position a little farther out in the Gulf. Now, sir, I am fully convinced that there is not at the mouth of the Mississippi River such a littoral current as is capable of taking up and carrying away the vast deposit of earthy matter which is carried out into the Gulf by the Mississippi River.

Sir, this is not a matter of mere opinion; it has been the subject of careful examination and of experiment. I cannot now go into the subject so fully as to quote from all the reports of our engineers upon this question. I call attention to the following statement of the results of their investigations and inquiries, which I quote from the recent report of the Chief of Engineers:

> If there was a littoral current of force sufficient to carry off any large quantity of this earthy matter it would not have been deposited where it is now and always has been found. What has been said respecting the recent soundings of Captain Howell exhibits this fact clearly.
>
> Further, upon examining the horizontal curves of equal depth on Captain Howell's recently prepared map, going out as far as a depth of three hundred and fifty feet, we find that from the crest of the bar to one hundred feet depth the greatest amount of deposit is made east of the axis or mid-line of the pass prolonged; between one hundred and two hundred feet depth the greatest amount of deposit is made west of that line; and between two hundred and three hundred and fifty feet the greatest amount of deposit is made east of that line. Further, the investigations into the currents made under Captain Talcott's direction in 1838, for the very purpose of ascertaining whether there was a littoral current, failed to detect its existence off any of the passes, the investigations in the case of the Southwest Pass extending seven miles seaward of the bar. (Executive Document No. 220, page 3.)

Allow me also to call attention to one more report, which I think must be entitled to great weight. I allude to a report by an officer whose name is familiar to the whole people of the country. In 1839 Lieutenant George G. Meade, afterward a major-general in the United States Army, was detailed by the War Department for the purpose of examining and reporting upon this very question. He went to the mouth of the Mississippi, he remained there and made experiments, and this is his report:

> At the southwest bar many observations were made to determine the existence of a littoral current.

After describing some of these experiments, he continued:

> The velocity is increased when the tide is falling and diminished when it is rising. If there is any wind, the current will obey the impulse given to it by its direction. If from the east, the set of the current will be to the west, more or less inclined to the axis of the pass as the force of the wind is greater or less. So if the wind is from the west the same circumstances will be perceptible with regard to the set of the current to the east. The bottom velocity is slightly less than that of the surface and is affected in the same way, though not to so great a degree, and is much sooner neutralized by the resistance of the sea. The prevailing winds being from the east and the axis of the pass Southwest, the general set of the current is to the west; hence may have arisen the idea of a "westerly littoral current."
>
> Care was taken—

I call the attention of the House to this statement. It was not made by a gentleman who had any interest in any of these questions; it was not made pending any controversy of this sort; it is not a voluntary opinion; it is the deliberate, matured opinion and official report of General Meade, made upon this very question after careful experiment:

> Care was taken to make the observations under all circumstances of wind and tide, and no traces of the existence of such a current is shown within seven miles of the land—the extreme point to which the observations were carried.

This report will be found in full in the Appendix to Physics and Hydraulics of the Mississippi River, by Humphreys & Abbott.

Now, sir, so far as I know, no engineer who has ever made experiments of this kind—no report of any engineer or any competent person, so far as my researches extend—has ever expressed an opinion to the contrary of this given by General Meade. And if that littoral current is not there, or if it has not sufficient strength to take up and carry away this immense mass of earthy matter which is pushed into the Gulf by the current of the river, then the jetties must fail as certainly as to-morrow's sun will rise.

Again, sir, if any gentleman will take the trouble to examine this question carefully with reference to all the great sediment-bearing rivers of the world he will discover this fact: wherever there is a strong, decided, littoral current of this character the river is not able to push the bar out into the sea or gulf with much rapidity. At the mouth of the Danube, the only place on the face of the earth where a sediment-bearing river has been improved with any success by means of jetties, there is this littoral current; and it is so strong, so marked, that, as engineers will tell you, the bar at that point has not perceptibly advanced during a long period of time. Speaking of the mouth of the Mississippi, General Humphreys in the report already quoted says:

> The very shape of the delta is indicative of the absence of such current. Its increase in the direction of the mouths of the passes, and the existence of such areas of water as Blind Bay, Garden Island Bay, and East and West Bays, which would have been gradually filled in the course of the delta formation by deposit if such current had existed, all point to its absence.

And concerning the Danube he states the facts as follows:

> Further, the sea-shore line at the mouth of the Sulina is also stationary, and we do not find any recent delta formation at its mouth. The characteristic of a delta-forming river is the constant annual extension of the shores at its mouth, the constant advance of the crest of its bar and of the whole bar, and the constant annual advance of the deep channel inside of and behind the bar. None of these characteristics are found at the mouth of the Soolina, which has long since ceased to be a delta-forming river.

While there is no advance of the bar at the mouth of the Danube, we find that at the mouth of the Mississippi, at the mouth of the Nile, at the mouth of the Rhone, at the mouth of all rivers where there is a large body of sediment constantly collecting, and where the littoral current is not strong enough to take it up and carry it away, the bar advances. We know as a matter of fact that the land at the mouth of the Mississippi River has been extending for centuries from a point far above New Orleans to the point where it now is; and it is now advancing at the rate of about four hundred feet every year. This is because there is no littoral current there, or because if there is one it is so slight that it has not the force and strength to pick up and carry away this mass of matter which is poured out by the river as it goes into the Gulf.

If there is not and never has been a current there sufficiently strong to move the mass of earthy matter which forms the bar as it is carried out by the river, where will you find a littoral current to carry away the same mass after the jetties are constructed? You will not find it. You may perhaps increase the force of the current; you may push the bar a little further out, but it will accumulate and pile up again; and when a great storm comes it will be thrown back into the mouth of your jetties, and the obstruction will be as great as ever.

Consider for a moment the immense quantity of earth which is carried down by the Mississippi River and deposited in this bar. There have been different estimates as to the quantity, but the Chief of Engineers gives the opinion—and I believe it is concurred in generally—that at the very least the quantity of earthy matter deposited in this bar in any one year is sufficient to cover a mile square two hundred and forty-one feet deep; and the effect of your jetties, if they have any effect at all, will be simply to push this immense mass a little farther out into the Gulf; and unless you have some current there to take it up and carry it away, it will accumulate there and the bar will reform. Now, I think the testimony is overwhelming on this point: that if there is any littoral current there—and I do not think there is—it is not of sufficient force to have any effect upon the vast mass of matter when carried out in this way.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I am safe in saying that engineers are competent to discover such a current as this if it is there. I think I am not mistaken in saying the House of Representatives ought not to make a contract involving $11,000,000 with an individual citizen in ignorance of the fact that there is such a current there, if it is there, and in view of the great importance of that fact if it exists.

Mr. CONGER. The bars have advanced two or three miles since 1838.

Mr. McCRARY. They have advanced at the rate of four hundred feet a year, and in the aggregate some two or three miles.

Mr. PARSONS. Has not the entire testimony shown this current is not sufficiently strong to carry away that bar at all unless taken up by mud-rakes and made to move by artificial means?

Mr. CONGER. That refers to the river current, but the gentleman is now talking about the Gulf current.

Mr. McCRARY. I am speaking of the current of the Gulf.

Mr. KASSON. Moving at right angles.

Mr. McCRARY. There is another question among engineers which has an important bearing upon this case. There is a dispute, though not much of a dispute, as to the manner in which the earth which is carried down to this bar is transported. It is agreed, I believe, on all hands that a part is held in suspension, but it is claimed by General Humphreys and other engineers that the larger part is pushed or rolled along upon the bottom of the river. General Humphreys is of the opinion that this mass of matter which is pushed along the bottom is the matter which forms the greater part of the bar. This has an important bearing upon this question, because Captain Eads himself will concede—I think he did before this committee—that if the principal part is pushed along the bottom it will not be carried out any farther by means of jetties. All the engineers agree on this question, and Captain Eads himself on another occasion stated the fact precisely as I believe it exists.

Mr. LEWIS. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McCRARY. I have not much time, if I am to conclude to-day; but I will be glad to answer if it does not take too long.

Mr. LEWIS. Does not General Humphreys state in his report the matter carried as sediment to the Gulf would make a solid mass a mile square and two hundred and forty-one feet high, and does he not also estimate the amount rolled upon the bottom of the river would make a mass a mile square and only thirty-seven feet high?

Mr. McCRARY. I have not seen any estimate of the kind.

Mr. LEWIS. You will find it so.

Mr. McCRARY. What I wish to do now is to show by the testimony of Captain Eads that there is this vast amount of matter pushing along the bottom of the river. In his report as engineer-in-chief of the Illinois and Saint Louis Bridge Company I find, on page 21, this statement, not of opinion but of fact, by Captain Eads himself:

> I had occasion to examine the bottom of the Mississippi below Cairo, during the flood of 1851, and at sixty-five feet below the surface I found the bed of the river for at least three feet in depth a moving mass, and so unstable that in endeavoring to find footing on it beneath the bell my feet penetrated through it until I could feel, although standing erect, the sand rushing past my hands, driven by a current apparently as rapid as that at the surface. I could discover the sand in motion at least two feet below the surface of the bottom, and moving with a velocity diminishing in proportion to the depth at which I thrust my hands into it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that is the condition of the bottom of the Mississippi River in time of flood, I think it is easy to see how this great bar has filled up. Whenever there is a flood, it is not so much by the quantity of sediment held in suspension by the river waters as by this great rolling mass which is pushed along the bottom by means of the current of that mighty river, and which, when it strikes the salt water at the mouth and meets with resistance created by the incoming forces of the Gulf, is dropped down and forms the bar. That fact then of itself—and I prove it here by the testimony of Captain Eads—is to my mind entirely conclusive against the success of this mode of improvement; for all will agree that the littoral current, even if it exists, cannot reach or affect this mass of matter moved along the bottom.

I am not quite through, but I think I am detaining the House too long.

Several MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. McCRARY. I will endeavor to conclude in a short time. There are some things which I wish to say, but which for want of time I will omit.

I will now call the attention of the House to some experiments which have been made, because experience in this matter is more valuable to us than the opinions of engineers, however able.

In General Barnard's minority report, which is to be found in Executive Document No. 220, page 119, he calls our attention to some four experiments which have been made for the improvement of sediment-bearing rivers by jetties. These rivers are the Danube, the Oder, the Vistula, the Rhone, and the Adour.

One of them, however, (the Oder,) is not a sediment-bearing river, and therefore ought not to be taken into account. Of the other four there is no claim made by General Barnard that at any place except at the Soolina mouth of the Danube has there been anything like a success.

Now, sir, as the mouth of the Danube is cited as a precedent for the improvement of the Mississippi River, let me repeat whatI said a little while ago, that there is scarce any similarity between the two rivers. The bar at the mouth of that river has not been advanced. Whatever amount of earthy matter was carried out by the river was carried in suspension and not, as at the mouth of the Mississippi, pushed along the bottom. The littoral current, which was discovered by Sir Charles Hartley, the engineer, before he undertook the work and before he would undertake it, is strong enough to carry away whatever sediment is founed at that point.

Now, sir, another experiment upon this subject was at the mouth of the Rhone. This river is more like the Mississippi than any other river upon which this experiment has been tried. It is a river which bears a large quantity of sediment, although only one-fourth the quantity which is carried by the Mississippi. Its bar is being rapidly extended, though not so rapidly as that of the Mississippi. Its extension is fifty-two feet per year; that at the mouth of the Mississippi four hundred feet. And yet the attempt to improve the mouth of the Rhone by means of jetties has entirely failed; and after spending millions and millions of dollars they have been obliged to improve that river by a ship-canal to connect the river with the Gulf of Fos. The canal is now completed and is a success. I have before me a very able work by a distinguished French engineer, Elisée Recliis, recently translated into our language and published in this country. In this work the engineer I have named treats of these experiments at the mouth of the Danube and also at the mouth of the Rhone, and I wish to call the attention of the House to what he says. Upon the general subject of the improvement of the mouths of these great rivers he says:

> Every engineer recommends his own special plan as being adapted to avert the danger; each promises that he will correct those river outlets which Vauban characterized as "incorrigible." But only too frequently operations are undertaken without taking account of the numerous causes which determine the formation and fluctuations of the bar. Among all the immense works which have been carried out at the mouths of rivers many have become useless or even absolutely injurious to navigation. Millions and millions of money have been thus cast into the ocean and purely wasted, (page 425, 426.)

Then, speaking of the improvement of the mouths of these rivers, or the attempt to improve them by means of jetties,he says, page 427:

> A system of moles and jetties is, therefore, the plan that has generally been resorted to by engineers in the improvement of the mouths of rivers. This plan is somewhat similar to that of the embankments which have been employed, with various degrees of success, on the middle courses of rivers; but the marine dikes have not always produced favorable results, and a great many experiments which seemed to offer good chances of success have entirely failed. Among the undertakings of this kind, which have been the most costly and the most useless, we may mention those which have been carried out at the delta of the Rhone.

He says, further:

> In 1852, Surell, the engineer, closed up the various graus through which the water of the Rhone found littoral outlet and lengthened the two banks of the principal mouth by means of dikes converging one upon another, thus doubling the force of the current.

It cannot, I think, be claimed that the force of the current can be very greatly increased at the mouth of the Mississippi River, because there is no fall; there is almost a dead level for five miles, and when a storm comes in the current is apt to be the other way instead of toward the Gulf.

> The water of the river did, in fact, accomplish the work of erosion, and cleared out the channel; but fresh alluvium being incessantly brought down by the flow of the Rhone and thrown up by the waves of the sea, a new bar formed across the mouth outside. Before the operations of embanking were begun, the average depth of the channel was five feet ten inches; at the present time it is the same, after having varied from thirteen feet to six feet and one-half, and three feet eight inches, according to the quantity of water sent down by the current.

As to the result of the experiments at the mouth of the Rhone he says, page 432:

> A work of this kind (a canal) is being carried out at the mouth of the Rhone, by the digging out of the canal of Saint Louis. This navigable channel is two and a half miles long and sixty-six yards wide, and is intended to connect the river with the Gulf of Fos, so called from a former navigable canal dug out by Marius, (fossæ marianæ.) Vessels drawing twenty-four feet of water will thus be enabled to ascend as far as the port of Arles, which at the present day is almost abandoned by commerce on account of the deficiency of water in the channel of the Rhone.

Of the improvements of the mouth of the Danube the same author says, (page 429):

> The operations undertaken at Sulina, one of the mouths of the Danube, appear to have met with great success, but through an entirely special cause. Mr. Charles Hartley, the skillful constructor of the Soolina jetties, has taken care to push them out more than a hundred yards into the sea, as far as a point where a current generally passes along the shore tending from north to south. This current catches hold of all the alluvium, which glides down over the bottom of the bed of the river and thus hinders the formation of a fresh bar.

It is said that the effect of jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi would be to push the earthy matter out into very deep water, so that even if the littoral current did not carry it away the bar would be a long time in reforming. The answer to this is that the whole space out from the mouth of the river for five to ten miles is rapidly filling up and the bar would not be pushed into very deep water. Captain Howell's reports show that actual measurement has established that at a point three thousand feet seaward from the crest of the bar the water is but forty-five feet deep. At the same point it was one hundred and forty-five feet deep in 1838.

It is now so late in the day that I will not detain the House longer at this time. It is possible that I may wish to add a few remarks on points which have escaped my memory because of the hurried manner in which I have spoken, when the House resumes the consideration of this subject; but at present I am not sure whether I will or not. For the present I yield the floor. The following are the statistical tables to which I have referred, showing the population, improved and unimproved lands, number and value of live stock, amount of cereal products, wool, &c., produced within the States bordering on the Mississippi River and its principal tributaries, during the year 1870:

Table showing population and per cent. in gain from 1860 to 1870.

States.	Population.	Gain since 1860.
		Per cent.
Wisconsin	1,054,670	33.90
Minnesota	439,706	155.61
Iowa	1,194,020	76.91
Illinois	2,539,891	48.36
Missouri	1,721,295	51.52
Arkansas	484,471	23.90
Tennessee	1,258,520	25.91
Mississippi	827,922	34.26
Louisiana	726,915	26.35
Kentucky	1,321,011	23.98
Ohio	2,665,260	13.92
Indiana	1,680,637	24.45
Nebraska	122,993	.....
Kansas	364,399	240.00
Total	16,401,710	.....

Table showing the number of acres of land, improved and unimproved, within the following States.

States.	Acres improved in farms.	Acres unimproved in farms.	Number of acres not in farms.	Total.
Minnesota	2,322,102	4,161,726	47,976,012	53,459,840
Wisconsin	5,899,343	5,815,978	22,796,039	34,511,360
Iowa	9,396,467	6,145,326	19,687,007	35,228,800
Illinois	19,329,952	6,552,902	9,576,346	35,459,200
Missouri	9,130,615	12,576,605	21,415,980	43,123,200
Arkansas	1,859,821	5,735,475	25,811,424	33,406,720
Tennessee	6,843,278	12,737,936	9,602,786	29,184,000
Mississippi	4,209,146	8,911,967	17,058,728	30,179,840
Louisiana	2,045,640	4,980,177	20,690,023	27,715,840
Kentucky	8,103,850	10,556,256	5,455,094	24,115,200
Ohio	14,469,133	7,432,287	3,875,540	25,576,960
Indiana	10,104,279	8,015,369	3,518,092	21,637,760
Nebraska	647,031	1,426,723	76,011,726	78,085,480
Kansas	1,971,003	3,685,876	44,530,641	50,187,520
Total	96,332,660	98,784,603	328,005,438	521,851,720

Table showing the number and value of live stock in 1870.

States.	Horses.	Mules.	Cattle.	Sheep.	Swine.	Value.
Minnesota	91,011	230	310,379	132,343	148,743	$20,118,841
Wisconsin	252,019	4,195	692,294	1,069,282	512,778	45,310,882
Iowa	433,642	25,485	1,006,305	855,493	1,353,908	82,987,133
Illinois	853,738	85,075	1,719,586	1,568,286	2,703,343	194,756,698
Missouri	493,969	111,502	1,152,095	1,352,001	2,306,430	84,285,273
Arkansas	92,013	36,202	357,935	161,077	841,129	17,222,506
Tennessee	247,254	102,983	643,696	826,783	1,828,690	55,084,075
Mississippi	90,221	85,886	501,075	232,732	814,381	21,940,238
Louisiana	59,738	61,338	335,261	181,602	338,326	15,929,188
Kentucky	317,034	99,230	700,327	937,765	1,838,227	66,287,343
Ohio	609,722	16,065	1,436,217	4,928,635	1,728,968	120,300,528
Indiana	497,883	43,259	1,026,184	1,612,680	1,872,230	83,778,782
Nebraska	30,511	2,632	72,928	22,725	59,449	6,551,185
Kansas	117,786	11,786	373,957	109,088	206,587	23,173,185
Total	4,286,543	685,663	10,329,839	13,998,492	16,545,189	835,725,857

Table showing the amount of wheat, rye, corn, oats, barley, buckwheat, tobacco, and cotton produced in 1870.

States.	Wheat.	Rye.	Corn.	Oats.	Barley.	Buckwheat.	Tobacco.	Cotton.
	Bushels.	Bushels.	Bushels.	Bushels.	Bushels.	Bushels.	Pounds.	Bales.
Minnesota	18,866,073	78,088	4,783,117	10,678,261	1,032,024	52,438	8,247	.....
Wisconsin	25,606,344	1,325,294	15,033,998	20,180,016	1,645,019	408,897	960,813	.....
Iowa	29,435,692	505,807	68,935,065	21,005,142	1,960,779	109,432	71,792	.....
Illinois	30,128,405	2,456,578	129,921,395	42,780,851	2,480,400	168,862	5,249,274	465
Missouri	14,315,926	559,532	66,034,075	16,578,313	.....	36,252	12,320,483	1,246
Arkansas	741,736	27,645	13,382,145	528,777	.....	226	594,886	247,968
Tennessee	6,188,916	223,335	41,343,614	4,513,315	.....	77,437	22,465,452	181,842
Mississippi	274,479	14,852	15,637,316	414,586	.....	1,819	61,012	564,938
Louisiana	9,906	.....	7,596,628	17,782	.....	260	.....	350,832
Kentucky	5,728,704	1,108,933	50,091,006	6,620,103	238,486	3,443	105,305,869	1,080
Ohio	27,882,159	846,890	25,347,549	25,347,549	1,715,221	180,341	18,741,973	.....
Indiana	27,746,222	457,468	8,590,409	8,590,409	356,262	80,231	9,325,392	.....
Nebraska	2,125,086	13,532	1,477,562	1,477,562	216,481	3,471	5,988	.....
Kansas	2,391,198	85,267	4,095,925	4,095,925	98,405	27,826	33,241	.....
Total	191,440,846	7,703,221	553,116,276	162,828,591	9,743,077	1,150,935	175,144,422	1,348,371

RECAPITULATION.

Bushels of grain	925,982,946
Pounds of tobacco	175,145,422
Bales of cotton	1,348,371
Population	16,401,710
Acres of land improved	96,332,660
Acres of land unimproved, (in farms)	98,784,603
Acres of land, (not included in farms)	328,005,438
Total number of acres of all classes	521,851,720
Live stock, (number)	45,845,726
Live stock, (total value of)	$835,725,857

Not enumerated above, but from the same report, will be found the following result:

Pounds of wool	47,093,572
Tons of hay	27,316,048
Bushels of clover and grass seed	559,426
Bushels of rice	15,845,012

Of 1,387,299,155 bushels of grain raised in the United States the western division produced 925,982,946 bushels; or, in words, about two-thirds of the total amount produced in the United States.

In population of 38,115,641, this division represents 16,401,710 of that number in 1870. At the same ratio of increase this territory now represents a population of about 18,000,000.

Of 100,102,387 pounds of wool, we have a credit of 47,093,572 from that amount.

Of 27,316,048 tons of hay produced, we find 11,502,617 placed to the credit of this division.

Of 1,222,865 bushels of grass and clover seed produced, we have 559,426, or about one-half of the whole amount.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 2545) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it be printed with the Senate amendments numbered.

The motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. STORM. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow evening be assigned to the Select Committee on the Washington Monument for debate only.

Mr. SENER. And on the monument to the mother of Washington.

Mr. HURLBUT. I am sorry to antagonize the gentleman, but we may need to-morrow evening in case we do not get through with this bill sooner.

Mr. STORM. I did not suppose that to-morrow evening had been asked for any other purpose.

Mr. HURLBUT. It is possible it may be needed.

The SPEAKER. But in case it is not needed?

Mr. HURLBUT. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Then an evening session will be considered as ordered for to-morrow evening for the purpose of debate on the subjects indicated.

COST OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3589) to extend the limits as to cost of certain public buildings and to remove certain restrictions in regard to the construction of the same, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move that the House now take a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it understood that no business is to be transacted?

The SPEAKER. No business whatever is to be transacted, and the debate is to be confined to this bill; that is to say, it is to have precedence. If the debate on this bill shall be exhausted, the Chair does not suppose there would be any objection to any gentleman speaking on any other subject, but the preference will be given to gentlemen who desire to speak on the bill.

The motion of Mr. HURLBUT was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. BURROWS occupying the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

IMPROVEMENT OF MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By order of the House the session for this evening is for debate only on the bill for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Speaker, the opening of the mouth of the Mississippi River to free and unobstructed navigation is of so much importance to the people I in part represent on this floor that I cannot let the present occasion pass without presenting some of the views I entertain upon this subject, and which will influence me to vote for the passage of the bill reported from the majority of the Committee on Railways and Canals. For a number of years past the bulk of western produce to eastern markets, and to consumers, has been very greatly embarrassed, both by the enormous quantity of such produce supplied by the rich agricultural lands of the West and the requirements of consumers in other sections of the country and in foreign lands. This embarrassment grows out of the small value per ton of these productions, when compared with other fruits of industry and chief objects of commerce, which renders a costly transportation peculiarly burdensome to those who consume, and still more to those who produce them. The quantity of vegetable produce moved in a single year, 1873, by only five routes of transportation eastward from the valley of the Mississippi amounted to more than 7,400,000 tons, and statistical details are given from ten States in the Northwest which show that they have a surplus available for shipment to meet deficiencies elsewhere in one year's crop of 364,000,000 bushels of cereals. So small a quantity of this reaches the Atlantic sea-board that it is reasonable to suppose that by no means an inconsiderable part remains unsold, and is wasted or consumed, beyond the actual requirements of the people of that region, in consequence of the lack of adequate facilities for its economical transportation.

In addition to the cereals, during the past year over 2,400,000 tons of other agricultural products were ready for the market. But the routes upon which over 8,000,000 tons of agricultural products have to depend for transportation eastward are at the same time required to move over 2,500,000 tons of forest produce, and 900,000 tons of petroleum, besides 1,000,000 tons of manufactured iron and other articles, toward tide-water, and these same routes move, though not wholly eastward nor over their whole length, more than 9,000,000 tons of coal. Of these enormous quantities of western productions, so large a proportion is moved over the same parts of the chief routes, and in the same direction, that blockades and delays, costly alike to commerce and the transporter, cannot always be avoided by the utmost skill.

The profitable cultivation of the soil is moving westward with surprising rapidity. In 1850 Pennsylvania produced more wheat than any State in the Union. In 1873 Minnesota had the largest wheat crop of any State. Growing population creates increasing demand from the older States. The region south of the lakes, which formerly supplied the East, has steadily decreased in production, and in 1873 more than half of the wheat produced in the northwestern portion of the country for the eastern market, or for export to foreign ports, was grown in States west of the Mississippi River. As the distance between the producer and consumer widens thus rapidly, the cost of transportation becomes every year to both a matter of more vital concern.

Financial and industrial disorder has impressed upon the public mind the conviction that by some mode or other our exchange of products must be effected at less cost. And the true and, to my mind, only solution of this problem lies in the fact that a bushel of wheat or corn, or any other production of the soil, if it be launched upon the navigable waters nearest to either of the chief producing districts of the West, and follows the natural water currents without interruption or other motive-power, will be found within forty days in the Atlantic Ocean, close to the harbor of New York, at less expense than any other. Nature itself supplies in the Mississippi River and the Gulf Stream a route from the very districts in which the largest surplus of grain is produced to the very region in which the demand for consumption most largely exceeds production. Upon that route nature adds, free of cost, a motive-power, aiding every eastward-bound vessel in the natural currents, flowing at the rate of about four miles an hour, from Saint Paul to the Gulf, and from the Gulf along the Atlantic coast.

The localities from which grain must be moved settle the question as to the fitness of different routes. They furnish abundant evidence that Providence, when He bestowed upon certain regions of our land extraordinary fertility, traced also for each one of them a natural route of cheap transportation by water flowing to the sea.

According to the census report of 1870, six of the most productive wheat districts lie almost wholly west of the Mississippi River. The first in Minnesota and Iowa, and produces, according to careful estimates, a surplus beyond consumption of about 45,000,000 bushels of wheat. The second extends along the Missouri River, in Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, and produces an estimated surplus of 3,000,000 bushels. A third lies along the Mississippi River, in Illinois and Missouri, embracing every county from Quincy to Cairo, and produces an estimated surplus of nearly 14,000,000 bushels. A fourth extends along the Wisconsin and Fox Rivers, and produces about 15,000,000 bushels. A fifth extends through Central Michigan, touching Northern Indiana, producing not more than 5,000,000 bushels; while the sixth, embracing counties in the Miami Valley, in Indiana, produces an estimated surplus of nearly 11,000,000 bushels.

Detailed examination by counties shows that in addition to an estimated surplus of 47,786,738 bushels produced in States west of the Mississippi River, more than 26,000,000 bushels of the surplus of wheat are produced in localities from which the Mississippi and its navigable tributaries afford a natural outlet. Thus, of an estimated surplus of 92,895,857 bushels of wheat produced in Northwestern States, about 74,250,000 bushels, or nearly 80 per cent., are grown in districts to which material benefit from improvements of the Mississippi River and its tributaries would surely extend.

From the same source from which this information is derived, we see a like result in relation to the surplus crops of corn and oats, half the surplus of barley, and two-thirds of the packed meats, together with the crops of tobacco, hemp, sugar, cotton, and molasses. All of these lie close to the navigable rivers of the West. More than 9,000,000 tons of agricultural products, not required for consumption in these Western States, seek an outlet from districts to which the Mississippi and its tributaries, if rendered available, offer a route more readily accessible and cheaper than any other.

In the rapid development of this country, the location of the surplus of these vast productions has advanced so far to the westward that the expense of moving it by the lines of rail and the lakes of the north have, in effect, closed these routes to a large proportion of this surplus. Such has been the high price of transportation by these unnatural routes of transport that the farmer of the West is required to pay two-thirds of his crop to get one-third to market. A route southward, therefore, by this natural channel, cutting all these railroads or their dependencies at a multitude of points, extending navigable branches into almost every considerable surplus-producing district in the West, offering to almost every western railroad an independent route, to which it may move freight in a multitude of cases more profitably than to either of the eastern trunk roads, seems to me to give absolutely the only permanent and generally effective protection to producers.

The opening of the mouth of the Mississippi River to the uninterrupted navigation of ocean vessels will break up and render worthless a host of combinations formed for the control of the traffic of this vast valley. When we consider the great number of navigable streams upon which our western steamers ply, reaching out from the Mississippi, the vast territory traversed by its branches, and the peculiar proximity of the chief grain-producing regions to those branches, or to the river itself, it is clear that competition offered by that free highway, unlimited in capacity, and closed from Saint Louis southward an average of only eighteen days in the year, will be worth more to the agricultural interests of the West and the consumers of the East than all other competition attainable or conceivable by any other means.

It is unnecessary, Mr. Speaker, that I should proceed further to point out the importance to the section of the valley of the Mississippi which I in part represent upon this floor of the permanent opening of the mouth of the Mississippi River; for notwithstanding the immense surplus of agricultural products now sent forward by the various routes of transport, these productions are yet in their infancy. The teeming population pouring into these States, not only from the sterile granite hills of New England and the States bordering on the Atlantic sea-board, but from the industrial population of the Old World, will in a very short period of time so multiply the agricultural productions of these Western States, and develop the vast mineral resources that lie hidden within their borders, as to require every natural as well as artificial channel that can be constructed to bear off the surplus for consumption by less favored communities.

The industry and commerce of the Mississippi Valley need immediate relief by the opening of their natural channels of trade to the highway of nations upon the ocean. And this can only be done by so improving the entrance of the Mississippi into the Gulf as to allow ocean steamers and vessels of large tonnage to enter its mouth and receive their cargoes from the river craft bearing these surplus products to New Orleans.

That the bill now under consideration does not ask for an appropriation larger than the States bordering on the Mississippi River are justly entitled to will fully appear, I think, by reference to a few statistics which I have collated from official sources, and which I beg to present for the consideration of the House.

In the first place, the following table, derived from the records of the General Land Office, will show the disposal of the lands of nine States bordering on this river by the Government:

Approximate statement of gross amount of cash receipts; number of acres approved in aid of railroads, granted for canals, entered by military bounty land warrants; and number of acres remaining unsold and unappropriated in the several States mentioned below, up to December 31, 1873.

States.	Cash receipts.	Approved in aid of railroads.	Granted in aid of canals.	Entered by military bounty land warrants.	Remaining unsold and unappropriated.
		Acres.	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.
Ohio	$20,271,391 41	.....	1,700,361.00	1,817,461.99	.....
Indiana	20,883,606 03	.....	1,439,279.41	1,311,956.65	.....
Illinois	23,905,984 66	2,595,053.00	200,915.00	9,533,653.00	.....
Missouri	19,593,186 57	2,193,322.88	.....	6,516,189.58	400,000
Mississippi	15,515,566 25	1,072,405.45	.....	384,697.73	4,300,000
Iowa	12,983,292 76	2,153,395.78	.....	14,099,025.77	1,900,000
Nebraska	2,355,474 58	.....	.....	1,902,398.94	35,800,000
Kansas	1,085,948 22	.....	.....	4,251,420.09	26,000,000
Minnesota	1,764,161 52	152,834.67	.....	5,979,574.53	28,600,000
Total	118,358,612 00	8,167,011.78	3,430,555.41	45,796,388.28	97,000,000

NOTE.—The only public lands for sale in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois are those which have reverted to the States by cancellation of entries, &c.

From this you will see, Mr. Speaker, that there has been paid into the Treasury of the United States from the sale of the lands of these nine States in cash $118,358,612. There has been given away by the United States in aid of railroads of these lands 8,167,011.78 acres; granted for the use of canals 3,430,555.41 acres, and entered by military bounty land warrants 45,796,388.28 acres, equal to $72,742,444.33. In addition to this, there is yet for sale in these nine States 97,000,000 acres of public land, for which the Government will receive in cash or its equivalent, at the minimum price, $1.25 per acre, the sum of $121,250,000; making a grand total of cash value derived from the disposal of the public lands of these nine States and controlled by the United States through its Treasury under authority of the acts of Congress $312,351,056.33

In addition to this, there has been collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States by the Internal Revenue Bureau, under authority of Congress, from the following States, bordering on the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries, every one of which is vitally interested in the opening of the mouth of that river to free and uninterrupted navigation by ocean vessels of large tonnage, the following amounts:

Ohio	$169,915,839 37
Indiana	45,860,089 87
Illinois	135,349,690 26
Missouri	54,142,142 04
Mississippi	10,095,250 42
Nebraska	1,566,058 53
Kansas	2,488,112 62
Minnesota	3,170,577 08
Tennessee	17,668,462 75
Kentucky	60,915,800 32
West Virginia	6,697,921 59
Iowa	14,735,546 22
Arkansas	3,680,650 16
Louisiana	30,158,187 94
	556,404,329 17

This, added to the receipts from lands sold by the United States, as shown in the table above, amounts to more than one-half of the revenue collected in cash from all the States since the establishment of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. Speaker, these exhibits, I think, will show that liberal appropriations are justly due these Western States for the improvement of these natural channels of commerce. And you will find, by reference to the expenditures of the Government since the adoption of the Constitution, that the appropriations made for the improvement of commerce and the development of the vast resources of the country have been upon a meagre scale, especially in the valley of the Mississippi River.

In this vast valley, the most fertile upon the face of the earth, extending from the western slope of the Alleghany at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, from the Falls of Saint Anthony at the head of the Mississippi River, and from the Yellowstone at the foot of the Rocky Mountains in the West, we have a continuous communication by navigable rivers of over twenty thousand miles, concentrating their forces and all bearing their products to one outlet in the ocean at the mouth of the Mississippi. And yet the Government, for the improvement of these vast avenues of trade, which are designed by nature to afford the cheapest and most ample facilities for the immense population which inhabits this rich and fertile land, have only expended since its organization in the improvement of these rivers a little over $11,000,000—not averaging $150,000 per annum.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come when it becomes necessary for the Government to take some action for the permanent opening and securing an outlet at the mouth of the Mississippi River sufficient for the ingress and egress of vessels of large tonnage, that they may bear off to the ocean and markets of the world the surplus productions of the western States.

That plan which will most certainly secure this end, and afford the least expense to the producer and the consumer in the transfer of cargo, is the one that should be adopted.

In my opinion, this bill, reported from the majority of the Committee on Railways and Canals, authorizing James B. Eads and others to proceed in the work of deepening the channel at the mouth of that river, by what is known as the "jetty system," is the only plan that will fully meet the object contemplated, and will be more permanent and of less expense than any other yet presented.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that the board of United States engineers appointed by the Secretary of War, under a resolution of this House passed March 14, 1871, to examine into the feasibility of this matter, have made a report favoring the building of a canal. I am aware also that this project of opening an outlet at or near the mouth of the Mississippi River by means of a canal has been agitated for the past forty years.

Its advocates, however, have been heretofore principally among local engineers and merchants at New Orleans. Its feasibility, which has never been made the main subject of discussion, is the only one requiring consideration. A careful examination of this report has not satisfied me that the suggestion of the chief engineer establishes the fact that a canal is either feasible, or will, when completed, afford the relief to commerce which is now required. That it will add to the expense of the change of cargo there can be no question, as it will require the erection of elevators and probably reshipment at the end of the canal. There being no current through it, it will necessarily require dredging to free it from the accumulation of deposit, which will settle in the entrance basin of the lock, filled from the flow of the river in consequence of the current flowing past it, and would, therefore, be a continual source of vexation and delay. These considerations alone are sufficient to require a pause to see the effect it would have by checking commerce in its flow to and from the vast resources furnished by the river.

But, sir, a canal running from the Gulf, with locks to check its entrance to the bed of the river, and requiring each vessel laden at New Orleans to pass out these locks, will never suffice to convey the surplus produce of the Mississippi Valley to the ocean. If its cost could be calculated and its success insured, it will never answer the purposes of relieving the people of these producing States from the embarrassment they now suffer in relation to transportation of their productions to the markets of the world. But that its cost has not been calculated and is unknown, and its location made, is fully established by the report itself, for on page 63 it is said:

> With regard to the plan submitted by the engineer in charge, he has stated that it was prepared while pressed with other important duties, and that under the circumstances it was not possible to perfect all details of the project, or to make the numerous borings which are considered as necessary preliminary to a precise location of the route of the canal through the entire length.

The estimate submitted can therefore only be regarded as an approximation to the probable cost of the work.

Again:

> In order to avoid beds and pockets of quicksand known to exist at some points in this locality, that the precise line of the canal should not be decided upon until a more thorough examination of the sub-strata has been made by borings. It is not improbable that such an examination may indicate the expediency, and perhaps necessity, not only of adopting a curve, or series of curves, in preference to a straight line for the axis of the canal, but also of selecting other points of termini than those recommended by Captain Howell.

It is evident, therefore, that at the time the board of United States engineers made their report in favor of a canal, they had not sufficient data to determine its best location across the peninsula, including its termini, and particularly its débouchure by jetties into Isle au Breton, and it was therefore impossible to estimate its cost.

It is evident to every one who carefully looks into this report of the engineers, that neither the cost of the work of building a canal, the line of its location, the position of its terminal points, nor the exact method of its construction, had been determined upon by these engineers when they recommended this work. General Bernard, who was the president of the board, and whose ability as an engineer is not surpassed by any officer of the corps, after expressing his faith in jetties as the speediest means of obtaining a permanent deep-water channel, thus protests against the canal on page 91 of the report:

> It is said the time has come when the needs of commerce demand the canal; but I answer that the time will come when there will be the same cry for a navigation unimpeded by locks—an open-river mouth. But in whatever aspect the question be regarded, the use of the river mouth for the next ten years is simply inevitable.
>
> The conditions of the location and execution of a canal have received no adequate study. The plan boldly and yet so imperfectly sketched out nearly forty years ago by one for seventeen years my commanding officer or professional associate, W. H. Chase, is yet in its engineering features the best plan extant, and the grave objections to that apply with even greater force to the present project, and demand new studies of location and an entire revision of plans of execution. It would be a rash confidence which would contemplate a realized Fort Saint Philip Canal earlier than A. D. 1884.

It is evident to me that to secure the advantages which nature has given to the commerce of the valley of the Mississippi, the free navigation of the river by ships of equal size to those which frequent and supply all ports—that is, of an average tonnage of from one to two thousand tons—must be secured. The numerous failures that have been made have not yet destroyed the hope of accomplishing this end. The admirable condition of the port of New Orleans, and the urgent necessity which requires a cheaper route of transport for our produce than is furnished by the net of railroads and the navigation of the lakes in the North, have turned the attention of our people to the incomparable superiority of the river route for all practicable purposes.

After a careful examination of this matter by some of the most experienced engineers of the country, they have expressed the opinion that this object can be secured by improvements at one or more of the natural mouths of the river. In the report made by General Bernard, (Executive Document No. 113, Forty-third Congress, first session, page 84,) he says upon the subject of jetties for this purpose:

> I do not know how I can better define at the outset my position in relation to them than by quoting from a former report: "I can only reason on probabilities, deduced from study of the river and the lights of experience, and so long as, to establish the negative, there has been I need not say no trial of the system, but not even a survey accompanied with a careful study and experiments directed expressly to develop the cost and character of the work needed, I feel that I am justified in recommending it as probably furnishing the most speedy attainment of a deep-water channel, and one which will have some features of permanence."

Again, General Bernard, in his report, quotes from the Physics and Hydraulics of the Mississippi for the rationale of the jetty system:

> The development of the laws which govern the formation of the bars has removed all uncertainty as to the principle which should guide an attempt to deepen the channel over them. The erosion or excavating power of the current must be increased relatively to the depositing action. This may be done either by increasing the absolute velocity of the current over the bar or by artificially aiding its action. To the first class of works belong jetties and the closure of lateral outlets; to the latter, stirring up the bottom by suitable machinery, blasting, dragging the material seaward, and dredging by buckets. These plans are all correct in theory, and the selection from them should be governed by economical calculations.

Such, says General Bernard, is the theory of jetties, "and no engineer has yet expressed a doubt as to the fact that concentration of the waters of one of the passes by jetties carried out to deep water would excavate the required deep channel." The only objection, he says, is the difficulty and cost of construction, and the alleged necessity of costly annual extension of these jetties to follow the bar thrown out at the mouth. But, Mr. Speaker, recent developments have shown that this objection has no foundation in fact. That there will be any advance of the jetties necessary after they are built is not supported by the experience of the improvement at the mouth of the river Danube, where the "jetty system" has been put to practical test. There the water has been increased by their use from nine to twenty feet in depth, and no advance in the bar is indicated. On the contrary, the shore line has actually receded near the jetties. This experience at the mouth of the Danube is sustained by the opinion of some of the most eminent engineers in Europe and America.

Correct maps of the ocean currents, made since 1861 and on file in the office of the Coast Survey, giving the equatorial current of the ocean, place it as flowing from Cape Saint Roque, in Brazil, directly against the northern and eastern shore of South and North America and around the coast of Mexico, Texas, and Louisiana, to the Southwest Pass at the mouth of the Mississippi, and on to Cape Sable, in Florida, from which point it takes the name of the Gulf Stream. It is so designated in all the standard German and European maps, and is so marked upon the globe used in the office of the Coast Survey. Examine all the soundings of the deep sea near the mouth of the Mississippi River, and you will find its trough nearly eight thousand feet deep, eroded squarely at right angles to the Southwest Pass.

This current has not only removed the delta and the bar of the Amazon in South America, which flows directly into the deep sea, but it has swept away in its course the deltas of the Orinoco, Magdalena, Rio Grande, Colorado, and Brazos, and of every great and little river on the eastern side of our hemisphere from the Amazon to the Mississippi. The bars at the mouths of all these rivers can be removed, and will be removed by men who believe they can do it and who have the genius to accomplish what they undertake.

In testing the course of this current, while experimenting upon the currents of the ocean, the late Professor Maury threw into the ocean, at the mouth of the Amazon in South America, forty bottles well corked; a portion of them were stranded upon Galveston Island, off the coast of Texas.

The light-house at the Southwest Pass, at the mouth of the Mississippi, in 1837 stood far off from the west Gulf shore. Since that, it has been washed away by the encroachment of the sea upon the land at the passes, while there has been very little extension of the bar, and this extension will be less and less as the river forces the land into the deep and deeper sea, which is now nearly eight thousand feet deep in sight of the light-house lantern of the Southwest Pass.

All the recent examinations show that the sea along the Gulf coast is continually encroaching upon the land, while the river is vainly attempting to push its bar into the constantly deepening deep. The alluvium and the strata of the ancient delta are driven along by the whirls of this tropical current toward Pass Christian, Pascagoula, and Mobile.

The muddy waters of the Mississippi all flow in that direction, except when portions of them are blown with the drift-wood upon their surface by the variable winds into the little bays and upon the low shores about the passes at the mouth; but the deep-sea trough near the mouth of the Southwest Pass is one hundred miles south of Mobile Bay.

All the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico near the mouth of the Mississippi and Alabama coast is shallowed, and its waters are closed by the turbid river and the washing of its bar, which goes to prove the action and direction of this great current which forms the principal part of the Gulf Stream.

I have no faith whatever, Mr. Speaker, in the correctness of mathematical calculations, even if made by engineers, in regard to the former or future extension of the bars at the mouth of the Mississippi which ignore the facts I have presented. All the facts of physical geography are in conflict with such mathematics.

The ocean bottom at the Southwest Pass is not level; it slopes with a descent of several hundred feet to the mile down to eight thousand feet in thirty miles, and then into depths more profound. The Mississippi River does not bring down into the Gulf and drop on one spot or upon the whole surface of the bars a mile square of earth two hundred feet thick, as is said in one report, or deposit upon one site any such mass—solid, fluid, or in any other form. It may convey to the sea that or ten times as much. Some of it is undoubtedly lodged there, but the most of it is strewn over the Gult bottom from its mouth to Pensacola, and some of it may find its way to "the telegraphic plateau" between Newfoundland and Ireland, as portions of its drift-wood certainly do to the western shore of Europe. And this deep-sea current, which deepens the Gulf there and shallows its northern limits, certainly crosses the proposed line of these jetties; and while it will prevent their extension to Cuba it will convey whatever they cast into it, which it can utilize as paving materials to the north and east of their points, and will dump them there to make the shallows between Ship Island and Fort Saint Philip shallower still.

This ocean river will certainly conquer the Mississippi ultimately and capture and carry away its bar, as it has already vanquished the Amazon and sunk its bar into its "unfathomed caves," or stranded it upon some new-made shore, whether we choose to assist it or not. The future millions of the occupants of the valley of the Mississippi will find its mouth opened sufficiently to supply all the commercial wants of the cyclopean engineer, even if without our puny aid to hasten it in the performance of its natural work.

The cost of the two classes of work proposed, canal and jetties, has been left by me to be discussed by the committee that has had the subject under consideration. Having undoubted confidence in the engineering skill of Captain Eads as well as in his ability to carry out whatever he may undertake, I cannot come to any other conclusion. When I look at that noble structure erected across the Father of Waters at Saint Louis—the finest bridge, so acknowledged by all who have seen it, either in this or any other country—when we consider that a convention of the most eminent civil engineers in this country, twenty-seven in number, met at Saint Louis to examine the ground and plans of the bridge, and they with one voice pronounced against the practicability of constructing it in accordance with the plans submitted by Mr. Eads—time, genius, and enterprise have proven their error; for the work is completed in accordance with the plans submitted to that convention, and stands as a monument to the great engineering skill and genius of its projector.

Mr. Speaker, this bill simply authorizes James B. Eads, with such others as may be associated with him, to proceed in the work of deepening the channel of one of the outlets or passes of the Mississippi River into the Gulf of Mexico to be selected by himself, by permanent or sufficient jetties at or near its mouth, and so limits him in its provisions as to prevent his interfering with the free navigation of the channel by large or small vessels while he is engaged in the work. It is so guarded in its provisions also that the United States runs no risk in the loss of the appropriation made for the work, as Captain Eads proposes to accomplish a great part of the work and establish his ability to complete it to the satisfaction of a competent board of commissioners who are to be appointed by the President to examine the work. I can therefore see no reason why the bill should not pass and the work be at once begun.

Captain James B. Eads would not attempt this work without he was fully convinced of his ability to succeed. Born and raised in the valley of the Mississippi, he has been all his life-time intimately connected with operations upon the river, and from a humble beginning has earned a reputation for skill in engineering and successful execution of work second to none other in all the land. Twenty years ago he stood at the Southwest Pass, at the bottom of the river, under the diving-bell, rescuing the cargo of the bark Mary Ellen, wrecked upon that bar. And while some of the professional engineers of the country would strive to make us believe that he knew nothing of the Mississippi River, he has for thirty-five years been so intimately identified with it that there is not a stretch of fifty miles long between Saint Louis and New Orleans in which he has not stood upon the bed of the stream beneath the shelter of the diving-bell. He is better acquainted with the bar of the Southwest Pass than any one of the engineers who has reported in favor of a canal, and he knows absolutely that the jetties he proposes to build can be put down with success.

Captain Eads believes that the Mississippi River is the natural outlet for the commerce of this valley, and that God has conferred upon his intelligent creatures the ability to curb and control it. It is merely a question of money and brains. With the little stock of these elements which hitherto he has controlled he has rescued many millions from beneath its floods.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Speaker, if the petitions and memorials of the several chambers of commerce, boards of trade, conventions, and concurrent resolutions of the several State Legislatures of the Mississippi Valley presented to this Congress indicate anything, it is that the petitioners and memorialists are a unit for cheap transportation, and to that end they recommend the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River.

This is not the time to consider the justice or necessity of the demand of the eighteen millions of people of the Mississippi Valley upon this Congress for this improvement in order to relieve them, as they allege, of unjust discrimination in freight charges by railroads in the transportation of their products to the sea-board.

The justice of their demand will be conceded and the necessity will be admitted for the reasons and statistics repeatedly set forth by gentlemen upon this floor while discussing this subject of cheap transportation. Hence it will not be necessary to again repeat these statistics and arguments of their urgent claims, but rather to review the action of the majority of your committee which induced them to report the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, early in this session of Congress bills were introduced for the construction of a Fort Saint Philip Canal from a point on the Mississippi River below Fort Saint Philip to Isle au Breton Pass, a distance of about seven miles, which bills were referred to your Committee on Railroads and Canals for their consideration and report thereon. From the information which reached your committee through the daily press and otherwise they were of the opinion that the project for the construction of the Fort Saint Philip Canal was practicable, would be unqualifiedly indorsed and recommended by the honorable Secretary of War, upon the reports of the engineers charged with the duty of preparing the surveys, borings, plans, and estimates of its cost, not exceeding $4,500,000. Looking to that end they perfected House bill No. 1851, for the construction of the Fort Saint Philip Canal in the State of Louisiana and its maintenance as a national public highway, and it only awaited the indorsement which they were led to believe these reports would give in order that they might report back House bill No. 1851 with a recommendation that it do pass.

It will be remembered that on the 14th of March, 1871, the following resolution of the House of Representatives was passed:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to cause an examination and survey, with plans and estimates of cost, to be made by an officer of engineers, for a ship-canal to connect the Mississippi River with the Gulf of Mexico, or the navigable waters thereof, of suitable location and dimensions for military, naval, and commercial purposes, and that he report upon the feasibility of the same to the House of Representatives.

Upon examination of Executive Document No. 113, of date February 4, 1874, it will be found that Captain C. W. Howell, who was charged with the work contemplated to be done under this resolution, with his corps of assistants commenced the work on the 8th day of November, 1871, and completed his report thereon in February, 1873, and that he says:

The general and detailed plans for the various constructions pertaining to the canal * * * were drawn up more for the purpose of estimate than with a view to their ultimate adoption, without modification. They have been as carefully considered as the time at my command for such purposes would permit.

The estimates here presented have been based on the cost of material and labor for small works undertaken in the neighborhood of the proposed canal, which considerations induce me to leave out of my estimate amounts required for engineering, superintendence, and contingencies. The total estimate of cost approximates $7,400,000 in round numbers.

By Special Orders No. 83, from headquarters Corps of Engineers, Washington, District of Columbia, June 30, 1873, a board of engineers, consisting of Generals J. G. Barnard, John Newton, Q. A. Gillmore, G. K. Warren, G. Weitzel, Lieutenant-Colonel William P. Craighill, and Major C. W. Worrell, were convened to consider and report upon the plan submitted by Captain C. W. Howell for a ship-canal to connect the Mississippi River with the Gulf of Mexico.

After considering the plans and estimates, and visiting the locality of the proposed canal, in their report thereon of date January 9, 1874, they say:

It is suggested in order to avoid beds and pockets of quicksand, known to exist at some points in this locality, that the precise line of the canal should not be decided upon until a more thorough examination of the sub-strata has been made by boring.

With regard to the plans submitted by the engineer in charge, he has stated that it was prepared while pressed with other important duties, and that under the circumstances it was not possible to perfect all details of the project, or to make the numerous borings which are considered a necessary perliminary to a precise location of the route of the canal throughout its entire length.

The estimate submitted can therefore only be regarded as an approximation to the probable cost of the work.

This board of revising engineers increase the length of the lock-chamber from four hundred feet to five hundred feet, reduce the width of lock at the gates from eighty feet to sixty-five feet, reduce the depth over sill from twenty-seven feet to twenty-five feet, and conclude by saying:

The jetties extending the canal into the deep waters of Isle au Breton Pass will doubtless require more material than the plan submitted by Captain Howell contemplates, but inasmuch as the length of these jetties and their cubic contents depend to no inconsiderable extent upon the position selected for them, no very accurate estimate of their cost can be made until the final location is determined upon.

It is evident from the foregoing that the necessary and unavoidable absence of sufficient data to determine the best location for the line of the canal across the peninsula, including its termini, and particularly its débouchure by jetties into Isle au Breton, renders it impossible to make a close estimate of its cost.

A new estimate, resulting in part from a revision of that made by Captain Howell, has been rendered specially necessary in view of the modifications of plan recommended by the board. It is believed to be ample to cover the cost of constructing a canal of the dimensions given above, located within the limits designated. The estimate amounts to $10,273,000.

A difference between the estimates of Captain Howell and the revisory board of $2,873,000, to which must be added cost for engineering, superintendence, and contingencies.

General J. G. Barnard, in his minority report of date January 20, 1874, upon the same project, says:

That, assuming that a canal is to be made, the plan now submitted suffices only to show that a more protracted and more comprehensive study is required to fix the location and determine the general details of construction, and to make an estimate which can rightly be considered approximate.

That before resorting to an artificial work of the difficult and costly character of a ship-canal, a more attentive consideration of the superior advantages of the natural mouths and of the fair probability of utilizing them is needed.

Furthermore, I add that neither difficulties nor costs are to be weighed against the demand for an adequate navigable outlet to the Mississippi River, whether that outlet be a canal or otherwise; but the whether here becomes the symbol of a question not yet solved in favor of the canal.

In turning now from the matter of location to that of plans of construction, I do not know how I can discharge the duty to consider and report upon the plan submitted to the board without saying that it is not one upon which it would be proper to undertake the execution of the work, nor one in which the great problems of the canal construction are adequately solved.

I do not wish to exaggerate in the slightest degree the difficulties and costs of the work, nor to deny that if the navigation and commerce of the Mississippi cannot otherwise be adequately provided for, it can be made and should be made. But if the execution is not to be entered upon regardless of cost and blindly as to ultimate requirements, the location must first be fixed by a wider range of consideration and study, and the plans carefully matured after experimental examination of the site by careful comparison of available methods of overcoming the difficulties the character of the site reveals; and, moreover, all that the canal project carries with it as indispensable accessories must be planned in relation to it and enter into the estimate.

On the 4th of February, 1874, Brigadier-General A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, transmits the reports herein referred to to the honorable Secretary of War, and says in relation to them:

To determine, however, the best line for the location of the canal across the peninsula, and the best point for its entering the river, and also the position and manner of its entering Isle au Breton Pass, requires further survey, borings, and other examinations and measurements and the preparation of plans based upon their results.

Mr. Speaker, these extracts from Executive Document No. 113 warranted the majority of your committee in abandoning the further consideration of the project for constructing a ship-canal to connect the waters of the Mississippi River with the Gulf of Mexico until this House had instructed the honorable Secretary of War to detail a certain number of the Corps of Engineers to make borings and survey for and locate the route of the proposed ship-canal, make detailed plans and estimates of its cost, and make report to Congress thereon, which, judging from the past, will require at least three years to do.

Mr. Speaker, upon a further examination of Executive Document No. 113, it will be found that the improvement of the passes of the mouth of the Mississippi River by the application of jetties had the consideration of Brigadier-General A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers; for under date of October 3, 1873, he writes General J. G. Barnard, president of the board of revisory engineers, that it is "desirable to have the views of the board of engineers on the question as to the expediency of improving the navigable outlet of the Mississippi."

Captain C. W. Howell was intrusted with the duty of preparing a description of the proposed jetties and an estimate of their cost, supposing them to rest upon the natural bottom without settlement, the aggregate cost of which sums up $4,786,317.60. The board of engineers say, in reviewing these figures, that—

If settlement and other probabilities enhancing the cost of this work be considered, it appears entirely within limits to state that the estimate should be doubled.

General J. G. Barnard, in his minority report, discusses the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi by the application of jetties, and says:

Surely there is ground here, especially when we weigh the inestimable benefit of an open river mouth, to pause at least long enough for a mature study and investigation not merely on paper, but by surveys and measurements at the localities, to collect the special data which bear upon the application of the project to them instead of by a hasty pre-judgment founded on inadequate knowledge deciding that there is no remedy to the evils but the gigantic and costly alternative of a ship-canal.

The cost will be a small fraction of that of the canal; that the time will come when there will be the same cry for navigation unimpeded by locks—an open river mouth—which we now hear for a canal. But in whatever aspect the question be regarded the use of the river mouth for the next ten years is simply inevitable. It would be a rash confidence which would contemplate a realized Fort Saint Philip Canal earlier than 1884 and shall the problem, which sooner or later must come, of an open river mouth, be solved?

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding these facts we are urged to set aside the proposition of James B. Eads to open the mouth of the Mississippi River to a depth of twenty-eight feet of water for a sum of money less than half of the engineer's incompleted estimate of the cost of the ship-canal, and to keep it open for ten years afterward for a sum of money no greater than the probable cost of working the canal and keeping it in order after completion for same length of time.

And now, Mr. Speaker, who is James B. Eads, who proposes to give us twenty-eight feet of water by improving the mouth of the Mississippi River? The man who makes the bold proposition embodied in this bill is so well known throughout the United States and Europe that he stands the acknowledged equal of Telford, of Watt, of Stevenson, or of any other engineer of whom the civilized world contains a record. The lives of few men supply a record of results achieved and obligations performed such as are contained in the history of James B. Eads. It is a record of results accomplished despite of predictions of failure; great works carried through successfully in defiance of misrepresentations, ridicule, and abuse, such as that which has been so plentifully showered upon him recently by the press of New Orleans for daring to suggest a means of opening the mouth of the Mississppi River.

The plans of Sir Charles A. Hartley for opening the mouth of the Danube were declared impracticable by an international commission of engineers which met in Paris by order of several of the great European powers interested in the improvement. Despite of that condemnation he was permitted to try them, and the result is that instead of wrecks, and sand-bars, blockading that great river with but nine feet of water at its entrance, it has, thanks to Sir Charles A. Hartley, an open river mouth with twenty feet depth of water, and for this great service to commerce the Queen of England conferred the honor of knighthood on Sir Charles A. Hartley.

Mr. Speaker, here comes one of our own citizens whose private character is above reproach, and whose professional success gives assurance of accomplishing any engineering work he is willing to undertake, and this gentleman says to this House and to the people of the United States, "I will deepen the mouth of the Mississippi River permanently at the sole risk of myself and associates, and will ask no pay for it until you have satisfactory proof of the proposed improvement being accomplished and made permanent."

I have known James B. Eads, Mr. Speaker, intimately for a quarter of a century, and I may safely say that the man is not living who can say he ever failed to perform what he agreed to undertake; and, sir, no man living has a right to doubt his good faith in this present proposition. There is not a man in the State of Missouri, where he is best known, that will not tell you that his past record gives the lie to any such insinuation.

A convention of engineers met, sir, in Saint Louis, in the year 1867, and pronounced against the plans of the bridge which now spans the Mississippi River at Saint Louis. They published a voluminous report to prove it was impracticable, which report was signed by twenty-seven of them.

But, sir, James B. Eads retained in spite of this professional array against his plans the confidence of the capitalists of London, of New York, and of Saint Louis, and evinced such ability in refuting by stubborn facts the arguments against his plans, that the millions required to construct the bridge were supplied him, not by railroads as has been charged, but every dollar that was needed for the work by private individuals.

Mr. Speaker, must we of the Mississippi Valley be deprived of the blessings of cheap transportation, and the inestimable national advantages of an open river mouth as an outlet to the sea for twenty or thirty thousand miles of inland waters, because a learned board of military engineers declare that the method proposed by James B. Eads is not practicable, when he backs up his judgment against theirs by the proposition that the Government shall pay nothing if it does not succeed, and that too when his method of improvement is sanctioned by an array of engineering talent equal to any that ever adorned any board in this country?

Parties interested in the proposed Fort Saint Philip Canal and in the lands in and about its site have been busy in declaring that all the distinguished engineers of this country favor the canal project. But, sir, this is untrue. We have no better engineers than Barnard, Chaurette, Shaler Smith, Henry Flad, Milnor Roberts, James H. Wilson, Bayley and Cortheel, all of whom declare the jetties the only true solution or this problem. What, sir, will the Government have to pay if the Fort Saint Philip Canal does not succeed?

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to ask my colleague a question. Does not General Barnard say that in the estimates for constructing the canal, so far as estimates have been made, the engineers have left entirely out of the account the necessary protection on the ocean side?

Mr. STONE. He does, sir.

Why, sir, they tell us in their report that they do not know what it will cost to build it, whether it succeeds or not; that they have not determined what route it must take to avoid quicksands or where it is to commence or at what point it will end or how the Gulf entrance is to be protected from storms and shifting sands, nor what methods of construction are to be adopted to insure its success.

We have been gravely told in committee by one of the military engineers who once had gubernatorial honors thrust upon him in Louisiana and was sent here to represent the canal scheme, that it is unwise for the Government to trust this great work of improving the mouth of the Mississippi River to the "crude notions of an outsider." The distinguished gentleman who characterizes James B. Eads as an "outsider" modestly tells us that he himself was educated at West Point and outranked Sherman and Thomas, who were in his class; in fact, that he graduated at the head of his class. I can tell the gentleman that the name of the man he has had the questionable taste to speak of as an "outsider" in the profession is known in scientific circles beyond the limits of the United States, where the distinguished ex-governor of Louisiana never was heard of; that in the technical schools and societies of Europe he will find the reports of this "outsider" translated into French, German, and Italian, and that they constitute text-books among gentlemen of his profession.

If the gentleman were now to re-enter the academy at West Point, he would there be taught lessons in hydraulic engineering drawn from the experience of James B. Eads and illustrated by models and explanations supplied by him to that institution at the personal request of its professors.

Mr. Speaker, I assert that there is not in this world a man living who has had such an intimate practical and theoretical knowledge of the Mississippi River as James B. Eads. It is true he was not educated at West Point nor in any one of our scientific schools. The great Mississippi River has been his alma mater. It was chiefly upon her bosom that he studied the standard works of science in the earnest search for the solution of the problems constantly presented by the currents and shifting sands in her channel. It was there that the curious phenomena of the diving-bell, of the steam-engine, of hydrostatics and hydrodynamics—in a word, where every law of physical science connected with the prosecution of an arduous calling, involving a continual contest with its floods, its deposits, and its mighty forces were unriddled, and where the foundation of scientific knowledge was laid, which has since placed him not only in the list of great engineers, but has caused him to be recognized as one of the leading scientists of the day.

On the outbreak of the late war James B. Eads was immediately telegraphed for at the request of Mr. Lincoln's cabinet, and came to Washington to be consulted with reference to the creation of an inland navy for the defense of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. The result of his visit was the construction and equipment of a fleet of armored war vessels of great power and within a period of time which seems almost magical. No page of romance excels in interest the recital by the author of the History of the United States Navy during the Rebellion of how James B. Eads created in ninety days the first eight iron-clad vessels this country ever owned. Long before the fight of the Merrimac and the Monitor the vessels built by him had been victorious under the gallant Commodore Foote at Forts Donelson and Henry and were moving upon the defensive works at Island No. 10.

Mr. Speaker, these facts are not referred to to recall any reminiscenses of a struggle which I shall ever regret, but simply in evidence of the indomitable energy and wonderful resources of the man to whom I hope to see the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River intrusted. In rescuing from the depths of that river where the sunlight never penetrates many millions of property sunk by its hidden dangers, in improving its harbors, and in removing obstructions from its channels, he has acquired an amount of practical knowledge of the Mississippi River unequaled by any other individual living. Sir, there is not, Mr. Eads assures me, a stretch of river fifty miles long between Saint Louis and New Orleans that has not felt the pressure of his feet upon its bottom in his explorations with the diving-bell. When in the same person such intimate practical knowledge of this stream is united to a thorough comprehension of the physical laws which relate to its various phenomena and apparent eccentricities, we may safely hope for the most successful results. And when no compensation is to be given until such results are secured, we have the best possible assurance that the relief which the country is imperatively demanding will be secured in the least possible period of time.

By the proposed bill the United States cannot possibly lose a dime, while Mr. Eads risks his money, his influence, and the enviable reputation as an engineer which he has earned by a life-time of earnest effort and diligent study.

Mr. Speaker, I deem it proper to explain to the House that the original proposition made by Mr. Eads was $5,000,000 for constructing jetties to produce twenty-eight feet of water, and $5,000,000 for maintaining that depth for ten years more, the deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, the first payment to be made sixty days after obtaining twenty feet of water. It was generally conceded by the members of the committee that as soon as the country enjoyed the benefits of the deep channel it was but just to consider the money earned, and that for that reason if payment was deferred, to insure the Government against paying for a temporary benefit, the amount should bear interest. The interest on these payments amounted to $1,300,000.

The Senate committee by consent of Mr. Eads inserted in their bill that payments should be made in five, six, seven, eight, nine, and ten years after obtaining twenty-eight feet of water, and the amounts increased from $400,000 to $600,000 each in lieu of interest, and the bill now provides for an appropriation of $11,000,000 to be paid in a series of ten years from the date when twenty-two feet of water shall have been obtained, instead of $10,000,000 with interest at 5 per cent. running through ten years beginning with the date when twenty feet of water shall have been secured. By the present provisions of the bill no money whatever is to be paid until the country has had absolute enjoyment of an uninterrupted depth of twenty-two feet of water through an open mouth of the river to the Gulf of Mexico for twelve consecutive months. This is alone worth twenty times at least as much as the $2,000,000 then to be paid.

If Mr. Eads should, as some have intimated, then abandon the work—but as none believe he will do who know the man—his demonstration that twenty-two feet of water can be maintained even from year to year will be worth more than can be estimated. But the amount of $9,000,000 in reserve after that payment and the necessary proportion of work that must already have been done to secure it gives the best possible assurance that the work will be completed.

The long period of ten years through which these payments extend insure the most substantial works as a measure of economy, and the profit, if any, which will inure to Mr. Eads and his associates must necessarily come from the payments that are to be made after twenty-eight feet of water shall have been obtained. Their success, after taking all risks and waiting so long for their money, will entitle them to a liberal profit, and I trust sincerely they will have it; but they cannot, in my judgment, possibly secure the profit in this thing by the terms of the bill unless they construct durable works, and these necessarily involve large outlays which will not be returned to them until several years after they are made, and until our fellow-citizens have had twenty or fifty fold advantage from it.

I caution gentlemen who are sincere in their desire to give a free utterance to this noble river from the sea to pause before they are deceived by the provisions of the canal substitute. Is he a friend in reality to this great national work and alive to its interests who cannot see the folly of limiting the cost of making the canal to $8,000,000 when no plans are completed for it, when no reliable estimates are made for it, when the Chief of Engineers, who should have the best data on it, tells you it will cost $13,000,000 for twenty-seven feet depth, and when General Barnard assures you it will take ten years for its completion?

Can you be misled from a plain, simple, common-sense proposition, with terms such as in your private business you would not for a moment hesitate to accept, and be caught with the idea that you will get responsible men to build this canal without plans, just as the Chief of Engineers directs him to construct it for $8,000,000? Would any sane man agree to do such a work for any fixed sum and give security to do it in three years according to plans not yet out of the brains of your military engineers unless he knew that there was to be a loop-hole of escape if it cost more than he thought, or took longer time? Would he put his head in the noose unless he knew the gentlemen who are yet to make the plans were his friends, and would not draw it; and that under the plea of changes in the contract and extra work, alterations in designs, waiting for drawings, and the like, this stringent contract at $8,000,000 and this limited time of three years would be a nullity? Does any sane man believe such terms worth the paper they would be written on? I cannot credit such a thing.

By the proposal of Mr. Eads he has no such hold upon the Government; he must supply his own plans and his own funds, and not until the nation has had full enjoyment of what she wants is he to receive a dollar. In this fact lies our assurance of promptness on his part. There is no alternative in the contract between the Government and Mr. Eads that admits of his saying "You altered the plans, and I am therefore not bound to a true performance. You put on me extra work, and therefore you cannot expect your outlet until it suits my convenience to give it to you."

Unless he goes vigorously to work within eight months this whole concession fails, and then we are no worse off, for you can be perfecting your canal plans in the mean time. If he goes to work, as I know he will, and as none of you can doubt, each dollar that he puts into the work becomes a guarantee of renewed energy on his part to hasten his pay-day. He is completely bound to the extent of every dollar that goes into it, because it is the money of himself and his associates, and no part of it can come back to them until twelve months after you have what to-day you know is the intense want of millions upon millions of your countrymen.

Mr. Speaker, it is said if Mr. Eads fails he knows Congress will pass a bill for his relief. Those who know James B. Eads best know that he will not fail; and I, who know one piece of his history, can tell you that he has no right to expect mercy, or indeed justice, with any assurance of certainty from any legislative body after the outrage which I with indignation saw him suffer in the Legislature of Missouri. He was in the power of a legislative body once, and but recently had restored to him $104,000 which was withheld from him seven years without interest, and is now finally paid in bonds worth less than par; yet there is not a man familiar with the facts but will tell you, sir, that it was simply a case of might against right, where the State held the thing she sold to him and the price he paid for it, and would give him neither the one nor the other. To argue that after his experience with legislative bodies he is resting any hopes on the liberality of Congress is to argue that a burnt child will not dread fire.

But between his case and a canal contractor there will be this marked difference: Mr. Eads would have absolutely nothing to base such a claim on in case of failure, while the contractor for the canal would have abundant proof of alterations in plans, extra work, delays in specifications, drawings, and all the paraphernalia with which the Congress and the Court of Claims is continually beset by contractors.

Mr. Speaker, there is evidently an honest difference of opinion among engineers themselves as to the probable effect of jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River, but the weight of testimony is quite as great in favor of them as against them. General Barnard, General Wilson, Sir Charles A. Hartley, and a host of distinguished engineers, express every confidence in their success. When to these we add the weight of the views of James B. Eads himself, whose judgment I think worth that of the whole of them, I can confidently predict the most triumphant success if his plans be adopted.

[Mr. CASON addressed the House. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the first consideration with every member of this House, whatever section he may claim as his home, is the prosperity of the entire country. He is little of a patriot, no lover of his country, who is content to confine his legislation in the narrow groove of a single city, State, or section, taxing a large majority of the people of the Union for that purpose, and then selfishly withhold the influence of his vote, to scatter broadcast over the country the benefits conferred by the fostering hand of the Government. The worst form of all legislation is that which builds up a few favored classes, makes a purely moneyed power to lord over the producer who earns his living by the sweat of his brow, and finally saps the fundamental idea that ours is a Government of the people, instituted for the good of the greatest number. Capital is powerful and is able to fight its own battles, while the great laboring, producing classes, without concentration, without organization, fall an easy prey to grasping monopolies; therefore it is a wise administration of government only that, while it invites capital, fosters and builds up the great producing, agricultural interests of a country. The soil is the basis of all wealth, it pays the taxes, runs manufactories, whitens the sea with the sails of commerce, builds up great and opulent cities; all trade and industry being depressed or vigorous, prosperous or languishing according to the success of the producer of raw material. How short-sighted, then, the statesmanship which neglects to favor by all lawful and constitutional legislation the interest upon which hangs the thrift, enterprise, and prosperity of all classes!

With this view of the everincreasing importance of the agricultural interests to our greatness, we think that Congress should be thoroughly imbued with the spirit of western and southern development. I am satisfied that a large majority of this body are sincerely impressed with the importance of acting upon this subject, the question being what we are to do, and not whether we are to do anything. What plan will thus open the brilliant prospect we see so plainly before us; for I believe it is a settled question with all parties that the great want of the country is an open and uninterrupted water-way to the sea from the great producing regions of the Western, Southern, and Middle States. I think you have concluded from the exhaustive discussions of this question that the commerce of these States comprises thus much of the wealth of the country and contributes thus largely toward its prosperity.

All the great investment of capital is based and completely interwoven with their development and prosperity, that the trade of all the great cities is indicated, as the rise and fall of the barometer shows the condition of the atmosphere, by the amount of raw material that is sent into them; that the sale of your merchandise and manufactured wares are thus made dull or prosperous, I say you must have concluded long before this that the legislation which will lift these States up from their depressed condition will also pour a harvest of wealth into all the great commercial marts. There is such a union of interests, one depends so much upon the other, that if the arm of the producer is paralyzed, the disease spreads through every artery of trade and commerce, business of every kind languishes, and finally universal bankruptcy spreads out over the entire land.

It seems to me no country is so deeply and vitally interested in western and southern improvement as the East, and especially the capital bound up in the commerce which has made such giants of your cities. It is simply a proposition of self-interest. If you make us rich and prosperous, we bring that abundance to you and swell your commerce. On account of this mutual interest the proposition now before us is a great national one, full of the promise of rich gifts to every section and every being of our country. We have with magnificent liberality annually appropriated immense sums for the improvement of the harbors, some of them altogether local, in the interest of a single city or a small section of country; but here is an interest involving the prosperity of all those States whose borders are washed by the Mississippi and its tributaries, being of more importance to our future well-being than all the harbors of the country.

We want cheap transportation for our surplus products, and such a free competition between the rail and water routes as to insure the producer that he will never again fall into the hands of the unsparing monopolist. We come before you now believing the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River the only sensible solution of that question, and ask you to give one of our western men an opportunity at his own expense to work out the problem of making the mouth of this great river navigable for any ship that sails or steams on the ocean. This is proposed to be done by a carefully elaborated plan for controlling and utilizing the river current by means of jetties or walls on each side of the river. Those artificial banks are to confine the water so as to make the current dredge out the now blockaded channel. That it will produce this effect no one can doubt who has ever noticed that all streams are deeper and the current swifter where they are most confined.

Captain Eads proposes to utilize this current and make it his agent to scour a canal through the bar to the deep ocean beyond. Every man at all acquainted with the river knows it to be a fact, always occurring, that where it is confined between banks one-half mile apart it scours out a channel one hundred feet deep. This occurs in sight of the spot where it is now proposed to erect the jetties, which forces us to the conclusion that if the river is confined to one-half mile from shore to shore that the one hundred feet of depth will as surely follow unless the current is diminished in velocity by coming in contact with the sea. But that will not probably be the case from the fact that an ocean current flows continually a few miles from the Southwest Pass. This current has removed the bar at the mouth of the Amazon, which flows directly into the deep sea. It has also swept away the delta of the Orinoco, Rio Grande, Colorado, Brazos, and every river from the Amazon to the Mississippi. Professor Maury has established the fact of this current. The Texas rivers color the sea for many miles to the eastward. The muddy waters of the Mississippi are found far out to the eastward of its mouth. Tropical trees and plants found only in the far South are to be found stranded all along the shores of this ocean river. This current has so encroached upon the shore near the mouth of Southwest Pass that the light-house had to be abandoned and a new one built in 1870. The high island of Cote Blanche from the same reason is rapidly falling into the deep. The bars have extended less rapidly of late years because the sediment is carried to the eastward and left scattered on the bottom of the sea along the coasts of Mississippi and Alabama. The deep-sea trough approaches within thirty miles of Southwest Pass, going down to a depth of nearly eight thousand feet.

In considering the question of the extension of the bar at the mouth of the Southwest Pass you must not ignore these facts, which must in the face of such data become less and less each year. Then we have a current of the sea into which the jetties will throw the current of the river, both moving on to the eastward, bearing away to distant seas and countries the cotton-wood of the Mississippi, as the trees and plants that flourish on the banks of the Amazon are stranded on our own coast. As we remarked a short time ago, the depth of the river being always shallowed or deepened according to the width, there can be no doubt that the desired depth can be obtained by jetties—and be secured for all time to come if its walls will stand. Thus far it requires no education as an engineer to understand that the Eads plan of jetties is made in accordance with and accommodation to the known laws that invariably govern the currents of the Mississippi River. There are many pilots, who have been weather-beaten by the storms of the Gulf at this pass for from twenty to forty years, who are almost unanimous in the opinion that this is the only plan that will successfully deepen the channel, and I know that river-men who from youth to old age have spent their lives on the bosom of the Mississippi River have unlimited faith that it can be successfully carried out. The acknowledgment of this fact is sufficient to warrant this House in voting for the bill, and leave it to Captain Eads to test the question for us at his own expense whether the jetties will stand. I have no doubt but that they can be made secure and permanent; but I will not discuss this question, as it has been so forcibly presented.

We are asked to abandon the jetty plan and adopt that of a canal from the Mississippi River at or near Fort Saint Philip to the sea. We do not pretend to say that the proposed canal is not a feasible project, and when once completed may answer all the expectations of its most sanguine advocates. It is stated that a short distance only from the Mississippi River in the direction of its proposed mouth you will find firmness and stability of soil sufficient to sustain any considerable weight, and that beyond all the way to the sea is a loose mud partially covered with water into which you can easily push a pole twenty-five feet, and underlying this is a quicksand almost as volatile as water to a great depth. I know in this age of enlightened engineering almost any triumph over obstacles may be looked for provided you furnish money sufficient to overcome them.

